To those who are at all acquainted with the trade in musical instruments, or those conversant with the improvements that during the last twenty years have been made in that most popular of instruments, the Reed Organ, it is entirely superfluous to speak of the reputation or ability of the firm of GEO. WOODS & CO. We will however, mention, for the benefit of any who may be without information on the subject, that the senior partner, Mr. Geo. Woods, has been engaged in the manufacture of Organs for many years, that he is the inventor of many valuable improvements and ingenious devices, and that his coadjutors in the business are all men extensively known to the trade as being possessed of uncommon skill, taste and experience in their different branches.

In offering our Instruments to the notice of all interested in music, we merely ask a comparison between those of our manufacture and those of others, and briefly mention upon what points in our Instruments we base our claims of superiority to the productions of our competitors in business:

QUALITY OF TONE.

Its Purity, Clearness and Brilliancy, Extraordinary Power,

CAPACITY FOR VARIETY, AND BEAUTY OF EFFECT,

Which is owing in a great measure to the excellence of our famous SOLO STOPS,

VOX HUMANA AND VOX CELESTE,

which differ materially in their construction and effects from other Stops of the same or similar name.

Our MANUAL SUB-BASS; smooth as well as effective in quality of tone.
PATENTED INVENTIONS AND INGENIOUS DEVICES.
Our method of employing SOLO SETS in separate WIND CHESTS.
IMPROVED VALVES AND WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.
THOROUGHNESS OF CONSTRUCTION AND ELEGANCE OF DESIGN.

All material used in the construction of our Instruments will be found to be strictly of the best quality. Our workmanship will also be found to be of a very high order.

The Cases are constructed with a proper regard to the laws of sound; having acoustic chambers at the ends of the case.

The Fronts of Keys are Ivory, and are not of Belly wood.

The Carvings are hand-made.

The Stops are of Ebony and Ivory, engraved by hand.

Special attention is called to these Organs. Price Lists and Catalogues, containing full particulars of the many numbers, sizes, varieties and prices—ranging from $110 to $650—will be mailed to any one on application.

☞ All instruments will be thoroughly examined and shipped in good order. Therefore parties can safely order without coming to select. Address

—AWARDED TO—

PHILIP WERLEIN, OF NEW ORLEANS,

—FOR HIS TWO ENTRIES—

Best Piano (Cottage Square) and Best Organ made in United States,

OVER ALL COMPETITION.

The Silver-Tongue NEEDHAM ORGANS AND MELODEONS are the most approved, most elegantly cased, cheapest in the market, and of the most improved construction. Organs at $60, $75, $100 and $125 for six stops; and $150 for seven stops and upward.

Fine new Seven Octave PIANOS, of different first-class makes, at $310 and upward. Second-hand Pianos, of good tone and good make, six octave, at $75 to $100; 6¼-octave, $125; 6¾-octave, $150; 6½-octave, $175; seven-octave, $200 to $225—very good.

☞ Owing to extraordinary facilities, a large and well-established trade, very low rent and small expenses, persons can buy at a less price at this house than elsewhere in the South.

Reference is made to Bishop J. C. Keener, Rev. Linus Parker, D. D., and Rev. Robt. J. Harp, who have bought Pianos from this house.

Scientific.

DEATHS from hydrate of chloral are becoming alarmingly frequent, and people should take warning against the careless use of this popular anodyne. Doses that have been heretofore considered safe, and that are safe for some people, prove fatal to others.

DR. AMBLER, whose opinions are of the highest value, recommends for preserving the teeth that the mouth be rinsed in tepid water three times a day. The decay of particles of food in the mouth produces sulphuric or nitric acid indirectly, and these are injurious to the teeth.

PROF. TYNDALL, on his way home from Orun, whither he went to view the total eclipse, made some interesting and valuable researches into the causes which produce the blueness of the ocean. He found by means of an electric polarizing apparatus that the blue color is due to the obscuree of minute particles of organic matter held in suspension in the water. This will doubtless account for the deep-blue color of mountain lakes, such as are found among the Alps and elsewhere.

ELEVATED GRASSHOPPERS.—Crickets and grasshoppers are found abundantly at the height of twelve and thirteen thousand feet on the Sierras of California. Prof. Brewer says, in the Naturalist, that the latter flourish in immense numbers at the highest altitudes reached. They fly more than our Eastern species, and seem to fill the air. If they chance to alight on snow they soon become chilled and perish. When large snow banks melt in the summer, the number left dead on the rocks is so large that it is no exaggeration to say that tons of them may be seen. On a clear day on the top of Mount Lincoln (fourteen thousand one hundred and twenty-three feet) the air seemed to be filled with flying grasshoppers to a distance upward of several hundred feet, so that even with a field-glass they seemed nothing but floating specks. An occasional butterfly was seen with them. Flies of a voracious kind are co-inhabitants of these lofty regions, making horses frantic with their bites; which is no wonder, considering how rare a feast horse-flesh must be for them.

ODORS AND THEIR ACTION ON THE HEALTH.—The following remarks appear in a late number of La Presse Medicale Belge. A knowledge of perfumes reaches to the most remote antiquity. The Jews made use of them in the time of Moses. They were highly esteemed by the Greeks in the time of the wise but rigorous Solon. Their use was carried to excess by the Romans; and finally, in our times, they appear to have arrived at their utmost perfection and delicacy. It has been reserved also for the present day to use them in the greatest profusion. But if the perfumes that are everywhere found, and can be extracted by certain processes, may be used with safety, this cannot be said in every case of the odors that are naturally exhaled by flowers, leaves or fruits. Their action on the economy in a limited space, and especially during the night in a closed chamber, deserves to be noticed. It manifests itself by serious disorder, headache, syncope, and even by asphyxia if their action is too long prolonged. In nervous persons numbness may occur in all the members, convulsions and loss of voice, but in general only a state of somnolence, accompanied by feebleness and retardation of the action of the heart. This state is often associated with well-marked dimness of vision. Among the flowers that are most deleterious may be mentioned the lily, hyacinth, narcissus, crocus, rose, carnation, honeysuckle, jessamine, violet, elder, etc. In additon to the danger caused by their smell should be mentioned their action on the air. During the night flowers actively produce carbonic acid, which is injurious to health. Majendie even cites a case of death caused by a large bouquet of lilies which the sufferer, a previously healthy woman, had slept with in her bedroom. Among the more dangerous plants may be mentioned the walnut, the buy-tree and hemp. The action of these is well known, the latter indeed producing a kind of drunkenness.

THE University of Oxford has just doctored Dr. Dollinger, and the Spectator reminds the Church of England that the same sort of moral support may be given to its own recalcitrant members by bodies outside and unfriendly.

"WHISKY is your greatest enemy." "But," said Mr. Jones, "don't the Bible say, Mr. Preacher, that we are to love our enemies?" "Oh, yes, Jones, but it don't say we are to swallow them."

A QUAKER LADY recently explained to her new girl that washing-day came every Second Day. The girl left in high dudgeon. She didn't go to be washing every other day.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have no improvement to notice in the general market since last week. Sugar and molasses have been in steady demand at about previous rates, with trifling receipts, and the sales mostly from the stock in the sheds. Flour has continued quiet but with a fair local demand, without any quotable change. Corn has been in less request and prices have ruled more in favor of buyers. Pork has been dull and drooping, the closing rates showing a falling off of 25 to 50c. per barrel. Bacon has also shown increased weakness, with only a limited local demand.

We hear nothing from the country, but presume that planters are busily engaged in cleaning out the grass, and giving the crop an opportunity for improvement during this fine growing spell. The general impression in our cotton circles appears to be that the Agricultural Bureau presents a fair statement of the condition and prospect at the time it was made. To what extent the crop will recuperate under the present propitious weather as yet is only a matter of conjecture.

The river is 10 feet 6 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the fourteenth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	2,278
Lake.....	3
Arkansas.....	468
Mobile.....	458
Texas.....	243
Total.....	3,448

On Saturday, the news being unfavorable, only a few buyers came forward, and the business was confined to 500 bales, at easier prices, hardly showing a quotable decline. On Monday the movement continued limited and the sales embraced barely 450 bales, at figures still more in favor of buyers. On Tuesday the market opened under the depressing influence of a further decline of ¼c. at New York, and, the demand being limited, factors were compelled to make some concessions in order to realize, the sales embracing 600 bales, mostly low or stained cottons, on a basis indicating a decline since Friday of ¼c. in ordinary and good ordinary, but no material change in other grades. The reaction and advance at New York, reported in the evening dispatch, was not received until after the close of business.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 1,550 bales.

The receipts at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 1,424,389 bales, against 1,135,566 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 1,078,041 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 885,795 bales to Great Britain, 302,225 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 213,341 to France.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

SUGAR is in good demand, and there were sales on Saturday and Monday of some eistern bottom, in barrels, at 6 to 6¼c., and 150 hogsheads Louisiana at 10½c. for fair, 11⅜c. for fully fair, and 12 to 12¼c. for choice. Some 25 hogsheads Porto Rico sold on private terms. On Tuesday some 50 hogsheads Louisiana were sold at 9½c. for common, 10½c. for fair, and 12 to 12¼c. for choice, and 52 barrels, very poor and inferior, at 5½c per pound. Refinery yellow clarified is quoted at 12¼ to 12¾c., and white at 13 to 13½c. per pound.

PORK.—The market has continued very dull, with prices more depressed, holders asking $15.75 to $16 per barrel for mess, and few or no sales. On Saturday 200 barrels mess sold at $16 per barrel. It is retailing at $16.25 per barrel.

BACON.—On Tuesday the market was dull and depressed, and sales were confined to 5 casks shoulders at 7⅝c., 10 do. clear rib sides at 9⅜c., and 10 do. clear sides at 9¾c. per pound. Shoulders are now held at 7⅝c., clear rib sides 9⅜c., sugar-cured hams 14 to 15c., and choice do. at 15½ to 17c. per pound.

DRY SALT MEAT is scarce and firm. Shoulders are held at 6¾c. per pound, and are retailing at 7c. per pound.

LARD.—The stock is light, and the demand is moderate. Tierces are quoted at 10⅜ to 10½c., and kegs 11¾ to 12c. per pound. On Monday 75 tierces pressed sold at 10⅜c. per pound. On Tuesday 100 cases kettle-rendered sold at 13¼c. per pound.

BREAKFAST BACON is dull, and is quoted at 10 to 10½c. per pound. On Monday 50 boxes sold at 10½c. per pound.

MONETARY.—Gold, 112⅝ to 112⅞.

American silver half dollars, 108 to 109, and Mexican dollars at 3½ to 4¼ per cent. premium in gold.

The only sales of bonds reported this week are $3,000 Consolidated sixes on Saturday, ex-matured coupons, at 73; and some small amounts of new city to per cents, to dealers, on Monday, at 92.

The sales of Slate warrants include $7,000 on Tuesday at $51.25.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching should not be offensive to the people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simplicity of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verso, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

COMPRISES, ALSO,

De Vere's French Grammar, Readers, etc.,

By M. SCHELE DE VERE, LL.D., Professor of Modern Languages in the University of Va.

Gildersleeve's Latin Series,

By B. L. GILDERSLEEVE, Ph.D., LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

Carter's Elements of General History,

By Rev. J. P. CARTER, A.M., of Baltimore, Maryland.

Holmes' English Grammars,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

LeConte's Scientific Series,

By the Professors LECONTE, late of the University of South Carolina.

Johnston's English Classics,

By R. M. JOHNSTON, A.M., late Professor of Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres in the University of Georgia.

To which list other books in other departments will early be added.

Send for our full ILLUSTRATED DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE, which will be mailed free to any teacher or school officer. Liberal terms given for introduction.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

MEMPHIS, July 19.—A storm occurred last night which surpassed anything here for yeare. Telegraph poles were prostrated, trees uprooted and vast damage done to the crops.

The night express train on the Memphis and Charleston railroad, hence for Chattanooga, when near Grand Junction, ran through a trestle which had been washed away hy the flood. The engineer was killed, and twelve or thirteen passengers wounded.

PORTLAND, ME., Jnly 20.—There was a distinct earthquake shock, lasting four seconds, at one o'clock yesterday morning.

NEW YORK, July 20.—The ship Don Quixotte, on Jnno 10, experienced a heavy earthquake in latitude 20.30 south, longitude 14.41 west.

BOSTON, July 20.—Thero was a severo earthquake this morning. Saco and Biddeford were well shaken. No damage reported. The shock was severe at Brunswick.

HARTFORD, July 20.—The Wesleyan University declares there is nothing in their charter to exclude ladies.

CONCORD, N. H., Jnly 20.—The earthquake this morning rang the church bells.

OMAHA, July 21.—Fort Fetterman advices report Red Cloud preparing for the war path.

NEW YORK, Jnly 21.—The Cotton Exchange is examining locations for a mammoth storehonse for cotton, to lessen the expenso of cartage, sampling and storage.

A storehouse for one hundred thousand bales will probahly bo erected at Brooklyn (New York) dock, where ships can unload and load.

A storm on the coast of Newfoundland and Labrador destroyed 350 fishing smacks, 23 dwellings, 40 stores and $1,500,000 worth of property. Ninety-three lives were lost.

WASHINGTON, July 22.—The United States arsenal and navy yard burned to-day. The loss is estimated at $1,000,000; cause, spontaneous combustion.

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. VA., July 22.—There was a white frost here this morning, and shawls and overcoats were in demand.

GALVESTON, July 22.—The first bale of new cotton was received today by express from Columbus, Texas, consigned to Focke & Wilkins.

NEW YORK, July 24.—The following is the coroner's jury's verdict on the riot victims: "We find that these parties came to their deaths on the twelfth instant, by gunshot wounds, at the hands of some parties to us unknown." The jury having signed the verdict, forty-two cases were discharged.

ST. LOUIS, July 25.—A violent hail storm passed over Pike county, Missouri, and destroyed corn and tobacco.

INDIANAPOLIS, July 25.—The Democratic State Central Committee unanimously resolved that in Thos A. Hendricks they recognize the choice of the Democracy of Indiana for the presidency in 1872, and recommend every honorable effort to secure his nomination and election.

FOREIGN.

CITY OF MEXICO, July 11, via Havana, July 20.—Lerdietas and Porfirista are uniting closely to oppose Juarez, but the triumph of Juarez is considered certain.

The Mexican government is relieving the distressed Americans from Magdelana colony.

The report of negotiations to resume diplomatic relations with France is denied.

A Catholic entered a Protestant church in the capital, intending to kill the minister, but being prevented, stabbed one of the congregation.

The country is generally quiet, but kidnapping continues.

NEW YORK, July 18.—A late Buenos Ayres letter says: No true account of the total number of deaths is to be had, but it is estimated that no less than twenty-seven thousand deaths have occurred from the epidemic. The people who fled to the country are commencing to return, but in all parts of the city and in all the streets can be noticed the severe ravages of the fever in the large number of houses and stores closed and sealed with government stamps.

Private information has been received here (Buenos Ayres) that the smallpox has broken out and is very prevalent in Montevidoo, and is every day increasing and assuming alarming proportions. The smallpox is also prevalent in this city and many of the country towns, but the people seem so preoccupied with the yellow fever that but little heed is paid to the possible advent of another scourge, which takes no account of seasons, and if not opposed by preventive measures may assume dreadful proportions.

PARIS, July 19.—The decrees of the sixth and nineteenth of September, 1870, levying an import duty of three francs and thirty centimes on each bale of cotton, have been abrogated, and it is thought Minister of Finance Ponyer Quertier has concluded to abandon the proposed duties upon raw material.

LONNON, Jnly 19.—The Sheffield express train, going south on the North Midland railway, ran into a freight train near Chesterfield station. Two persons were killed outright and thirty reported injured, some of whom will die.

The Spectator laments over the decadence of the monarchical system in Great Britain. It says: There is in this country but one great political institution left alive, and that is apparently endeavoring to commit suicide by asphyxia. The throne, as a political power, is dead; the Lords are dying, and if the House of Commons loses the respect of the country there will be nothing left.

The Pope recently declared to the College of Cardinals, in an allocution, that "all is lost, and only a miracle can save us." He sees no possible help from man, and recommends his hearers to seek interposition from the Almighty.

It is reported that Napoleon visits the city every day, strolls along the sunny side of Bond street or haunts the bow windows of a club-house. He is very popular with the working classes, who cheer him, and he is getting very fat.

The Emperor and Empress of Brazil are industriously "doing" London.

The future Emperor and Empress of Germany were snubbed by the Queen on their recent visit to England. Her majesty refused to take them in at any of her palaces, and they were obliged to lodge with the German embassador.

LONDON, July 20.—In the House of Commons, this evening, Gladstone announced that the Queen had solved the purchase problem by cancelling the royal warrant legalizing the purchase of commissions in the army. He declared the House of Lords, though impugning the government plan for its abolition, had failed to sustain the purchase system, hence the ministers had advised her majesty to take such action as would effectually dispose of the question in accordance with the manifest desire of the country.

The declaration was received with vehement cheering in the House, but Disraeli and the Tory members generally were unable to dissemble their anger, and bitterly denounced the arbitrary course of the government. Gladstone was defiant, and challenged the opposition to move a vote of want of confidence.

Earl Granville, in the House of Lords, announced the determination of the minority to defend their policy.

It was impossible to depict the scene in either House on the announcement of the fate of the purchase system. The Lords were deeply moved but decorous.

In the House of Commons astonishment, anger and uncertainty were ill concealed. The Tories were confounded and their leaders puzzled to suggest what action should be taken; an event which they were hardly prepared for, notwithstanding the obscure foreshadowing in the Standard of yesterday and today. The opinion of all is that the action of the ministry is bold and even desperate, and popular feeling is led to anticipate the far-reaching consequences in a democratic sense.

PARIS, July 21.—The contest for the municipal election appointed for next week grows daily more severe and exciting.

Le Monde, the ultra Catholic organ, demands the government to support the Pope in the exercise of his temporal rights.

LONDON, July 21.—A conference of all the European powers is reported shortly to be held for the purpose of agreeing upon a system of uniform import duties.

The Times says: The act of the ministry, abolishing the system of the purchase of army commissions by royal warrant, is a violent wrench of the constitution and a wanton setting aside of the will of the House of Lords.

The same paper regrets that this grave issue has been raised, but expresses the hope that the House of Lords will in their future action think of the effect upon the officers of the army rather than indignity to their own privileges.

The Daily News approves the conduct of the government in making themselves the exponents of popular will, and recommends the House of Lords to pass the bill abolishing the purchase of army commissions.

The Telegraph is exultant over the action of the ministry. It says that Gladstone will be more popular for vindicating the dignity of the House of Commons in securing the result of its laborione session, and for reorganizing the differences of the country and guarding the interests of the army.

The Post says the course of the government has been somewhat unconstitutional in bringing Parliament into contempt before the people.

VERSAILLES, July 22.—The Communists convicted by the military commissions at Marseilles have been sentenced to various terms of imprisonment.

Count de Chambord is passing the summer in Belgium, near Ostend.

In the Assembly to-day there was a very exciting debate upon the subject of the bishops' petition in reference to the temporal power of the Pope. President Thiers, who was the chief speaker, said he would not compromise the policy of the country, but would do his best to secure the independence of the Pope.

Gambetta followed, approving the sentiments of Thiers, and supported a motion for the order of the day, which was rejected by the Assembly. The petition was then referred to the minister of foreign affairs.

PARIS, July 23.—In the course of Thiers' address before the National Assembly at Versailles, yesterday, the president, speaking of Italy, said it was impossible to adopt the course which would lead to war. The true policy of France was peace and reorganization. No steps should be taken which will even tend to alienate Italy.

French troops have reoccupied Amiens.

The Court of Cassation has exonerated Divienne, president of the court under the empire, from all criminality in the affair of Marguerite Bellenger.

M. Favre has ordered the prosecution of the Verito newspaper for publishing a letter from M. Tolbie.

General Faidherbe, elected to the Assembly by three constituencies, has chosen to represent the department of Werth.

Le Monde of to-day proposes that Corsica be tendered to the Pope as a residence, by which means it claims that the supremacy of France as the defender of the Catholic faith will be maintained.

PARIS, Jnly 24.—The municipal elections held yesterday resulted in the election of six conservative and forty-nine moderate Republicans.

Prince Napoleon, who was at the Louvre, was ordered to leave France.

The Bonapartist journal, Avenir Liberal, has been seized.

LONDON, July 24.—The ship Auckland, hence for Sidney, was wrecked. The passengers and crew were saved.

LONDON, July 24.—The Pope may leave Rome at any day. Preparations are making for his reception at a chateau at Ponte Corsica. Valey, owner of the chateau, has had an understanding with Cardinal Antonelli, and is to place it at the disposal of the Pope.

There is a movement going on in France to guarantee the Pope's temporal sovereignty over Corsica.

The Pope wishes to publish a syllabus in regard to the occupation of Rome by the Italian government, and declaring that the measures withholding from him all temporal power are void.

Measures have been taken already in Rome to prepare for the choice of the next Pope. It is proposed to choose one who is moderate in his ideas, and not unfriendly to Italy, and by this means effect a compromise with the Italian government. Cardinal Camillo de Pietro is mentioned.

LONDON, July 25.—The Standard publishes the details of a series of terrible earthquake shocks which recently occurred in one of the Philippine Islands. More than two hundred persons were swallowed up, and every one of them almost instantly killed. Sixty bodies of the dead have been recovered. The rest of the inhabitants fled from the island, which is utterly depopulated.

VERSAILLES, July 25.—President Thiers has refused to accept the proffered resignation of Jules Favre as minister of foreign affairs.

HOW NOISELESSLY the snow comes down! You may see it, feel it, but never hear it. Such is true charity.

A Cry of Despair from the Pope.

LONDON, July 19.—On the twenty-eighth ultimo, at Rome, the Pope held a consistory, at which he preconizated the Bishops of Zipo, in Hungary, of Oporto, in Portugal, and of Santiago, in Cape de Verde. He afterward published the nominations made since last month, in brief, of the Patriarch of Lisbon, and of the Bishops of Braganza and Miranda, in Portugal, and of the Bishops of Mezo and Elens, in partibus. He then addressed the Sacred College in a letter, in which he announced his decision in these words:

"We are, my very dear brothers, in the hands of Divine Providence. We have nothing to expect from human aid, for man has abandoned us. Why should we dissemble? It is better that I should tell you that kings and governments, forgetting their promises, leave us to our fate. They have addressed us and sent us their warmest congratulations on the day of our jubilee, but they are far from taking any step in support of their messages. We can hope for no help from any quarter. King Victor Emanuel will be here in a few days and will be attended by the ministers of the Catholic States. We have done all that was in our power, but our efforts have failed. All is lost. You will tell me, perhaps, that we have still hope in France; but France can do nothing. She is going through a frightful crisis, which may be succeeded by others yet more dreadful. I repeat it, all is lost, and only a miracle can save us. Turn, then, to the Almighty, and seek this interposition from him."

THE POPE AND THE CONSTITUTION. The Catholic World very coolly says:

"While the State has rights, she has them only in virtue and by permission of the superior authority, and that authority can only be expressed through the church—that is the organic law, infallibly announced and unchangeably asserted, regardless of temporal consequences."

Protestant theologians need not bestir themselves while secular papers are prompt in reply. One of these very cogently says:

"This is a flat contradiction of the American doctrine that governments have their just powers from the consent of the governed. It is a virtual affirmation that the civil power is subordinate to the church, and directly subject to its authority. The doctrine is alike anti-republican and anti-American, and, carried to its legitimate result, would make the Pope master of the world."

SINGULAR ACCIDENT TO A CHURCH. The Presbyterian church in Iowa City was struck by lightning one night last week. The bolt twice severed the lightning rod, shattered the insulating rings, left the rod at the eavee, and, by the intervention of a nail, attacked the gas pipes, and, in its instantaneous flash groundward, exploded the gas meter, and set the church on fire. The glaring flames illumined the building, and quickly attracted a crowd, who put out the fire. The next morning it was noticed that gas was escaping. To stop the leak, the supply pipe was examined, and the workmen discovered that this was shattered. The examination was continued for several days, and at our last accounts the street trench was opened all along two blocks from the church, and at every step the main street pipe was split by the lightning stroke.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

CLEAN SCRIP.—How do I know he's converted? Why, this way: When I carry round the hat in my Bible class he always puts in clean scrip. Never a ragged and tattered shinplaster—never a bill on a faraway bank from him. He always gives to the Master the best he has, and he always gives a little more than anybody expected of him. And so I regard him as a convert. Can anybody question the reality of that conversion which bears such practical fruit?

And yet, perhaps, we are too censorious. How many worthy disciples there are who will instinctively pick out the torn scrip rather than the bright and clean for the contribution box! How many members, "in full and regular standing," put a doubtful bank-note into the "treasury of the Lord" now and then, in the hope that "the church may collect something on it!" Our convert does nothing of the sort. He gives "clean scrip" every time.—Examiner and Chronicle.

LETTER FROM BASTROP, LA.

BASTROP, July 11, 1871.

MR. EDITOR: I have concluded to write to you again about the temporal prosperity and condition of our people, though it be from a different portion of the State. It is hard to realize the differences that exist in the habits and customs of the people of this State. On leaving the extreme southern portion of Louisiana and going to the northern part we find ourselves, as it were, in a different nationality altogether. In one portion the Sabbath is a day of reveling, and all manner of dissipation; while in the other we find the stores and drinking saloons closed on the Sabbath day, and many of the inhabitants going to church, and their children attending Sunday school. Religion is respected, and the ministers of the gospel have that proper regard shown them that their position demands. Thus it is, as far as I have been able to observe, in this parish.

The early part of this season was very unfavorable to the planting interest of this section of the State. The many heavy and long-continued rains, together with the overflow, drowned out the early corn and cotton, and up to the middle of June the prospect for a crop was gloomy in the extreme. Since then the prospects have brightened, and the planters hope to make at least half a crop of cotton. The corn crop will be a very small one—not half large enough to supply the demand for the next season. This is indeed unfortunate, for it is impossible for this country to prosper unless there be corn enough raised in it to supply the wants and necessities of the people. Wherever there is an abundance of the cereals raised we see a prosperous country, and its people above want, contented and happy.

The weather has been excessively warm the last month. The thermometer has stood as high as ninety-five degree in the shade. Sickness (generally severe) has commenced on the bayous and in the overflowed district, and the people are fearing a sickly season.

Elder Graves, of iron-wheel notoriety, passed through Bastrop, on his way to Texas, a few days ago, and preached us two sermons. They were the old iron-wheel rehashed. Many of the Baptists here believe that Graves embodies the Baptist Church, and that he is second only to St. Paul. He teaches that Christ has but one church, and that church a visible one only; and, O wonder of wonders! the Baptist Church is that only one. * * *.

Letter from Greenville, Mississippi.

GREENVILLE, July 21, 1871.

MR. EDITOR: Greenville has just been swept by another terrific storm; but, thanks to Providence, the hail was reserved. The wind has left a good many tree-tops in the streets, and vegetables, flowers and crops generally are flat on the ground. As to further damage, I believe very little has been reported.

Bro. Knott has closed his third round on this part of the district. Greenville gives the most meager account. Its statistics are: Joined, six; discontinued, four; net increase, two; children baptized, three. This for Greenville. Lake Lee organized with ten, with marginal points for fifteen.

Bro. Boon, from Indian Bayou, reports an increase of seventy-one. Large congregations; good crops; a revival in finances; the gathering of clouds surcharged with great showers of blessing.

Bro. Murff, from Deer Creek, reports a revival, already published in the Western Methodist. His work is the smallest in numbers on the district. His per centum on capital is large.

From Friar's Point and other points in the district the reports are all favorable. I am glad to be able to speak for the success of others, though it makes me feel very much behind myself. Yet we have good and devoted Christians praying and working, and in "due time we will reap if we faint not." The sultry weather of the last two weeks has been calculated to produce physical and mental langnor; but I think the spirit, indeed, is willing, notwithstanding. Toward October, when you feel so delightfully, we would hail the appearance of the man of the central tripod; for one would like to hint a sixth hint on the District Conference, for we know not how one of the five is to be adjusted, viz: The administration of church censure on recusants. But we trust that our dignitaries will not go too hastily to scalping the unfortunate non-attendants, for some of them are still like a near friend of mine was once—they don't know how good a thing District Conferences are. It might be well to suggest to them that an organic law is more like a sugar-stick than a stout bamboo. But no more now. Excuse me for this hasty budget.

PERIODICALS.

ARTHUR'S LADY'S HOME MAGAZINE and the Children's Hour are both among the best publications in the periodical literature of the day. The August numbers are richly embellished with tasteful illustrations, and filled with instructive and entertaining matter.

SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY for August has the following among other articles: What are they doing at Vaesar? Life in the Caucasus; A Visit to the great Yosemite; Living American Artists. The number is richly and profusely illustrated.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE of July 15 is a most valuable number. Among other articles of interest are: The Planet Venus; Ossian; Bishop Brikeley on the Metaphysics of Sensation; Prophecies during the Christian Era.

THE AMERICAN EDUCATIONAL MONTHLY for August is, as usual, good and instructive. An excellent periodical for teachers and all who are much interested about education.

EVERY SATURDAY continues to teem with unequaled illustrations. The issue of July 22 has some graphic pictures of New Orleans.

DR. DOLLINGER HONORED.—In a convocation recently held at Oxford, England, the degree of D. C. L. was conferred by diploma on Dr. John Joseph Ignatius von Döllinger, of the University of Munich. The degree was advocated in an eloquent Latin speech by Prof. Liddon, who expressed a hope that it would be carried unanimously. It was, however, opposed by Mr. Rogers, of Magdalen Hall, and the principal of St. Mary Hall, who thought the present time inopportune. On a division, the degree was carried by sixty-five votes against sixteen. It had been expected that Dr. Dollinger would have come to England to receive in person the distinction; but he is at present engaged in a work on the papal infallibility, which he is anxious to publish with the least possible delay, and he feels it his duty to remain at home during the crisis which his excommunication has caused through Roman Catholic Germany. The agitation caused by that excommunication is by no means allayed, and the bitterness of the opposing parties becomes greater every day.

PERSEVERE. — Perseverance, boys and girls, perseverance in whatever is right, let that be your motto, and you will become great and good. When I was a child our teacher used often to sing with us,

"If at first you don't succeed,
Try, try again."

Sing this to yourself when you feel discouraged about your lessons, because you think you cannot recite them perfectly, and when you are writing in your copy book, and make blots and crooked letters. If thus you "try, try again," at last you will conquer.

And so it is in trying each day to be good. First ask God, for Christ's sake, to help you, and then in his strength persevere to the end.—American Messenger.

THE GOLDEN SIDE.

BY CHARLES MACKEY.

There is many a rest in the road of life,
If we would only stop to take it;
And many a tone from the better land,
If the querulous heart would make it!
To the soul that is full of hope,
And whose beautiful trust ne'er faileth,
The grass is green and the flowers are bright,
Though the winter's storm prevaileth.

Better to hope, though the clouds hang low,
And to keep the eyes still lifted;
For the sweet blue sky will soon peep through,
When the ominous clouds are lifted!
There was never a night without a day,
Or an evening without a morning;
And the darkest hour, as the proverb goes,
Is the hour before the dawning.

There is many a gem in the path of life,
Which we pass in our idle pleasure,
That is richer far than the jeweled crown,
Or the miser's hoard of treasure;
It may be the love of a little child,
Or a mother's prayer to heaven,
Or only a beggar's grateful thanks
For a cup of water given.

Better to weave in the web of life
A bright and golden filling,
And to do God's will with a ready heart,
And hands that are ready and willing,
Than to snap the delicate minute thread
Of our curious lives asunder,
And then blame heaven for the tangled ends,
And sit and grieve and wonder.

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE.

MR. EDITOR: The undersigned, having attended the examination of this institution, the exercises of which commenced June 22, and closed on the twenty-eighth, submit the following report:

Classes were examined in the usual branches of an English education, also in Latin and French. The entire examination was impartial, thorough and eminently satisfactory. Miss J. E. Wylie, Miss Kate J. Pipes and Miss Annie H. Stuart, former graduates of the institution, rendered very efficient service as teachers during the past year. Mansfield College may feel justly proud that her own graduates furnish this trio of faithful and accomplished teachers. Prof. John W. Stuart continues to instruct in the higher mathematics. No higher commendation could have been given of the efficiency of the faculty than was given by the president, who is not given to flattery. In his closing address he assured them that he had never, in all his experience, had a more laborious and conscientious corps of teachers associated with him. The accomplished Mrs. Sarah A. Poythress, instructress in French, and in music on piano, guitar and melodeon, assisted by Miss Regina A. Logan, also a pupil of Mansfield Female College, interspersed the exercises with appropriate instrumental and vocal music. A pleasant entertainment was given by the junior members of the institution, on Monday evening, in poetical recitations.

On Tuesday evening an immense audience was entertained with a delightful concert. On Wednesday a vast and highly appreciative assembly were regaled with excellent original compositions by the members of the graduating class.

There were eight of these, viz: Miss Kate Battle, of Shreveport; Miss Callie Collier, of Natchitoches; Miss Sue Poag, of Mansfield; Miss Mattie Riggs, of De Soto parish; Miss Fannie Rives, of De Soto parish; Miss Sophia Robinson, of Caddo parish; Miss Mary Stallings, of Red River parish; and Miss Fannie Taylor, of Mansfield. The young ladies acquitted themselves most admirably, and we doubt not that, in the judgment of kindred and partial friends, each excelled all others.

The past session has been the most prosperous since the war. The number of matriculates was one hundred and seventeen. Mansfield Female College is more firmly established than ever in the confidence and favor of the community.

President, Rev. C. B. Stuart, who has been connected with leading institutions of learning for more than twenty years, and who has been for the last ten years connected with this one, and who consecrates to the cause of scientific and moral culture the full energy of his nature, is too extensively and well known to require commendation. The institution over which he presides is doubtless entering upon a career of still higher usefulness.

The college grounds are ample and handsomely adorned with shade trees, which affords fine opportunity for exercise and recreation. Since September, 1865, $3,000 have been expended in repairs and improvements, and the entire premises are now in fine condition, suggesting the idea of neatness and thrift. The boarding department is admirably conducted. The table is well supplied, and in general there is a rare concurrence of all the conditions of health and happiness.

In view of our sacred responsibilities to the Conference we represent, and to the community at large, so vitally interested in the cause of education, we commend Mansfield Female College to the patronage and support of an enlightened Christian public.

JAMES M. McKEE,
Chairman Visiting Committee.

BATON ROUGE SCHOOLS.

MR. EDITOR: The closing exercises of the various institutions of learning were brought to a termination last week. Baton Rouge is noted for its good schools. It is estimated that no less than eight hundred and fifty names have been enrolled as students in the various schools in this city. Many of these pupils come from nearly every parish in the State of Louisiana.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE—PROFESSOR MAGRUDER'S.

The exhibition given by the students of this institution, on Friday evening, June 30, fully satisfied public expectation; it was an occasion of unusual interest. The audience was the largest of any we attended during the week, which, being the last, only showed its great and growing popularity. The weather was delightful. It was by far the largest and most successful commencement since the war. The yard and grounds were beautifully decorated and tastefully lighted. Lamps of every shade and device hung pendant from large oak trees, or charmingly disposed among the shrubbery. Seats were arranged in a semi-circle, giving the audience a full view of the platform, while gentle breezes, laden with the perfume of flowers, constantly played around; while Prof. Kingfield's string band discoursed fine music at intervals, which added to the other attractions an exquisite harmony to the scene.

The exercises were opened with prayer by the Rev. R. S. Trippett, and the programme of exercises commenced, which consisted of speeches and recitations, original and selected, and were finely delivered, without exception, and all acquitted themselves so as to win golden opinions from all present.

The grade of scholarship at the Collegiate Institute is as high as that of any school or college in the land, and the youth who, having finished the prescribed course of study at this institute, fails to act well his part in the battle of life cannot justly lay the blame at the door of his alma mater.

The examination, as a whole, evinced scholarship upon the part of the students, and thoroughness of teaching on the part of the professors.

Few men excel Prof. W. H. N. Magruder as an instructor. He is faithful, earnest and wonderfully successful. His discipline is mild yet firm; he knows well when to persuade and when to command, as many of his former pupils throughout the South, who are filling high and honorable stations, bear witness, with a sense of gratitude, to the fact that much of their success is due to the moral, intellectual and social training they received at the Collegiate Institute.

I bespeak for this well-known institute a career of increased usefulness and prosperity.

Parents may find here a home for their sons, where their minds, manners and morals will be carefully looked after.

The next session of the Collegiate Institute opens on Monday, October 2.

READVILLE SEMINARY—MRS. M. W. READ.

The commencement exercises of this well-known institution took place on Thursday, June 29. It was an occasion of unusual interest. Aside from the principal feature of ushering five young ladies upon the stage of a new life, the exercises throughout were of the most attractive character, and the source of enjoyment to a very large audience.

The superior facilities and advantages offered to parents and guardians for the education of their children, so quietly are the different departments of this excellent institution of learning conducted; so long has it been in successful operation in this city; so many graduates constitute its alumni—that no mention we can make, either of its present efficient faculty or the thorough course of mental and moral training, will change the conviction that this seminary for young ladies ranks among the first institutions of learning in the South. And it must have been very gratifying to the estimable principal, Mrs. Mary W. Read, that the commencement exercises were of such a character as not only to sustain what has so frequently been said in the past, but to authorize us in saying much more in the future. The principal has secured a corps of competent teachers for the ensuing scholastic year.

STANARD SEMINARY—MRS. B. W. STANARD.

On Wednesday, June 28, I witnessed the closing exercises of this young and popular institute for young ladies. A programme of great variety and interest was presented, which, in its rendition, gave entire satisfaction to the large audience, while exhibiting to advantage the scholarly attainments of the pupils. From the high reputation which this institute has fairly won during the time of its establishment, and from our own personal knowledge of the principal, Mrs. Belle W. Stanard, and her able assistants, Miss Mary Terrier and Mrs. Merris, we can safely recommend this seminary as a first-class school for those who wish their children educated. This institute is well located—situated on an eminence, with undulating ground on three sides of the square; an extensive view of the suburbs of the city of Baton Rouge. The inclosure is beautified with flowers and well-grown shrubbery, which affords a delicious shade for the pupils during recreation hours.

I take great pleasure in recommending the above institutions to the patronage of our people throughout the church, and to all others who may wish to give their sons and daughters a finished education, in the full belief that they cannot do better by sending them abroad.

BATON ROUGE, July 2, 1871.

Ministerial Educational Association.

Let me call upon all the ministers and laymen of the Mississippi Conference, and especially the members of our association and the subscribers to it, to use their influence at once, at the District Conferences, before their congregations, and among the membership, and the friends of the theological and literary education of our young men whom we called to enter the ministry, to come to our aid. A number of young men, who give evidence of a call to the ministry, feel that their education is not sufficient, and desire to attend some of our high schools or colleges, now in their youth, in order to meet the want adverted to by Rev. D. C. Kelley, in his article on Education in the Nashville Advocate of June 10. He asks: "Can uneducated men hold up in victory the banners of Methodism and Christianity among the educated children of the church?" This desire on their part is commendable. Our society is organized to meet this want.

At the last Conference we planned the subscription of $100 or more, payable in ten years, with interest at ten per cent.—interest payable annually, say $10 per year. Some twenty-five subscribers were obtained. Let me solicit the subscribers to pay up their yearly instalment as soon as they can, say by the first of October, to the treasurer, the Rev. C. G. Andrews, Jackson, Mississippi.

All who feel interested in this enterprise are authorized to take notes, payable to C. G. Andrews, treasurer, in ten years, at ten per cent. interest per annum.

There are several young men that we have promised to assist.

THOMAS REED, President.

MINISTERIAL SUPPLY.—CALL TO THE MINISTRY.

BY REV. JULIUS T. CURTISS.

MR. EDITOR: I, like your correspondent "Alabama Conference," was set to thinking, too, when I read your remarks on "Ministerial Supply." This important subject has been one of painful, serious reflection with me for a considerable length of time. The Macedonian cry is heard coming up from many destitute quarters of our beloved Zion, and the church is greatly suffering for want of more laborers. Our whole territory west of the Mississippi river is greatly in need of good, efficient ministers; and many places east of the river. There are thousands of immortal souls, for whom Jesus died, who are thirsting for the water of life—the preached word—and it cannot be supplied. The field is already white to the harvest, and yet how few, Oh how few, there are coming into the work to supply this great want. But it is not strange at all that this is so, however; and it will continue to be just so until the church can be induced to devise more liberal means for the education and support of her ministry. There are many, many intelligent, strong young men who are undoubtedly and unmistakably called to preach, and they are willing and ready to enter into the work, but they are met with sad discouragements at the very outset. Many of them are uneducated, and wholly unable to educate themselves. Then, again, there are others, although educated, and in every way qualified for the work of the ministry, who see such an unpromising prospect of support, and so many of the faithful, experienced members of the various Conferences driven to secularize, while many others are forced to locate, and thereby abandon this great work in which their whole soul seems to be enlisted, and to which their life and all was duly consecrated, it frightens the young and the timid away from the very threshold. And this will continue to be so until the church determines to do a great deal better.

I have heard it said, however, that if a man is called of God to preach, he will open the way for him, and nothing will deter him from his duty. This I conceive to be very questionable—indeed it is not true in many instances. I have no doubt but that there are thousands of men who were called to preach, but never preached a sermon in their lives, and perhaps many of them will be lost because they did not. There is evidently as much freedom of will in yielding to a call to the ministry as there is in seeking religion or forgiveness after one is convicted for sin. God calls every man to his separate and distinct calling—to the very calling best suited in every way for him. And his success depends altogether upon his following that call; as certainly as effect follows cause. Therefore when a man is called to the work of the ministry, and positively refuses to go to work, as Providence clearly indicates to him, will never succeed at anything else. And this follows in every other calling in which a mistake is made. But there need be no mistake made here at all; for whenever a man feels moved by the Holy Ghost to preach—that he is called to this work—all the indications are as plain as need be. Of course he is a converted man, a pious man, to begin with. He sees a world in ruin, all corrupted and polluted by sin, and he feels a consuming desire to rescue men from this terrible ruin. But he hesitates. He looks around and above him—everywhere he sees written, "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel," and that a dispensation of the gospel is committed unto him; he may then feel, most certainly, that there is no mistake. But if he feels no such pressure upon him as this, he had better beware. It is a fearful thing—this offering strange fire before the Lord. I was led to these serious reflections by reading a communication in the ADVOCATE some time ago, signed "Alabama Conference." He says: "Your remarks on Ministerial Supply put me to thinking about a young friend who, I think, is called to preach. He refuses to do so, because he does not feel: 'Woe is me if I preach not.'" Now, Mr. Editor, my own opinion is, that that young man is right—he is sensible in not doing so. If I were in his place I certainly would not thrust myself out into the ministry, unless I felt fully, clearly satisfied of the call myself. I would not care for the opinion or belief of any over-zealous friend, unless I felt satisfied of the call myself. But let us examine the reasons given by "Alabama Conference" for urging his friend into the ministry against his own convictions:

1. "He is not ambitious of fame or wealth; there is something far better." Suppose this to be true, and very likely it is. He is just along, then, with thousands of others of the very best men, and women too, that are now in the world, who never preached, and were never called to preach. That won't bear the test.

2. "He has never been able to form any life-plan of work yet." That is unfortunate for any young man, and yet he is not alone. There are many others just in that very same sad predicament—they are to be seen every day. How many good men there are who drag through life without any settled plan for anything, and disaster and misfortune follow them all their days!

3. "He has an excellent mind, well improved, well stored," etc. According to "Alabama Conference," this young man is in many respects worthy and well qualified for a minister—rather a remarkable young man, in a great many respects. But suppose he is; there are a great many strong-minded, excellent young men in the church, and remarkable, too, for their adaptation to "circumstances, and character," and yet they are not called to preach. All these "excellent" qualifications or excellencies of character will not do as a substitute for the proper qualification for an embassador for Christ; his divine sanction and authority must be placed upon the embassy.

4. "Though a religious man, and active in the church, he is not happy—something is lacking." If he is out of his line of duty, and is unable to decide what it is, he has his remedy. If any man lack wisdom let him ask of him who has promised to give liberally, and the path of duty shall be made plain. If there is an earnest desire to know his duty, let him say: "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" There need be no trouble here.

5. "His parents and friends all think he should enter the ministry," etc. These are the reasons given and urged as evidence that the young man is called to preach. But in the absence of a higher sanction than these, and a higher and nobler impulse, we should be very slow in thrusting out a man into the ministry. There would always linger doubts in his mind as to the certainty of his call, and perhaps this would be a source of great and constant annoyance and bitterness of soul to him; and perhaps at the end of a few years would be presented the sad spectacle of an apostate preacher. No man should enter the ministry unbidden nor abandon it unbidden. Either one is dangerous. Education, fine address, polished manners, noble parentage, eloquence, sympathy, sound sense and piety, all of these combined, can never substitute the divine, sensible setting apart by the Holy Ghost for the office and work of a minister in the church of God.

The church, composed of a few partial friends, it may be, in a quarterly conference, has no right to give any man a license to preach unless he voluntarily confess and declare that he is moved by the Holy Ghost to this work. It has been the case too often. The church has been too charitable in dispensing her favors of this kind. And the consequence is that she is burdened with a lot of almost useless, profitless preachers, and lost many good exhorters, class-leaders and Sunday school men. We need many preachers for our destitute fields, but we need good exhorters and good class-leaders more than we do poor preachers. What does it amount to—suppose everybody were to occur in the opinion that a man ought to preach? What of all that? Must he be sent out to do so whether he feels it his duty or not? I think a man ought to be the best judge of his own feelings in so great a matter.

Now this young man may be called to preach, or he may not. If he is called to preach, he feels it to be his duty—he knows it, and is sensible that he must preach. And he will either come with harness and go to work, or he will, as a moral agent, exercise his power in resisting the call, and be lost. That is the question for him to consider. It is plain and simple. The young man may be in doubt about it and hesitate; in that event, give him time for his mind to mature, and he will be able to decide the matter right. I do think that no preacher, or any one else, who thrusts a man, against his conviction of sense of duty, to enter the ministry does the man and the church a great injury. Let us be as cautious and guarded as we may be, we are sometimes seriously misled and imposed upon, and leave ourselves open to reproach and ridicule by the world.

INCREASE OF PROTESTANTISM IN UNITED STATES.—Prof. H. B. S[mith] of the Union Theological Seminary, in a report to the Evangelical Alliance at Amsterdam, shows that [since] 1800 the increase of Protestantism in the United States has outrun that of the population at large. He gives the figures: "In 1800 the population was 5,305,935, and the number of church members 350,000; in 1832 the population 13,614,420—church members 1,[948]; in 1860 the population 31,429,801—church members 5,[250]. That is, the ratio in 1800 one communicant to about fifteen of the population; in 1832 it was one to ten; in 1860 one to six. While the population increased six-fold, church membership increased more than fourteen-fold. And this, notwithstanding the fact that during the last period (from 1[8]60) the number of aliens arriving at our ports was over five millions. And Texas, New Mexico and California were added to our territory. The proportional increase since has probably been greater, for immigration has been much. This estimate does not include Roman Catholics, who may number three and a half millions."

PRESIDING ELDERS.—We [have] all such the utmost sincerity in [their] beliefs, and the utmost love for the church as well, but our judgment is that the office of presiding elder was never more important than now. Certainly the responsibilities resting on the incumbents were never greater. As was the work actually required of them ever more complicated or burdensome than at the present time. He who fills this office, and does this work, takes the lead in all the enterprises of the church, and stands in the front of the battle with every form of error and worldliness and sin. Many schemes have been devised for the purpose of doing away this officer does as the representative of the church and the preacher in the Conference, but all in vain. There is no substitute. While the itineracy lasts, the presiding elder will be a necessity.—The Wesleyan Advocate.

FORGIVENESS.—We heard from a Sunday school teacher the other day an illustration of one kind of forgiveness. Improving upon the day's lesson, the teacher asked a boy whether, in view of what he had been studying and repeating, he could forgive those who had wronged him.

"Could you," said the teacher, "forgive a boy, for example, who had insulted or struck you?"

"Ye-e-s, sir," replied the boy slowly, "I—guess—I—could;" but he added in a much more resolute manner: "I could if he were little than I am."

REV. DR. CORRIGAN, the able and beloved president of Wesley College, Melbourne, Australia, died January 7. Just before he passed away, as Mrs. Corrigan and a friend were watching by his bed, he raised his hands and exclaimed, as in rapture: "I see it! I see it! The [gates] are the golden streets and pearly gates, and Jesus waiting to receive me. O what a glorious thing! This exceeds all I ever heard of heaven. Let me go and join the [angels]."

"GEORGE," asked the teacher of a Sunday school class, "who above all others shall you first wish to see when you get to heaven?" With his face brightening up with animation, the little fellow shouted: "Hallelujah!"

THE STATUE AND THE ROSE.

BY CARL SPENCER.

e night I passed the gardens of the King,
The air was sweet with many roses blown,
nd through the dusk I saw the glimmering
Of fair white statues carven out of stone.

e King is great, the King must have the best:
I saw his servants searching land and sea,
ith skill to find, by many a subtle test,
The masking beauty wheresoe'er it be.

came where one in unveiled marble wrought
A mighty work of purpose yet unknown;
nd while I pondered on the sculptor's thought,
I heard the statue sighing in the stone.

ghing for doubt and self-despair, it spake:
"One dwelt by me who all enchantment knows;
th sky and earth grew tender for her sake—
It must be beautiful to be a rose!

They took her to the gardens of the King,
And there will play for her the minstrel airs,
nd she, to music slowly opening,
Will yield her graces one by one to prayers.

Hard are the world's ways with its harder things;
Chisel and hammer fearfully entreat,
f such as she were born to be the King's,
And gentleness for gentleness is meet.

So easy, easy is it to unfold,
And be, by growing, what they long to be;
A strange and secret is the fate I hold,
And painful searchers carve it out for me."

e roses in the garden of the King
Were flickering down beneath the statues' eyes,
Then on their lofty faces, triumphing
In changeless beauty, did the dawn arise.

Looked, and passing, to myself I said,
"With pains, with patience, comes the better part;
ife for a day an hour hath perfected,
But slowly grows the immortal work of art;

Oh, that the prisoned ones could know how fair
Are these transfigured kindred of their own!"—
ey did not know, nor dream, for everywhere
I heard the statue sighing in the stone.

EDUCATIONAL ENDOWMENTS.

It is seldom that we meet with anything as able and satisfactory as the inaugural address of President Durbogast, of the Wesleyan University, Kentucky. The Nashville Christian Advocate gives the address, from which we make the following extract:

One of the most favorable signs of the times are the splendid and munificent donations being made to the cause of education in America. In fourteen months from the inception of a university at Syracuse, New York, the minimum endowment of $500,000 is all subscribed. Drew Theological Seminary starts with $500,000, and almost every mail brings us intelligence of some new and magnificent bequest to its fund. The University of Virginia has garnered from all sources $1,100,000. Harvard College has a working capital of $2,100,000, besides its real estate. In answer to a letter of inquiry of my own, Dr. Woolsey, President of Yale College, writes me:

FUNDS OF YALE COLLEGE.

Real estate, stocks, bonds, etc...	$911,824 30
Academical buildings, etc.....	352,000 00
Theological department funds...	308,155 00
Theological department build'gs.	130,000 00
Medical school funds	216,000 00
Sheffield school building.....	75,000 00
Medical department.....	21,000 00
Total.....	2,011,289 30

From the financial report of Brown University, Providence, Rhode Island, furnished by Dr. Caswell, it appears that the resources of that school are about $560,000, the result of denominational enterprise, concentrated for years upon that favored institution.

From an autograph letter of Dr. Andrew D. White, president of Cornell University, Ithaca, New York, I make the following summary: Total funds of the University, in lands, buildings, money, bonds, libraries, laboratory fixtures, apparatus, etc., $4,047,500. Of this magnificent endowment, $525,000 is the donation of one man, Mr. Cornell. About $300,000 have flowed into its treasury since its opening in 1868, from the benefactions of individuals; 520,000 acres of land, located and ready for sale at $5 an acre, constitutes a part of the endowment of this school. The future may witness the sale of these lands at prices which will give this University $100,000,000. The Northwestern University, at Evanston, Illinois, already alluded to, has $300,000 of productive capital, $700,000 in unsold lands, $200,000 in buildings, $25,000 in libraries, $5,000 in a museum—total, $1,230,000.

Now, gentlemen, in view of such comparisons, what can we accomplish with $50,000, or even $100,000? And again, in view of what has been done, and is now being done all over the nation for the endowment of colleges and universities, who will stand up here to-day, and say that we are not entitled to $500,000 from Kentucky Methodists for the Wesleyan University? and who will dare say that Kentuckians are unable or unwilling to give us this evidence of their noble generosity, and of their enlightened appreciation of the cause we represent? The great error of the Southern Methodist Church has been committed in projecting too many schools of high grade, and leaving many of them in a half finished state. Under a spasmodic effort, and in answer to the urgent petition of some town or city desiring to promote its business interests, the church has more than once erected a huge pile of brick, left the structure incomplete, imperiled by a fragment of debt, and without endowment. Such institutions have invariably had a sickly and ephemeral existence. While in operation they have been rather a discredit than an honor to the church. Along with this damaging subdivision of our educational work, a spirit of clannishness has grown up among the Conferences, and we have too often felt that our Conference schools were rivals of each other. We have left out of sight the interests of the organization in our zeal to promote strictly Conference interests. Zealous for the honor of each division of the grand army of Methodism, we have lost battles for want of unity in action. Had we attempted to do less in detail and more as a body, we should have attained more satisfactory results. There was a day when our church in America had few colleges, and bestowed little care upon the work of education. A revival came. Says Bishop Morris, on his seventy-seventh birthday: "When I joined the communion of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in 1813, she had no literary institutions of her own; now she has, counting seminaries, colleges and universities, 101; with about 1,000 teachers and 20,000 pupils." A glance at the General Conference Journal of our church shows that near 60 seminaries, colleges and universities are fostered by the organization. Add to those what subordinate branches of Methodism have founded in America, and perhaps there are to-day 200 nurseries of Christian education, where in 1813 there was not one. One-half the business of the higher education of the youths of the country is in the hand of Methodists. As we led the Christian organizations in spreading scriptural holiness over these lands, so we felt that we must lead them in educational enterprises. When the educational revival came it was a powerful movement.

THE REV. C. H. KELLOGG is a missionary under the employment of "The Church Guild," of Cincinnati, Ohio, an organization numbering three hundred members, and having two missions in charge. At the organization of these missions, under the control of the Guild, laymen instituted the practice of saying the "Gloria" at the end of each Psalm, in the Psalmster for the day. This was done under the supposition that such practice gave increased animation to the services; and as it was known that the "Rubric" says the "Gloria" may be sung at the end of every Psalm, no objection was anticipated from any quarter. Some two weeks before the meeting of the Diocesan Convention, however, Mr. Kellogg received an order from the Bishop to discontinue the singing of the "Gloria;" a desire to the same effect having been previously expressed. Mr. Kellogg then wrote to the Bishop, stating that he feared the singing of the "Gloria" between the Psalms could not be discontinued without producing a rupture in the Guild, and asked if the Bishop would advise him to surrender the practice under such conditions. The Bishop in his reply notified Mr. Kellogg that because of his disobedience he now removed him from his position as missionary under the ecclesiastical authority of the diocese, and that he was hereby deprived of his seat in the Diocesan Convention, which met within three days thereafter.

QUITE amusing are the descriptions in the catalogue of an English gardener that the John Bright (fuchsia) is "very superior to Disraeli or any other of that class." This is discouraging; but on turning to "Mr. Disraeli," we are gratified to find that he is an "elegant grower, and of most excellent habit." Lord Elcho is a "bold, fine sort, very suitable for exhibition," while Prince Alfred "is a free sort, and must be well stopped when young."

A PENNSYLVANIA Sunday school talker ended a long story thus: "And now, my young friends, the names of these two boys were Thomas and Philander. Thomas, I have told you, was a bad boy, and went down—down—down. Philander was a good boy, and went up—up—up. Little children, Philander stands before you!"

FALSE HAPPINESS renders men stern and proud, and that happiness is never communicated. True happiness renders them kind and sensible, and that happiness is always shared.

WERE it not for the scorching drought we should not appreciate the refreshing shower. With less conflict we should have less victories; with less trial, less joy.

A CHRISTIAN should never plead spirituality for being slovenly. If he be a shoe-cleaner, he should be the best in the parish.

EVERY PERSON complains of the badness of his memory, but none of their defective judgment.

SILVER IN THE SEA.

The poet tells of the gems that shine with "purest ray serene" in dark unfathomed caves of ocean; but it is not in these inaccessible depths alone that the treasure of the sea is hidden. There is untold wealth diffused throughout the immensity of its waters, as secure from human avarice as if it were in the abysses which plummet never sounded. Its very diffusion puts it out of our reach. The fact that it is everywhere makes it practically nowhere. Some years ago certain French chemists demonstrated that sea-water contains an appreciable amount of silver. They decided that, if it is equally distributed, there must be at least two millions of tons of the precious metal in the whole ocean, or more than has ever been dug from the earth. And experiments made at widely-distant points prove that the metal is thus uniformly diffused. The water of the Pacific off the coast of Chili, as analyzed by an English chemist, gives the same results as the Frenchman had obtained from the waters of the British Channel.

The silver in the sea is only one out of a thousand illustrations of solid substances made invisible by chemical processes. And we must not suppose that it is only minute quantities of matter that can be thus lost to sight in transparent liquids. A silver half-dollar (a mythical piece of money to our young readers, but the old folks can tell them how large it is, or was) can be dissolved in a very small amount of nitric acid, which, if pure, is colorless liquid. Coin soon vanishes, and the liquid is as clear and transparent as ever. Many dollars' worth of silver might thus be concealed in a gallon of what would seem to be nothing but water.

Other metals, and, indeed, solid substances of all kinds, may be dissolved and made to disappear in a similar way. There is no visible form of matter which chemical agencies may not render invisible. What we commonly call the destruction of matter is merely this metamorphosis from the seen to the unseen. When wood or anything else is burned, it has simply undergone a chemical change which removes it from our sight. Not a particle of matter can be really destroyed, unless by the Power that called it into existence. The silver in our transparent liquid is not annihilated if we pour it into the sea; it is lost to us. But the silver is there, like the millions of tons of kindred metal that were already mingled with the waters. In like manner, the coal and wood we burn, except the small residuum of ashes, have become viewless gases, and are blended with the aerial ocean of the atmosphere. On the clearest day the air above us is laden with thousands of tons of carbon, in this transparent condition. It is there, though we cannot see it, and plants are continually turning it back into visible form again. This is the key to the mystery of their growth, which is mainly the withdrawing of carbon from its gaseous state of carbonic acid, and making it a part of their own structure.

We have said that the silver in the sea is useless, because it is diffused through so vast a bulk of fluid. But the fact that it has been possible to detect it, when thus diffused, shows that if chemical agencies can make solid substances vanish from our sight, they can, on the other hand, compel a body thus concealed to show itself, even when it forms only the minutest proportion of the mixture. The delicacy of chemical tests is almost beyond belief. A single drop of colorless liquid, added to a gallon of colorless liquid, may instantaneously produce a well-defined red or blue or yellow throughout the entire mass of the latter, and yet it may be less than a hundredth part of a grain of some solid substance in solution, that is made to give such unmistakable evidence of its presence.—Boston Journal of Chemistry.

I VERILY BELIEVE that ten times as many prayers are spoiled by the want of will in them as by excess of it. Out of mere pietistic sentimentality we fall into an easy self-surrender, which we call losing our will; and that, we think, prepares us no prayer. The result is that, having no will, we only dawdle, and call it prayer. How refreshing to hear a man praying pluckily, when it is tit, even as our good Father Finney sometimes could; or as Moses did when he said: "If thou deal thus with me, kill me, I pray thee, out of hand." Are we not taming the vigor of it, and taking off the spirit that belongs to prayer, as if too much character left in it were inadmissible? I verily believe that we are partly mistaken, and that God never puts us in acting with spirit, in a sense so grandly true as he sometimes does in a prayer.—Horace Bushnell, in the Advance.

THE preaching of the word in some places is like the planting of woods, where, though no profit is received for twenty years together, it comes afterward.—Fuller.

IN KAMTSCHATKA.

The Kamtschadals are chiefly engaged in fishing, fur-trapping, and the cultivation of rye, turnips, cabbages and potatoes. The few Russians are scattered among their villages, and trade for furs with them and the nomadic tribes to the northward. The Wandering Koraks, who are the wildest and most independent natives in the peninsula, seldom come south of the fifty-eighth parallel of latitude except for the purposes of trade. Their chosen haunts are the great desolate steppes which lie to the eastward of Penjinsk Gulf, where they wander constantly from place to place in solitary bands, living in large fur tents, and depending for subsistence upon their vast herds of tamed and domesticated reindeer. The whole peninsula is supposed to be governed by a Russian "Ispravnik," or local governor; but the Koraks are not really governed at all, nor do they require ruling. They are the most harmless and meritorious of savages, exceedingly interesting in a very strange way. One feels, in reading of them, as if they were creatures of an Arctic mythology, dim and grim even beyond the Scandinavian; tenants of shades whose fields are ice-fields, and whose ghostly light comes from the flaming swords of the aurora borealis. The settlements of the southern natives, who are dark, swarthy and smaller than the pure Siberians, with all their rudeness, are not wanting in comfort, and the following picture is attractive as well as vivid: "If you can imagine a rough American backwoods settlement of log houses clustered around a gaily-colored Turkish mosque, half a dozen small haystacks mounted on high vertical posts, fifteen or twenty Titanic wooden grid-irons similarly elevated, and hung full of drying fish, a few dog-sledges and canoes lying carelessly around, and a hundred or more gray wolves tied here and there, between the houses, to long heavy poles, you will have a general but tolerably accurate idea of a Kamtschadal settlement. They differ somewhat in respect to their size and their churches; but the gray log houses, conical 'bologans,' drying fish, wolfish dogs, canoes, sledges and fishy odors, are all invariable features." Like the Esquimaux, though without the same terrible conditions of existence to explain their decay, the Kamtschadals are dying out. Since 1780 their numbers have diminished one-half. They have already lost most of their distinctive customs and superstitions; and only the occasional sacrifice of a dog, to some malignant spirit of storm or disease, enables the modern traveler to catch a glimpse of their original paganism. They depend chiefly on the salmon, which literally choke the rivers, for their subsistence; but the whole peninsula abounds in animal life. Reindeer, and black and brown bears, roam about everywhere; a species of ibex inhabits the mountains; and millions of ducks, geese and swans swarm about every river and little marshy lake throughout the country. Mr. Kennan's account of the reception given to the major, Dodd and himself, at a settlement whose name he never attempted to master, but which he calls Jerusalem, is one to capsize all one's previous notions of Kamtschatka.

UNIVERSITY TEACHING OF RELIGION. The passage of the act repealing the religious tests in the English universities was not effected without some instructive exposures. After all the cant about the danger that religious education would be sacrificed, it seems that there was none to sacrifice. Says the Nonconformist:

"There is now no religious teaching at either of the universities worth the name. There are at times courses of lectures on divinity topics, which nobody is obliged to attend, and which in practice very few students do attend. There is no examination in them. Unless a student be preparing for 'holy orders' he will pass through the University without a single lesson in religion; and in case he be so preparing, he will have to 'find his own' religious instruction, and will get just as much as will enable him to pass the Bishop's examining chaplain, and no more. That these tests have failed as safeguards of orthodoxy must be patent to Lord Salisbury himself; for orthodoxy must be one of the most elastic of things if Dr. Pusey and Mr. Jowett can both be comprehended in its pale."

SHOULD the French indemnity to Germany be paid all at one time in gold, a train of freight cars one and three-fourths English miles long would be required to carry it home, and a train of twenty-six English miles if paid in silver. If distributed in gold, each one of the German soldiers in France would receive five pounds, and sixty-one pounds if distributed in silver. If paid in five-hundred-franc notes, two freight cars, carrying ten thousand pounds each, would be required to carry the indemnity to Germany.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

A CHINESE Young Men's Christian Association has been organized in San Francisco. It starts with a membership of forty Celestials.

THE English Church missionary work along the Niger commenced in 1865. Now the missions have 92 communicants, 516 in congregations, and 133 children in attendance at day school.

THE Baptists are about to establish a Karen college at Rangoon. Instruction will be given in the vernacular, provision being made for English studies in special cases. The college will be distinct from the Theological Seminary.

ENLIGHTENING THE REGION BEYOND. The mission press at the Sandwich Islands is issuing Christian literature for the newly evangelized Micronesian Islands, 2,500 miles beyond them. There have recently been printed at Honolulu 1,100 copies of the Epistle to the Romans for the Gilbert Islands, and 1,000 of the gospels of Mark and Luke for the Ascension Island.

THE Baptist mission to the Teloogoos, in Southern India, was for many years so unfruitful that it was often seriously proposed to abandon it. It has now become one of the most prosperous mission fields. During the last year more than six hundred native converts were baptized, and more than three hundred villages were visited by one of the preaching missionaries and his assistants.

A CURIOSITY.—Among the literary curiosities in a library at Southampton, England, is an old Bible, known as the "Bug Bible," printed by John Daye, 1551, with prologue by Tyndale. It derives its name from the peculiar rendering of the fifth verse in Psalm lxii, which reads thus: "So that thou shalt not be afraid for any bugs by night." This rendering is very scarce, and rarely finds its way into the book market.

THE BAPTISTS IN SWEDEN.—In the Theological Seminary at Stockholm there are 14 students preparing for the ministry, all promising preachers. Mr. Broady instructs two Bible classes in the city every week, which are well attended. In the Swedish mission there are 216 churches, 112 pastors, and 36 places of worship. New churches formed last year, 11. Baptized in 1870, 831. Net increase, 717. Pupils in the Sabbath schools, 4,537; teachers, 308.

ATHENS, GREECE.—The Spirit of Missions, published by the Board of Missions of the Protestant Episcopal Church, contains a most interesting letter from the Rev. Dr. Hill, who for more than forty years has been preaching the gospel in Athens. A wonderful evangelical movement has commenced there, which promises great good. The Spirit is poured out on the people, and the work is becoming general. Will not St. Paul rejoice greatly at what the Lord is doing there?—Zion's Herald

BIBLE SOCIETY'S WORK FOR 1870. The American Bible Society printed last year 1,031,800 volumes in addition to 164,997 copies published and circulated abroad. Its receipts from sales were over $400,000; from churches and individuals, $250,000; total cash income, $729,464.70. The benevolent work of the society included direct grants of books for circulation at home and abroad worth $48,701, in addition to requisitions amounting to $12,275 made by members and directors. The total expenditures last year for voluntary grants of books were $234,352.28, of which more than $60,000 was appropriated for foreign work.

SOUTHEASTERN AFRICA.—The Zulu mission, Southern Africa, is enjoying a good degree of prosperity. Mr. Abraham writes from Mapumulo: "The prejudices of the people are gradually giving way, and they are becoming more and more willing to have their children instructed. We now have, in our day school, four grandchildren of a man who once told me he would not send his children to school, lest they should become Christians. He has one son who takes part in our prayer meetings. Our chapel is usually well filled on the Sabbath, and the people are very attentive to the preached word. But the great thing that we long for, the conversion of souls, we do not see."

THE census of Utah shows where the Mormons come from. From it we learn that not far from half the population were born there—a large proportion for so young a territory. Of the 15,233 not born in Utah, about a third were born in other parts of the United States and two-thirds in foreign countries. Of the 39,702 born in foreign countries seven-eighths were born in Great Britain, Denmark or Sweden—namely, 20,270 in Great Britain (of whom 16,073 are returned as born in England, 1,783 in Wales, and 2,304 in Scotland,) 4,857 in Denmark, and 1,790 in Sweden. Only 502 of the Utah people were born in Ireland, only 63 in France, 613 in Norway, 358 in Germany, 122 in Holland, 2 in Belgium, 509 in Switzerland; 687 were born in British North America.

SPAIN.—The gospel is achieving glorious triumphs in Spain. The entire country is ripe, ready for the harvest. Says a correspondent in the London Christian Work: "We question whether there be a mission field like this in the wide earth at this moment. Having traveled through the length and breadth of Spain within these last two years, and with the experience of twenty-three years of mission work in North Africa, Turkey and other lands, I reply, there is none." The celebrated Dr. Wylie has written an interesting work, "Daybreak in Spain," in which he says: "Surely some influence of an extraordinary kind is moving upon Spain at this hour." Protestant Christianity must triumph there.

A STRANGE EVENT has occurred in the Church of England. The holder of the presentation to the parish church of St. Leonards has left the choice of a vicar to the people. The contest was animated, and the Rev. Charles Lee, an evangelical clergyman, was elected by a vote of 2,195 to 756. The election evoked all the customary disorders of a political contest. Voters got drunk, others were dragged from their carriages and beaten, and the day ended with a riotous demonstration, which was quelled by the police. The State Church people will naturally think this an illustration of the working of the voluntary principle. Must it also be taken as an illustration of the social condition of an average English parish?—Methodist.

H. C. RILEY, of the American and Foreign Christian Union, names seven evangelical congregations in the City of Mexico, and forty-four in other towns, besides speaking of several others not on his list, and of new ones in process of organization. He adds: "We have now in the City of Mexico two church buildings and a chapel secured by purchase, and another chapel leased to us. Two other church buildings have fallen into the hands of the Protestants in neighboring towns, besides the one given to us in Puebla. I have leased a building to serve for a seminary, and have several earnest Christian lads studying for the ministry. A former doctor in theology in the Roman Church, a man of superior education, will aid me in educating them. The governor of the city and district of Mexico has selected one of our gospel preachers, Islas, for his secretary.

THE generous challenge of Sir Francis Lycett that he will give $250,000 toward the erection of fifty Methodist chapels in London during the next nine years, on the condition that an equal sum be given by friends outside of the city, has been accepted by the denomination with commendable spirit, and $125,000 has already been subscribed. The work of building the chapels is now going on. They are to hold at least one thousand persons each, and it is found that buildings of this size, with the necessary school and class accommodation, cannot be built for less than $30,000 each. The fifty chapels will, therefore, cost $1,500,000. Of this amount Sir Francis Lycett gives $250,000, the provinces an equal sum, and $1,000,000 must be raised by the Methodists of London. It is a grand undertaking; but the denomination has taken hold of it with vigor, and the prospects of accomplishing it are good.

THE Annual National Conference of the religious society properly known as German Baptists, but commonly termed "Dunkers," from a slight corruption of a German word signifying dipping, has been in progress at Myerstown, Pennsylvania. The founder of the sect was Alexander Mack, who in 1708, in company with seven others in Germany, adopted some peculiar vows and ordinances, and rapidly gained followers. Persecutions drove them out, and about 1729 the entire church came to this country, settling chiefly in Pennsylvania. The present number of churches cannot be less than 590, with 1,500 to 2,000 preachers and elders, and 100,000 members. They are most numerous in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa and Virginia. The church government is strictly republican, and all questions are decided in their councils. The form of worship is not different from that of most evangelical denominations. The men do not wear their hats during worship; but the sisters are required to have their heads covered. The Dunkers are non-resistants, refusing to bear arms under any circumstances, though they were the staunchest Union people during the war. They vote, but do not mingle in politics, and will not allow a member to go to law against another on any pretext whatever. They have no peculiarities of speech, except that they do not use titles and avoid by-words. They have always been Abolitionists; they are staunch teetotalers, and they hate secret societies.

LET your promises be sincere and within the compass of your ability.

Rev. C. G. Bynum, of the North Carolina Conference, died on the eleventh of July.

The Richmond Christian Advocate has come out in new type, and has a most refreshing and well-to-do look. We congratulate Dr. Bennett on his success in giving the church a religious paper which has no superior in Southern Methodism.

Rev. J. W. Knott, presiding elder of the Greenville district, North Mississippi Conference, has been spending a few days in our city. He preached twice on Sunday, and took collections for the Soldier's Home, located near Memphis, Tennessee.

The Woman's Friend Washing Machine.—We invite the attention of our readers to the advertisement of this machine, which will be found in another column. The ease with which it is manipulated cannot fail to recommend it to the favor of the housewife.

Mansfield Female College.—On our second page will be found a report from the visiting committee of this institution, and the advertisement will be seen in the appropriate column. President Stuart gave us a call last week, on his way to Virginia, and informed us that the past year has been more than usually prosperous. Our readers are aware that the college is the property of the Louisiana Conference, and we can assure them that it is under the most careful and satisfactory management. The religious influences, while not sectarian, are seen and felt everywhere. The course of instruction is solid and thorough, and the accommodations for boarders are not excelled by any college in the land. The location at Mansfield is in a salubrious upland country. We most heartily commend the college to parents and guardians seeking a good school for their daughters and wards.

Corona.—Our readers must not fail to turn to the advertisement of this institution, which appears in the Advocate this week. Corona Female College, Lebanon, Tennessee, has attained a wide and enviable celebrity as the very best of schools. It enjoyed great and merited prosperity under the management of Dr. Kelly, and President Stark has not allowed it to decline in his hands. We can indorse the following statement from a competent judge.

Dr. Stark, formerly editor of the Home Monthly, is well and favorably known as a critical and learned scholar, and an experienced and successful educator. He possesses rare administrative and instructive capacity, and, better still, refuses to graduate his pupils because of the lapse of many years in school, but demands solid literary attainments as the only passport to the honors of the institution.

READERS OUT OF THE WAY.

Within the bounds of every pastoral work there are some who, from bodily affliction, domestic cares or distance from church, rarely hear a sermon. There are also some sections where the voice of the living ministry is scarcely heard at all—regions not supplied with preachers because both the men and the means are wanting. We know that the Advocate goes to many where this famine "of hearing the words of the Lord" prevails, and in making up the paper we always aim to put in something for them. The original and selected matter is often determined by the conviction that there are hundreds who get the gospel in no other form, and who are greatly dependent upon our columns for comfort and edification. For them we have a special solicitude, and our constant desire is to help them to save their souls, and to stimulate them to holy living and active usefulness.

There are many who are cut off from church privileges, and who are shut up to such means of grace as can be made available at home. The Bible, good books and secret prayer are left to them, and these, if diligently used, may keep them in a healthful spiritual state. In the providence of God they are deprived of religious fellowship and of pastoral oversight, or by affliction they are not permitted to join in the public worship. There is more need of religious books and periodicals, the greater necessity for Bible reading and prayer. To them comes, with peculiar force and application, the apostolic exhortation: "Wherefore, my beloved, as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling; for it is God which worketh in you, both to will and to do of his good pleasure." Without many of those precious means enjoyed by others more favorably situated, they are now to work out their own salvation, and to be encouraged so to do by the cheering assurance that it is God which worketh in them. Religious self-reliance, as opposed to dependence upon the ministry and Christian fellowship, and as altogether dependent upon the divine working in their own souls, is to be developed and cultivated. Their circumstances are unfavorable to piety, but it can be maintained; the heart faints for sympathy and Christian communion, but the Holy Spirit can supply the place.

Secret prayer is the main oar in such a secluded life. It is essential always, even in the most favored conditions; but in this it is the life of the soul. It must be more resorted to in proportion as other aids to holiness are wanting. Reading is next to prayer. The Bible is the Book, and no day should pass without some study and meditation over its sacred pages. Beyond this there should be at hand at least one good commentary, and a supply of devout works, as sermons, biographies and histories. Good religious books are both nutritious and stimulating, and give breadth and stability to the character. In the absence of other companionship they enliven and cheer the soul, and brighten the sombre path of the solitary pilgrim. A danger to those who are destitute of ordinary gospel privileges is that they will neglect the advantages which they have. There is no weekly sermon, no searching class meeting, no refreshing prayer meeting, nothing to arouse or to stir up the pure mind by way of remembrance. Hence the danger that those who have no other means of grace will gradually cease to read and pray. Dullness and an indisposition to private devotion are apt to overtake the Christian who is left without incitements and encouragements of the pastor and preacher. The tendency is strong to omit these conditions of life, and to fall into a state of deadness and spiritual decay. A lively and comfortable piety, without church or preacher, is certainly possible, but it is too seldom found. There are multitudes of backsliders in out-of-the-way places who have yielded to the force of circumstances, and are perhaps charging their delinquencies to their privation of the gospel. Will this excuse stand, as long as the Bible is in their hands and the throne of grace is open to them?

The spiritual destitution of a neighborhood or community should be regarded as a providential call to personal effort. The Christian so situated can do something by gathering a few children into a Sunday school, by holding a neighborhood prayer meeting, or by venturing upon an exhortation to such as may be willing to hear. Labor is the law of life, and to sit still and do nothing will entail leanness upon the soul. We have in our mind several localities where there are from one to a dozen members of the church, and where, without a regular ministry or organized church, they might keep up some kind of religious services. Such a spontaneous breaking forth of zeal ought not to be exceptional. Every converted man or woman is called to work and to seek the salvation of sinners. Why despise the day of small things? Why not move in some humble way to keep their own souls alive, and to save others from death? This spontaneity and freedom of lay-effort is the very genius of Christianity. It is needless to wait till the preacher comes, or until other church instrumentalities reach them. They may themselves plant, water and reap, and they may make a church where none before existed.

To our readers out of the way—out of the way of gospel privileges—we address these practical words. Yours are circumstances of peculiar trial and danger. It is a heavy affliction to be without the ordinances of religion, to be separated from the fellowship of the church, and to rarely hear the voice of the living ministry. And there is danger of losing your religion. You must keep yourselves in the love of God by stirring up the gift that is in you, by reading, by prayer and by efforts to do good. Where all is indifference and stagnation you are in peril of falling into the same spirit, and of being absorbed by the unbelief and worldliness around you. Your light must shine, or it will go out; your faith and love and all gifts must be brought into hearty exercise, or they will die. It may be for this purpose that your lot has been cast where it is, that God may have witnesses even there, and that the most godless places may not be altogether without the salt of the earth.

Centenary College Collections.

Ocean Springs, July 18, 1871.

Mr. Editor: I annex a full report of the amount received by me during the past eighteen months from the friends of Centenary College, contributed for the purposes of repairing its building, and sustaining its faculty in part. As yet only a little over one-half the sum needed has been obtained, and I make this report that the friends of education in the Southwest may see what remains to be done in order to realize the $25,000 which we needed to fully restore it to good working condition. I have separated the amounts contributed, so as to show how much each section of country has given toward this good end. Notes and drafts have been given by all excepting those whose names are marked with an asterisk.

The work upon the center building has progressed to the point of reconstruction—all the rotten wood of the projections has been moved. Meanwhile we have been turning notes and drafts into cash as rapidly as possible, and hope that all will be promptly paid, as the time for help has fully come. Our agent, the Rev. B. F. White, is in the field, and I hope that every Methodist, who is praying for the prosperity of Zion, will strengthen his hands by giving liberally toward this enterprise. This college, at Jackson, has been educating young men for forty-five years, and has become a center of influence in Mississippi and Louisiana. We need it for the training of those young men of our church and of the Southwest whose parents are able and anxious to give them a liberal education; while those who are preparing for the ministry are here afforded classical instruction without cost of tuition. We have an excellent body of well-disciplined students now in attendance, and I can most heartily commend this college to our people as one of the best of our schools. I am sending one of my sons to it for collegiate training.

Insufferable Asumption and Insolence.

Mr. Editor: It is known that by one means and another the Episcopal Church has managed to fill the chaplaincy at the military school at West Point, and so insufferably insolent have the parties there become that if a young man of any other denomination wishes to attend the church of his father, or of his own choice, he is required to make a written application for permission to do so, and state that he cannot conscientiously attend the services of the Episcopal Church. It is not enough that his father wishes him to attend his church—his conscience must be called into requisition! Will the American people allow this church of comparatively a corporal's guard to attempt to control the consciences of their sons, and assume such airs in a government institution? We shall see.

Watchman.

Let not sinful pleasures prevent godly sorrows.

LETTER FROM REV. W. V. TUDOR.

London, July 3, 1871.

My Dear Stewards: I am Daniel in the den of lions. You see, my name might have been Daniel, and this city, London, is the den of lions. Everywhere you may see the British lion—in wood, in stone, in brass, in bronze, in iron, in print; on the corners, round the corners; on door plates, and over shop doors; on the public buildings, of course, in looming profusion; and in the public squares and parks. In Trafalgar square, on the pedestal which sustains the shaft erected to the hero of Trafalgar, Lord Admiral Nelson, four lions in metal lie at the corners, each of about the size of a first-class locomotive on the Jackson railroad. On the top of a building just opposite may be seen a little lion, brandishing a little wrinkled tail high in air; it is said that his tail flew up at the coming of the big lions below him, and had not since got down. I tell the tail as it was told to me. But then I ought not to be telling such foolish tales, do you say? I ought to write you about Westminster Abbey, and the Tower of London, and the Crystal Palace, and the British Museum, and the mysteries of this great city, whose pulsations of life are as of the heart of the world. Well, now, my dear stewards, if you had been here you would likely have stopped in Trafalgar square, and looked at the big lions, and up at the little lion, and laughed to hear the story, wouldn't you? So be quiet. And again, as the preachers say, we are called the "spread-eagle" nation—your nation and mine—but the eagle vaunts its symbolic presence far less familiarly among us than the lion does among these people; and little things more than great things may reveal the real, interior life of the national nature, which is by far, of all objects, the most interesting study as respects a community or kingdom of people. Furthermore, I have concluded, in my reflections upon things as I see them, that the British lion may well stalk and strut and roar, to the confusion of the American eagle, when the prosperity of the two nations is compared. I left New York dull, complaining of the scarcity of money, of inactive markets and sluggish trade. I find London flush; too busy for human brains, and money running down the streets like water, in comparison with the poverty of New York. What is the incubus upon our national prosperity, and what the cause of our national adversity, we all know. The contrast with things here is only too painfully plain to observation. There is money here. A cable telegram in this morning's Times states that the steamers that left New York on Saturday last for Europe are freighted with $4,700,000 in specie. I leave the subject with you, as the preachers say again. Bacon says: "Prosperity is the blessing of the Old Testament; adversity of the New." We can only hope, then, that the blessing is at last in our national affairs as they now stand.

I have been two Sundays in London. On the first I walked three miles to Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle, expecting to hear him preach. "Will Mr. Spurgeon preach to-day?" "No, sir; he is ill." "Ah, sorry," and so I was, but whether more for Mr. Spurgeon or for myself I could not decide with exact discrimination, for I was disappointed unto heart-sinking almost. Everybody I had ever met with that had been to Europe had heard Spurgeon, and here poor I could not hear him. I was on the point of turning away from the door to seek some other popular preacher's church—sensation-hunting, mind you. I paused and said: This is wrong, in the first place, and it is wrong, in the second place, because I ought to go in to worship, at this the hour of worship; and it is wrong, in the third place, because there may be a providence in this disappointment, and I will go in to see what it is. I found it. A stranger preached—Rev. Dr. Aldin. Mr. Spurgeon, the pastor, being absent, and a stranger filling the pulpit, there was a thin audience, of course—only twenty-five hundred people present (I write the number in letters, lest you might think I had accidentally slipped in an 0 too many if I had written 2,500.). I saw the providence—a well-behaved, Christian people attending their own church to a man and to a woman, as well when the pastor is absent as present; and again I leave the subject with you, my dear stewards, and with my dear Carondelet street congregation.

On yesterday, the second Sunday, I heard Mr. Spurgeon. The sermon you will see, if the mails will it, for I took a short-hand writer with me to the church, so as to obtain the discourse verbatim for the columns of our Advocate. Concerning the sermon I shall say nothing except that, while every word it was spiritual food, I lamented the absence of that originality and intellectual vigor and flow of inspiration, and even that unction which have recognized to be present in his published discourses. He was hardly able to stand, however, from a recent attack of gout, I believe, came limping into the pulpit, and no doubt was physically disqualified for full pulpit service. But the Tabernacle and its congregation are a wonder. There were at least three thousand people present, every seat taken, and almost all the available space occupied with hearers, on the lower floor and in the two galleries extending around the entire circumference. I had heard of the grand congregational singing at the church. The chorister stands beside the preacher, and, unaided by instrument or tuning-fork, so far as I could see, leads the singing. Positively his voice seemed to me to be divinely set or tuned for his special office, so that he could, more, apparently, set the tune too high or too low than the chords of a well-tuned piano can fail to respond aright to the key that touches them. All very well; but as to the singing, it ought to have been a thousand-fold more vociferous and grand. Everybody had a hymn book, and everybody seemed to be singing; but human nature is the same all the world over, and there is the same vice here that I have often observed in my congregation, namely, that of people singing only in whispers. It is done unconsciously, perhaps, but they do not sing out. Imagine three thousand people singing, not with mute, moving lips, but with their voices, each voice adding, as it may, appreciably to the volume of sound—would not the mighty, glorious uproar make even the unmusical rafters vibrate with melody? Thus, thus, I fancy sing the harpers that stand on the sea of glass, having the harps of God, and that sing the song of Moses, the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb. Will my dear congregation continue to pray for my safe return to them, and that when I come I may come to them in the fullness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ, and then will they favor me with such a glorious burst of voiceful song?

I have heard two other of London's popular preachers, the Rev. Newman Hall and the Rev. Dr. Parker, the latter a man of great genius, and of remarkable power in the pulpit. I listened to him with intense interest, and must contrive, if possible, yet to get one of his sermons for you. I admired him except in one respect, and that is in the appearance of pomposity and bombast. I say appearance, for I believe religiously it is only appearance, and I resent as a foul slander the charge of purposed or cultivated pomposity alleged of a useful, faithful preacher of the gospel.

They tell a story of him: He married, and went off on a wedding trip. On the first Sunday after his return he announced for his text "Behold, the bridegroom cometh." I leave the subject with you.

W. V. Tudor.

DR. HAMILTON'S ADDRESS.

Mr. Editor: Allow me to say to my friends, through your columns, that my address for the next few months will be Tuskaloosa, Alabama.

J. Hamilton.

Mobile, July 21, 1871.

All solid peace of conscience can only arise from a sense of God's favor and reconciliation through the Redeemer.

INTELLIGENT LIBERALITY.

Mr. Editor: A lady in one of the interior counties of this State, in which there are eight members of the Episcopal Church, said that in her opinion it would have been better for the world if John Wesley had never been born. It hardly need be stated that this lady belonged to "the church." Such is the style of Christian character that it produces! Alabama.

East Alabama College.—The institution bearing the above name, located in the charming town of Auburn, occupying a commanding site in a healthy location, is well deserving the patronage of our friends in Alabama and elsewhere. We congratulate the faculty on the accession of Prof. B. B. Ross, A. M., to their number. It now stands as follows, viz: John T. Dunklin, A M., professor of languages; Rev. B. B. Ross, A. M., professor of moral and mental philosophy; Rev. A. D. McVoy, A. M., professor of history and English literature; Alexander Hogg, A. M., professor of mathematics; William C. Stubbs, A. M., professor of natural science and modern languages. Profs. Hogg and Stubbs are graduates of the University of Virginia, Prof. McVoy of the Wesleyan University, Middletown, Connecticut, Profs. Dunklin and Ross of La Grange College. None of these professors is without experience in teaching; and with the energy which we believe they possess, the college has the prospect of a brilliant future. See advertisement elsewhere.

Cooper's Well.—Attention is called to the advertisement of this celebrated resort. It is well known to everybody in the Southwest for its salubrious location, good accommodations, and for the healing virtues of its waters. For diseases of the digestive organs, especially for affections of the bowels, the water is a specific. Many lives have been saved by a few weeks' sojourn at Cooper's Well.

It is certain that the nearer we come to heaven or to a meetness for glory, the more we are impressed with the value and privilege of prayer.

One reason why the world is not reformed is, because every man would have others make a beginning, and never thinks of himself.

Obituaries.

Jack William Daniel, son of Lawrence and Ellen Daniel, was born in Glennville, Alabama, January 16, 1853, and died in Crenshaw county, Alabama, April 25, 1871.

Jack was dedicated to God in his infancy by Rev. W. B. Neal, of the Alabama Conference. As he was trained in his childhood by his parents, so he walked, in the days of his youth, in the ways of truth and fidelity. He kept the Sabbath day holy, and was ever careful to avoid evil association. He was never too tired to read his Bible and pray before he slept at night. He begged the young people of his acquaintance to attend the Sabbath school, and there learn to love and serve God. To his parents and loved ones he said, "Weep not for me, for I feel that all is well," and exhorted them to meet him in heaven.

He was very fond of music. Just before he died he sang, with a clear voice, that beautiful hymn:

"I would not live alway; I ask not to stay
Where storm after storm rises dark o'er the way;
The few lurid mornings that dawn on us here
Are enough for life's woes, full enough for its cheer."

Just as daylight was dawning his spirit took its flight. May the Lord comfort the bereaved family.

W. W. Graham.

Died, on the seventeenth of June, 1871, near Downsville, Union parish, Louisiana, Mrs. Mary Ann McGee, in the thirty-first year of her age. She was the daughter of G. W. and Elizabeth Reynolds, and was born November 9, 1840. She received a religious education, was converted in July, 1855, and was married to R. McGee December 23, 1858, with whom she lived in peace and love to the end of life. As a wife she was obedient and kind; as a mother affectionate and faithful; as a friend and neighbor just and obliging. She was more than this: a good Christian, modest and unassuming in her manners. She went forward in the path of Christian duty unmoved by the frowns or smiles of the world.

As might have been expected, her end was peace. To her husband and friends she gave assurances not only of willingness to die, but of an anxiety to exchange the sorrows of earth for the bliss of heaven. The writer visited her on the day of her death, and at her request we sang the hymn beginning:

"O sing to me of heaven," after which prayer was offered. The presence of God was manifested. We realized that where the Christian meets his fate is privileged beyond the ordinary walks of life—quite upon the confines of heaven. Her sudden death has cast a gloom over the entire community, and left a vacuum which will be hard to fill.

A husband, four children, numerous relatives and a large circle of friends are left to weep; but not all of sorrow, for though dead, she yet speaketh, and to the ear of faith says: "I am not lost, but gone before."

R. T. Parish.

Mrs. M. L. Nash, relict of the Rev. O. L. Nash, late of the Mississippi Conference, died at her home, in Clinton, Mississippi, on the twenty-second of June, 1871, aged sixty-one years, nine months and twenty-three days.

Thus another tie which links the present generation of Methodism with the past has been sundered.

Sister Nash joined the Methodist Church on the tenth of May, 1830, and two days after was married to her husband, then an itinerant minister, by the Rev. B. M. Drake. She continued to share the itinerant's lot, proving a helpmate indeed, until her husband was called to his reward in 1853. Since her widowhood she has been the same faithful Christian and devoted friend of the church. The preachers on the circuit always met with a warm reception and hospitable cheer in her family.

In earlier life she was zealous and active in the cause of Christ; but of late years her bad health and feeble constitution prevented that ardor that once characterized her; but she was none the less devoted and pious in the circumscribed sphere. Her Bible and devotional books were ever her constant companions.

Her health has been failing for several years, and for the last eight weeks of her life she was a severe sufferer, but bore it all with patience and gentleness. Often she spoke of dying, and expressed perfect and calm resignation.

For several days before her death she could not speak, and suffered intensely; but her last hours were quiet and peaceful. Her spirit took its flight heavenward without a moan or struggle.

She leaves three daughters and an aged sister, all of whom were around her in her last moments.

Sad indeed was her parting from those loved ones here; but how inexpressibly bright her meeting with those who had gone before!

May the whole family so live as finally to meet in that blessed land

"Where farewells are spoken no more;
Where pain, sin and sorrow have lost their control,
And love sheds a halo of peace o'er the soul."

C. G. Andrews.

Charles Hoover was born in Orangeburg district, South Carolina, February 10, 1807. His parents moved to Mississippi and settled in Pike county in 1809, and when about twenty years old he moved to Holmes county. In 1828 he married Miss Nancy May, of Yazoo county, by whom he had six children. January 29, 1854, he married Mrs. Elizabeth Knight, by whom he had eight children, and who survives him. He died near Ebenezer, Holmes county, May 14, 1871, after a sickness of nine days, of congestion of the brain.

These are the brief outlines of the history of a good man, who has lived and passed from earth. Bro. Hoover was raised by pious parents, always lived a moral life, and when quite young joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he continued a member till his death. He was a faithful member of the church. His life gave abundant evidence of genuine conversion and the reign of the grace of God in the heart. Though quiet and unpretending in disposition and life, his good influence was felt by all around him. Living, he enjoyed the confidence and esteem of the church and world; and dying, he is much regretted by the community, and proves a great loss to the church. May God bless the affliction to the widow and children.

His pastor, R. J. Jones.

At the third Quarterly Conference of Richland circuit, Yazoo district, North Mississippi Conference, the undersigned were appointed a committee to report resolutions expressive of the sense of the Quarterly Conference with regard to the death of Charles Hoover, which occurred near Ebenezer, Holmes county, Mississippi, May 14, 1871, and forward them to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication. We therefore report the following:

With sincere regret we receive the official announcement of the death of Bro. Charles Hoover, a steward and trustee in the Methodist Episcopal Church South for Richland circuit, North Mississippi Conference, and consequently a member of this conference; therefore,

Resolved, 1. That while we bow with resignation to the will of the great Head of the Church, who has dismissed Bro. Hoover from labor with us and called him to rest on high, we are made sensibly to feel that the cause of Christianity has sustained a great loss in his death.

2. That we recognized in Bro. Hoover a faithful member of the church, a warm supporter of the cause of Christ, and a pious Christian.

3. That this our testimony to his character be recorded upon the journal of this conference.

Respectfully submitted.

R. J. Jones,
D. G. Pepper,
Committee.

NOTICE TO AGENTS.

Many of the post offices to which the Advocate is sent are the places of address for subscribers residing in the bounds of several charges—stations, circuits and missions. As we cannot know what names belong to any agent, where several are thus represented, we send a copy to each, the members of whose charge may be supposed to be included in the list. We may send to some who have not secured any subscribers, and may not have any in their charges. If such is the case we trust it will not long remain so.

ATTENTION, AGENTS!

Some of the lists of subscribers recently sent to the agents of this paper were taken from the books as they stood on the fifteenth of May. Other pressing engagements delay us in forwarding them. This will explain how it is that orders and remittances, reaching us after that date, are not entered. Where our agents have the necessary data they can correct their own lists.

ACKNOWLEDGING LETTERS.

Persons inquiring why their letters are not acknowledged are generally too fast. We acknowledge weekly all business letters reaching us up to the Saturday night preceding each issue. Those reaching us later are not heard from till the week following.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICE.

We will supply the Advocate to subscribers hereafter at the following rates, viz:

One year	$3 00
Six months	1 75
Three months	1 00

This will enable those who wish to subscribe for the paper on trial to do so without paying the yearly subscription. Agents will take due notice thereof and govern themselves accordingly.

The Friends and Admirers of the famous ARGYLE BITTERS, after long years of continued use, with life prolonged, bodily vigor and elasticity maintained, and the bloom of health upon their happy faces, can and will testify to their pre-eminent virtues over all others for the cure of Dyspepsia, the hydra-headed monster; Billious Disorders; Nervous Derangements; Depression of Spirits; Mental Anxiety; Engorged Spleen; Visceral Congestion; Catamenial Derangement, and most of the diseases of women and children. They are anti-periodic and anti-billious; they cure Flatulence and Constipation without the disgust and loathing for medicines usually attendant upon medication and sickness.

No family should be without them; and we would respectfully caution the people generally against buying other and cheaper bitters, because of their availability as a commercial article in the hands of merchants, who realize a larger profit in buying inferior bitters on account of their cheapness.

Ask for the ARGYLE, and take no other; the base of which is pure Bourbon, full-proof whisky, with true Calisaya Bark as one of their ingredients, neither of which, we guarantee, is used in any of the bitters that flood the market.

The ARGYLE is a standard preparation, has never been adulterated in the hands of the manufacturers, and is always pleasant and healthful. Jy6 1m

CORONA.

CORONA STRIVES TO JUSTIFY ITS name,

THE CROWN OF SCHOOLS

for the higher education of women, by judiciously combining in its scheme the special points of excellence found in all other schools. It aspires to superiority in all departments—literary, scientific, æsthetic, domestic and hygienic. The principal, after spending nearly twenty years in studying educational questions and in the practice of teaching, is devoting his whole mind and heart to the task of maintaining not the largest but the best school in the South. His system of education comprehends such an harmonious development of all the powers of mind, heart and body as will fit the young lady for the faithful discharge of the highest and lowliest duties of life.

The methods of instruction are those approved by the foremost educators of the age. The very best aids are employed for imparting real knowledge, such as maps, charts, globes, specimens and apparatus of all kinds. There is no rote—learning of the mere letter of text books—no cramming of the mind with disconnected facts.

Assistant teachers of known scholarship and well-tried aptness in teaching are engaged. In physical science and modern languages instruction is given by the eminent professors in these departments of Cumberland University.

The course of study is very extensive. It is arranged into schools after the plan of the best universities, and pupils are graduated in such schools as they or their parents may elect. Music on piano, harp and guitar.

In the boarding department young ladies enjoy all the comforts of an elegant home. The rooms are large, well ventilated, neatly furnished and newly carpeted. Fires in rooms whenever wanted. The table is bountifully supplied with wholesome food.

The location is most favorable in point of health, social refinement and religious privileges.

The health and physical development of boarding pupils are promoted by a system of gymnastic exercises, under a competent teacher, with dumb-bells, wands, rings and Indian clubs, without charge.

The expense of boarding and regular tuition is $250 or $260 a year. Extra branches at usual rates. The annual session always begins on the first Monday of September.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE,
Staunton, Virginia,

WILL BEGIN the Twenty-second Annual Session SEPTEMBER 21, 1871, and close June 24, 1872. Than this no college for young ladies ranks higher. The President, Rev. William A. Harris, is aided by an able and accomplished board of eighteen teachers and officers. System of teaching thorough, and based on the plan of the University of Virginia. English Science and Literature are taught by experienced graduates of our first universities and colleges. French is taught by a native master of the language. Music by two able masters, aided, among others, by two of the most distinguished vocalists in the South.

This is one of the healthiest climates in the world, and young ladies who come here from the South with feeble constitutions are entirely restored to health.

Buildings elegant—fanned by the purest breezes, and commanding the most magnificent rural and mountain scenery for thirty miles along the beautiful Valley of Virginia, making it one of the most delightful college homes in the Union. During the last session one hundred young ladies attended this institution from fourteen Southern States.

(From Judge John N. Rendren, M. A., University of Virginia.)

I regard the Wesleyan Female Institute, under the management of Rev. William A. Harris, as one of the very best and most attractive schools in the State. * * * *

(From Prof. William E. Peters, LL. D., of University of Virginia.)

* * * The sterling worth of Prof. Harris as a man, his Christian character, his devotion to duty and his mature scholarship, as also his successful experience as a teacher, furnish ample assurance that young ladies committed to his charge will enjoy advantages of moral and intellectual training rarely found.

* * * From personal knowledge I believe that, as the president of a female college, Rev. William A. Harris has no superior; indeed, within the purview of my acquaintance he has no equal.

(From Bishop E. M. Marvin, D. D.)

The Wesleyan Female Institute is an honor to the church. Instruction is thorough. All classes stand high. In Music, advantages are offered of a very high order. The most talented professors are employed, and neither pains nor expense are spared to make this department eminent. The school is very prosperous, and deserves to be so.

Terms for the Entire Scholastic Year. Board and tuition in the Collegiate Course, $235. Music and other extra studies, moderate.

WASHING MACHINE.

IT IS THE INVENTION of a Kentuckian, on the Falling Mill principle, and is operated by rocking.

Washing of clothes is so simplified by this machine that either a man, woman or child can do the work, and do it well.

It will thoroughly WASH, RINSE and BLUE one hundred (100) ordinary Pieces of Clothing in forty-five (45) minutes, without the LEAST WEAR of the clothing, the breaking of a button or the pulling of a thread.

The most delicate Fabrics can be washed with it without the least injury.

While it washes, it bleaches likewise.

It will wash Blankets, and give them a new appearance and feeling.

Wool may be washed on this machine at the rate of six pieces in two minutes.

No Wash Tubs are needed.

Its construction is so simple it will last for years with care, and cost less than any wash tub in the aggregate. Any one can repair it, as there are no cog-wheels or cranks to replace.

Price, $12; with Wringer, $18.

Attention is also called to the "Little Giant Wringer," that we sell, as being superior to any other Wringer in use, simply for the reason that no adjustment is necessary to wring either a collar or a blanket. Address

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT.

Sects and Creeds Differ, but there are no dissenters from the general principle that a great medicine is a great blessing. We have many of these blessings, but among them all, in the province to which it belongs, no greater than

Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient.

A column would not suffice to enumerate the ailments for which it is prescribed by physicians of the highest standing. It does not belong to the class derisively termed patent medicines, but it is an article based on scientific analysis, and will stand the test of the sharpest and most rigid medical criticism as a cathartic, a stomachic, an anti-febrile preparation, and an admirable remedy for all bilious complaints. Let there be no mistake. Secure the genuine article only.

VIRGINIA SPRINGS.

RAWLEY SPRINGS, VIRGINIA,

WAS REGULARLY OPENED FOR THE reception of visitors on the FIRST DAY OF JUNE, 1871. Situated, as it is, in the Mountains of the Valley, it is not only one of the most delightful Summer Resorts in the State, but its curative properties are becoming widely celebrated.

The analysis of the water by Prof Mallet, of the University of Virginia, together with the experience of many eminent physicians, prove that it is the Springs for suffering females. But besides its wonderful tonic properties as a remedy in general debility, anæmia and diseases peculiar to females, it is unsurpassed in the treatment of the various forms of Dyspepsia, and particularly for those suffering from torpid and inactive liver, its action upon the liver as well as kidneys being prompt and decided. Very many remarkable cures could be cited of this class of troublesome diseases.

RAWLEY is now easy of access, situated only twelve miles from Harrisonburg, the present terminus of the Orange, Alexandria and Manassas Gap Railroad, from which point there will be two daily lines of Stages, morning and evening.

Since last summer the buildings have been greatly improved, as well as the road from Harrisonburg to the Springs.

There is also now a Telegraph Office at Harrisonburg.

The accommodations will be strictly first-class, under the management of JOSEPH N. WOODWARD, widely and well known as a Hotel Manager.

DADDY LONG-LEGS AND THE FLY.

Once Mr. Daddy Long-legs,
Dressed in brown and gray,
Walked about upon the sands
Upon a summer's day.
And there among the pebbles,
When the wind was rather cold,
He met with Mr. Floppy Fly,
All dressed in red and gold.
And as it was too late to dine,
They drank some petwinkle wine,
And played an hour or two, or more,
At battlecock and shuttledoor.

Said Mr. Daddy Long-legs
To Mr. Floppy Fly:
"Why do you never come to court?
I wish you'd tell me why.
All gold and shine, and dress so fine,
You'd quite delight the court.
Why do you never go at all?
I really think you ought!
And if you went you'd see such sights!
Such rugs and jugs and candle-lights!
And, more than all, the King and Queen,
One in red, one in green."

"Oh, Mr. Daddy Long-legs,"
Said Mr. Floppy Fly,
"It's true I never go to court,
And I will tell you why.
If I had six long legs like yours
At once I'd go to court;
But oh! I can't because my legs
Are so extremely short.
And I am afraid the King and Queen
(One in red and one in green)
Would say aloud: 'You are not fit,
You fly, to come to court a bit.'"

"Oh, Mr. Daddy Long-legs,"
Said Mr. Floppy Fly,
"I wish you'd sing one little song,
One mumb'an melody.
You used to sing so awful well,
In former days gone by;
But now you never sing at all;
I wish you'd tell me why.
For if you would, the silvery sound
Would please the shrimps and cockles round
To hear you sing: 'Ah, Hum di Hum!'"

Said Mr. Daddy Long-legs:
"I can never sing again!
And if you wish I'll tell you why,
Although it gives me pain.
For years I cannot hum a bit,
Or sing the smallest song;
And this the dreadful reason is,
My legs are grown too long!
My six long legs, all here and there,
Oppress my bosom in despair;
And if I stand, or lie, or sit,
I cannot sing one little bit."

So Mr. Daddy Long-legs
And Mr. Floppy Fly
Sat down in silence by the sea,
And gazed upon the sky.
They said: "This is a dreadful thing!
The world has all gone wrong,
Since one has legs too short by half,
The other much too long!
One never more can go to court,
Because his legs have grown too short:
The other cannot sing a song,
Because his legs have grown too long!"

Then Mr. Daddy Long-legs
And Mr. Floppy Fly
Rushed downward to the foamy sea
With one spontaneous cry;
And there they found a little boat,
Whose sail was pink and gray,
And off they sailed among the waves,
Far and far away,
They sailed across the silent main,
And reached the great Grombollian plain;
And there they play forevermore
At battlecock and shuttledoor.

CHASING BLACKFISH.

BY AN OCCASIONAL CONTRIBUTOR.

Now, boys, draw up your chairs together, and I'll tell you a story—a real, live fishing story; and see if it is not as good as any "made-up" story you find in the novels.

There was a big fishing party in Wellfleet bay last Friday—one of the grandest times our boys ever had—and they see a pretty good variety in catching mackerel, summers; oysters, winters; and cod, haddock, blackfish and other kinds at odd times.

Out in front of our village a long point of sand makes out south into Massachusetts bay, ten miles or more, and incloses Wellfleet bay. The day I have spoken of, the fishermen on the point discovered a school of blackfish—a very large school of them—sporting and feeding in the bay, and so set out to capture them. They rowed out round them with their boats, and began to shout, and strike the water with their oars, and make all the wild noises they could, and started the fish up the bay, when the school darted off at full speed west for the big water, till they struck the shoal water made by the point; then they rushed off east and struck the main land. By this time all the fishermen on the point and along the Eastham shore had got wind of what was up in the bay, and put in for a share. The packet Nellie Baker, on her way to Boston, saw them too, dropped anchor, and all hands pitched into the fishing fracas, so that by this time there are sixty or seventy persons, with all the boats they can muster in the line, to prevent their going south into the bay. Now the fish headed for the south, as they could not get out east or west, and made a rush for open water; and the liveliest time you ever dreamed of, outside of a battle with firearms, came on. Every man and boy shouted his loudest, and with lance, spear, ax, oar or anything else, they smote the huge monsters on the heads, confused them, turned back the front line, and tinged the waters with blood. By this time the whole school was so hurried or confused that they did not know which way to go, or care much, only to keep together. Now they rushed easterly, and for half a mile the water boiled with the excitement and rage—the shore [illegible] ped them—they were quiet a [illegible] then another surge to the [illegible] followed by all hands, churning and beating the water, and if [illegible] high tide, they drove the whole tribe on the shore, where they lay to-day. When they struck the shore the calves began to cry—cry with a long, pathetic wail, like a hurt baby, which would set the old ones in a rage, for they are very fond and constant in affection for their little ones, never leaving them till they are dead. When the calves struck the shore and set up their cry, the huge old mothers and bulls would rush up to their rescue, and with hideous roars, that would shake the air like thunders, plunge on to the shore, over and under each other, till some of them would stand on their heads, and shake their flukes, as if determined to knock something to pieces, if they could only reach their pursuers. In chasing them up they ran against the boats many times, but did not sink them; and one smallish chap, seeing what an easy time the men had in the boats, jumped plump into one of the dories. The men in it discovered that they had business somewhere else just then, and did not go back to ascertain what business he had in their boat till he drifted ashore, as quiet as a lamb, in the dory. At length they drove them all ashore, and there they lay, seven hundred and seventy of them, from three to twenty-two feet long, and weighing from two hundred to four or five thousand pounds. Like whales, they are black and shiny fellows, and are covered with a layer of fat or blubber, which is cut into slices, and stripped off for its oil.

The best of my story is that the lucky fishermen sold their prizes to the oil men for $12 apiece; and so some $9,000 or $10,000 will be distributed among the poor and worthy fishermen, who do a great deal of hard work for small pay. But I'm glad they had such good fortune, for they do not drink much liquor, but spend their money to maintain good homes, full of comforts for their families But next time they drive such a school ashore may you and I be there to see.—Methodist.

THE TWO BUCKS.—The Sunday School Worker tells us of a fine brick church, which received its first impulse from a boy's hand. The project had been talked over a good deal, but the sum needed was so great that every one was fearful to begin, lest they should not have wherewith to finish. But one morning early there was a call at the minister's door. A little boy was there, who would not be satisfied with anything short of seeing the minister. So the minister came down to the door; and the boy, pointing to a big wheelbarrow, said cheerfully:

"There are two bricks for the new church, sir."

That day the good minister went out and told all he met: "The new church is going to be built. The first load of bricks is on the ground." And it was built—large and beautiful and stately; and in it is gathered, every Sabbath day, a crowded audience learning the way to heaven. These two bricks might well have had a golden setting.

Is there a child that cannot, in some way, do as much for his Lord? The value of even two bricks, from every child in the land, would fill up the Lord's treasury as it never has been filled.

Little children at the West often manage, in many curious ways, to raise money for their Sunday schools. In one section they got permission to glean all the vast wheat fields, and have the proceeds toward a new library. They turned out in flocks, and covered the field like birds; and it would be a keen-eyed bird, indeed, who could find a spear of wheat for his breakfast after this gleaning. Liberal farmers would often add a sack of wheat to their stores, so that when the great jubilee picnic came there was a noble offering to bring up. All felt well repaid for their labors, and they had learned a good lesson about the "power of littles."

Let each child who reads this remember the two bricks, and see what offering he too may be able to make for Jesus. Remember that he has said that not even a cup of cold water shall lose its reward.—Child's World.

CAN SPARE MORE THAN WE THINK. A man of property, who had just lost $10,000 by fire and flood, remarked recently:

"If I had been urged to give $10,000 for the Lord's cause I would have thought it utterly impossible—that it would quite ruin me; but the Lord has taken it away, and I am able to live still."

Why will not those to whom God has committed property learn their responsibility to the mission work without severe lessons?

A KNOWLEDGE of the laws which regulate the progress of storms would be of comparatively little practical interest without the telegraph, but since the speed of electricity outstrips that of wind, the information by telegraph that a storm has appeared at any one post may be of great importance to a country like our own, provided we know the path which the storm is likely to pursue.

SORROW comes soon enough without despondency: it does a man no good to carry around a lightning-rod to attract trouble.

The Farm and Garden.

BEE NOTES FOR JULY.

As moths increase treat them to a drink of molasses, vinegar and water, set in saucers near the hive at night. Their appetite for it proves their ruin. Let the chickens have the moths, and use the liquid again, renewing if necessary. Italians defend themselves from the moth better than black bees, and are less liable to foul brood. Foul brood, where it exists, should be attended to now, or in three weeks after the first swarm, as all healthy brood, except a few drones, has matured. Cells containing dead larva remain sealed. Make examinations in the middle of the day. If you are timid put on some protection, but the bees will not be likely to sting if directions are followed. With the box hive you will first blow a few puffs of smoke under it. Then turn it bottom up, drive the bees away with a little more smoke, spread the combs apart, and if among the brood comb you discover any sealed cells open a few of them with the point of a knife. If they are black and putrid, while yet in the larva state, drive out the bees at once. Set an empty hive on the old stand, to catch returning bees, put another on the inverted hive, and with a hammer or stick gently and rapidly strike the lower hive. In fifteen minutes the bees will mostly be in the upper one. Set this on the old stand, and all will soon gather there to begin anew. With movable comb hives it is only necessary to lift out the combs and shake the bees off at the entrance of the empty hive—which should, of course, be on the old stand—taking care to have a wide board or sheet to facilitate their creeping directly in. All movements should be made very gently. It is not necessary that one should be a smoker in order to manage bees. Decayed wood, that which will just hold together, will burn a long time without blazing, and answers a very good purpose. If any choose to use tobacco, take a bit of cotton cloth a foot square, cover it with tobacco a quarter of an inch thick, roll it up, fasten with a few stitches, and set fire to one end. This answers every purpose of a pipe. It subdues Italians quickly, but the next time you meet them you will be likely to find them more irritable. Early swarms will often fill the hive and store a quantity of surplus. If such is the prospect, it is just as well to put on boxes soon after bees are hived. This becomes necessary when two swarms are hived together. Keep a supply of boxes on hand, and change as fast as filled. No need of waiting until every cell is full. When taken from the hive keep them the same side up, if practicable, and raise them a little from the ground to let the bees creep out. Always avoid turning over further than on one side, and keep the sheets vertical, else the honey will leak and look badly. Keep them out of the sun. In movable comb hives weak colonies are easily strengthened by giving them a comb or more, filled with brood, from some strong one, shaking off all bees, of course. Replace these with empty ones. In a time of a great yield of honey there is danger of too little room for breeding, and consequently weak colonies. In such a case remove the outside frames that will be well filled with honey, put some of the inside ones in their places, and empty ones in the center. The full combs can be used for feeding or otherwise, as may be desired. If moth-worms appear among them smoke with brimstone in a close box or barrel.—M. Quinby, in American Agriculturist.

TEA CULTURE IN THE SOUTH.

We have cultivated the Chinese tea plant on a small scale, says Our Home Journal, for ten or twelve years past, and have every confidence in its perfect success at nearly all points between the Roanoke river and the Rio Grande. Mrs. Edmonston, of Halifax, North Carolina, Dr. Acee, of Tulbolton, Georgia, and others, have made excellent tea from plants of their own growing; and the only question in regard to the profit or advantage of raising the plant on a large scale has been the high price of labor in this country. Referring to the tea plant, cost of production, etc., we find in the last report of the Department of Agriculture the following letter from Hon. W. G. Howard, now of San Antonio, Tex. Mr. Howard has traveled much in the East Indies, and is evidently well informed on the culture and manufacture of tea. He says:

"The culture of the plant and the manufacture of the leaf is much simpler and easier than most persons think. Of the hardy nature of the plant you have abundant evidence in those planted in the gardens at Washington. And from my own experience in many climates of India, from Arracan to the Himalaya mountains, neither frost nor snow, drought nor rain, sunshine nor shadow, materially injure the 'tea plant.' Nor is it subject to the visitation of any worm, bug or disease.

"When I first went to India all knowledge with respect to tea was very scant and limited, and everything had to be done by hand; but afterward, when the capital invested in tea had increased to enormous proportions—indeed, many millions of pounds sterling—the cost of manufacture was much reduced. When I left India the only manual labor was the picking of the leaves, which was best done by women and children. It is true that a man here would cost $20 or $25 per month, against $2.50 per month there; but when you take into consideration the great lack of economy in the management there, the difference would not amount to so much. In India all tools and lead have to be brought from England, and transported on men's backs for many miles; the constant rebuilding of houses, rendered necessary by the white ant and fire, every year or two; the enormous cost of management, which amounts to more than one-half the actual amount spent in the year; the physical inability of the Bengalee coolies to do much labor; the difficulty of procuring labor, and the unhealthy climate, all combine to bring the cost per acre to as much as it would be in America.

"The tea, once planted, only requires to be kept free from weeds, which can be done here with the plow, the same as with Indian corn, and at the same cost. In India they have neither horses nor plows, and all weeding must be done with the hoe in the hands of a lazy and weak coolie. After the tea is pretty well grown, say four or five years old, its own shade pretty much keeps the ground clean.

"Should our government once take hold of the subject, and demonstrate that tea can be grown, and to a profit, the demand for seed alone would soon pay all cost. The yield of seed is, on an average, four 'maunds' (a 'maund' is eighty pounds) to the acre, and I sold one year, from my garden, four thousand 'maunds,' at two hundred rupees per 'maund,' and could have sold forty thousand 'maunds' at the same figure."

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

HASTY PUDDING AND MUFFINS.—A lady says: "If any of your lady readers should wish for something for a dessert when they have company unexpectedly and are not prepared, the following recipe will be found excellent, and the dish wholesome and very quickly made:

"One pint of milk and one-half pint of flour, two eggs, pinch of salt, flavor with nutmeg, bake in square tin pans, in a hot oven, about half an hour. It is quickly made, and can be put in the oven just before sitting down to dinner and be just ready when wanted. Serve with butter and sugar.

"I can give you another recipe for a muffin as delicate as it is excellent. One pint of milk, one pint of flour, two eggs and one pinch of salt. They will be very light, and should be baked in small tin cups, or iron corn-cake pans, in a hot oven. There is no saleratus used, which is not fit to put in the stomach of any one."

FRIED POTATOES.—To fry potatoes properly everything depends upon the intelligence of the cook, and it is really useless to give directions unless they are fully adhered to. In the first place, we should be particular that the frying pan is well warmed before the butter, oil or friture is put into it; this should then be made quite hot over a clear, brisk, but not fierce fire.

The chopped potatoes (first boiled and steamed, and grown cold) should be then seasoned, and put into the pan. Stir them about with a knife as they are doing, and when the steam arises freely, and they are becoming brown in places, turn them into a dish, and serve as quickly as possible.

In some families potatoes are preferred when placed in the pan, and, instead of being stirred about, pressed down with a knife or spoon, and made smooth on the top; then fried as a cake. A very moderately hot fire is needed for this way; otherwise the potatoes get scorched underneath, and even with careful cooking they are usually heavy, owing to the condensation of the steam which cannot escape.

When bacon is fried with potatoes, it should be done first, and kept warm until the potatoes are dressed, then arranged in a circle around them; but in farm house practice the potatoes are thrown in upon the fried bacon, and when the potatoes are done they are served with the bacon.

A very savory dish is made by cutting up some bacon in pieces no larger than dice, then tossing them into a frying pan, and adding the chopped potatoes, and keeping both well stirred together until nicely fried. Boiled or steamed potatoes chopped up while they are yet warm never fry so successfully as when cold.—The Household.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

Dolbear Commercial College

A CARD.

All who wish a cash-paying education for themselves or sons can obtain it in the shortest possible time, and with the least possible expense, at

DOLBEAR COMMERCIAL COLLEGE,
Nos. 164 and 166 Canal St., New Orleans.

This College, founded in 1832, and chartered by the Legislature of Louisiana, has a full and able Faculty, and separate professors for each branch of study, so as to save the time and money of students, and fit them at once for business. They can take the Commercial Course, or the modern or ancient languages or mathematics, Book-keeping or Penmanship alone, or the whole course of the College. They have a LIFE SCHOLARSHIP in all the departments they enter and never pay but once. Persons from twelve to sixty years of age attend.

N. B.—Of all our numerous graduates for the past thirty-nine years, not one is now out of profitable employment, so far as known. Those of last year are now receiving from $1,000 to $3,000 per annum. We have ample arrangements for board, from $25 to $30 a month. When Clubs of three or more enter at the same time ten per cent. deduction is made.

There are no vacations. Students can begin at any time. Those who begin soon will be able to fill good situations in the summer, when Merchants make their changes. Liberal deduction for sons of clergymen and crippled soldiers. For catalogues address my4 1y RUFUS DOLBEAR, President.

J. W. BLACKMAN'S

COMMERCIAL COLLEGE,
61 CAMP STREET,
Corner Commercial Place, N. O.

Open day and evening the entire year.

Penmanship, Book-keeping, Mathematics and Languages are practically taught by experienced professors. Persons from fifteen to fifty years of age attend. Instruction given privately to each student, who has a separate desk to himself, and is put through a thorough and systematic course of study to qualify him for the situation he intends to fill. Persons who have neglected their education are here speedily prepared for business. Students from the country may obtain board in the family of the principal.

TERMS—Twenty per cent. less than other Commercial Colleges in this city. Cost of full Commercial Course only $100. Average time, three to four months.

The principal has been a professional teacher in New Orleans since 1851.

EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE,
VIRGINIA.

THIS INSTITUTION, located on the great railroad line from New Orleans to Baltimore, among the mountains of Virginia, is offering peculiar advantages to those who are seeking a thorough collegiate or business education. Two Hundred and Thirty Dollars will cover the expenses for an entire collegiate year of ten months, for Tuition, Board, Fuel, Room-rent, Washing and Contingent Fees. For the character of the school, please consult our own Alumni, or any of the Bishops or of the leading men of the Southern Methodist Church, or the Professors of the University of Virginia, who have authorized this reference. Our Fall Session begins AUGUST 17, 1871. If you desire a catalogue write to E. E. WILEY, Prest.,

HIWASSEE COLLEGE.

THE TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL SESSION of this school will begin on the FIRST MONDAY IN AUGUST, 1871. The entire expense for board and tuition, for forty weeks, will be $150. The board is of the best description that the country affords, being furnished by the steward from his own farm and prepared by the hands of his own family. We had boys from five different States last year, and not a word of complaint was ever made on this point, which is often the subject of just complaint at boarding schools. The fare is peculiarly grateful to Southern boys, who require a more generous diet when they change their climate.

The manner of governing the school is paternal, as the entire exemption from temptations in the surrounding country renders the discipline easy. The institution is under the care of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, but under my own control. The young men attending the school last year were, without exception, moral and religious. Young men preparing for the ministry may receive tuition free, and in certain cases can obtain lower rates of board. Regular services are held in the College Chapel.

The location of the school is near Madisonville, Monroe county, East Tennessee, in the midst of a fruitful and beautiful country, and surrounded by a thrifty and intelligent population. No negroes live in the neighborhood, all the laborers in the fields and servants in the families being white. The citizens of Monroe county were true to the South in her late struggle, and have adhered to Southern churches.

Students arriving by the East Tennessee and Virginia Railroad will get off at Sweetwater, forty miles south of Knoxville, whence they will find conveyance to the college, seven miles distant.

Our post office is Madisonville, Tennessee.
F. M. GRACE, President.

P. S.—1. Families from the South will find good board in the neighborhood, and a delightful summer retreat at White Cliff Springs, sixteen miles distant from Madisonville. For information on this point parties may address D. A. McKenzie, steward of the college. The health of the country is proverbial.

P. S.—2. Younger boys may be safely sent to this school, as all are under the immediate oversight of the principal, both when in school and when at the boarding house.

MEDICAL.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR.

A Purely Vegetable Compound

FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF

RHEUMATISM AND GOUT

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered inestimable relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Rawson, Delhi, Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Bradley, Floyd, Louisiana.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to threat on of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia, from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

ROBERT J. HARP,

NO. 112 CAMP STREET, NEW ORLEANS,

AGENT FOR THE SOUTHWESTERN STATES FOR THE SALE OF

GEORGE WOODS & CO.'S

PARLOR And CHURCH ORGANS.

To those who are in all acquainted with the trade in musical instruments, or those conversant with the improvements that during the last twenty years have been made in that most popular of instruments, the Reed Organ, it is entirely superfluous to speak of the reputation or ability of the firm of GEO. WOODS & CO. We will however, mention, for the benefit of any who may be without information on the subject, that the senior partner, Mr. Geo. Woods, has been engaged in the manufacture of Organs for many years, that he is the inventor of many valuable improvements and ingenious devices, and that his coadjutors in the business are all men extensively known to the trade as being possessed of uncommon skill, taste and experience in their different branches.

In offering our instruments to the notice of all interested in music, we merely ask a comparison between those of our manufacture and those of others, and briefly mention upon what points in our instruments we base our claims of superiority to the productions of our competitors in business:

QUALITY OF TONE.

Its Purity, Clearness and Brilliancy, Extraordinary Power,

CAPACITY FOR VARIETY, AND BEAUTY OF EFFECT,

Which is owing in a great measure to the excellence of our famous SOLO STOPS,

VOX HUMANA AND VOX CELESTE,

which differ materially in their construction and effects from other Stops of the same or similar name.

Our MANUAL SUB-BASS; smooth as well as effective in quality of tone.
PATENTED INVENTIONS AND INGENIOUS DEVICES.
Our method of employing SOLO SETS in separate WIND CHESTS.
IMPROVED VALVES AND WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.
THOROUGHNESS OF CONSTRUCTION AND ELEGANCE OF DESIGN.

All material used in the construction of our instruments will be found to be strictly of the best quality. Our workmanship will also be found to be of a very high order.

The Cases are constructed with a proper regard to the laws of sound, having acoustic chambers at the ends of the case.

The Fronts of Keys are Ivory, and are not of Holly wood.

The Carvings are hand-made.

The Stops are of Ebony and Ivory, engraved by hand.

Special attention is called to these Organs. Price Lists and Catalogues, containing full particulars of the many numbers, sizes, varieties and prices ranging from $110 to $650—will be mailed to any one on application.

☞ All instruments will be thoroughly examined and shipped in good order. Therefore parties can safely order without coming to select. Address

Scientific.

MR. H. ROGERS read an important paper before the Edinburg Botanical Society on March 9—a report "On the Effects of Cutting Down Forests on the Climate and Health of the Mauritius." The epidemic which broke out in 1865 in the colony, previously so remarkable for its salubrity, he traced to this cause, and stated that between 1854 and 1862 vast tracts of forests had disappeared, causing a diminished amount of rainfall, an increased amount of dryness, and a proportionate elevation of temperature. The difference in seasons is now much less marked, rains are scarce, droughts frequent and excessive, vast tracts of land, formerly productive, are now barren and desolate, and districts before noted for salubrity are now notoriously unhealthy. Although the amount of rainfall is much reduced, the violence of the rain is increased when it does fall, and heavy floods are the result. It was immediately after one of these inundations that the fever broke out, in February, 1865, which proved so terribly fatal in the colony.

PHOTOGRAPHY VS. VISION.—While the examination of a photographer was some months since in progress before Judge Dowling for false pretenses, in assuming to have taken what were called spirit pictures, we ventured the suggestion, in noticing the statement, that no objects like those photographed were visible to any observers present, that the sensitive plate in the camera might be capable of copying any object which might not be perceptible to the human eye. That view has recently been confirmed by the English eclipse expedition. The telescopic observations taken of the corona during the period of totality, by the corps of astronomers on that occasion, gave no indication of any object beyond the rays of light emitted by the eclipsed sun, although the most careful scrutiny was exercised. It was found, however, that the photographs taken of the corona at the same time exhibited beyond the sun's rays a distinct picture of the planet Venus, which had evidently been unperceived through the telescope.

We lay no claim to superior sagacity for our suggestion, advanced a year ago, half in jest and half in earnest, notwithstanding the discovery just made that the chemicals on the photograph plate are susceptible of impression from objects invisible to the human retina, is dwelt upon with great interest by the scientific men in England.

YELLOW FEVER CHOLERA.—A new form of cholera, resembling dysentery and yellow fever in its symptoms, has been developed in the city of New York by the present hot weather. It is reported to combine the characteristics of both diseases, the excessive purging of the one, and the "black vomit" of the other. It is well known that medical men differ widely in regard to the origin of these terrible diseases. The old proverb says: "Where doctors disagree, who shall decide?" But in actual practice, when professional gentlemen are not united on any point arising in their special department, non-professionals feel at liberty to offer their remarks. In this spirit we mention having heard that a European physician, who had passed many years within the tropics, and acquired local celebrity for his success in treating yellow fever, held the opinion that that disease and Asiatic cholera were close kindred, proceeding from analogous electric conditions of a very heated atmosphere, producing disintegration of the component parts of the blood. In yellow fever, which, strangely enough, is often unaccompanied by fever at all, the coloring matter of the disintegrated blood is precipitated into the stomach. In the popular view of the disease in tropical countries, its cure depends on the prompt restoration of the system to its natural functions, and all Americans who, in journeys by the Panama Isthmus to California, have had to pass through tropical America, will remember the universal belief that, taken in time, the old woman's remedy of lime juice and castor oil converts the terrible yellow fever into a harmless ailment. But if it be taken too late, the peculiar fatal symptom, "black vomit," appears, the system exhausting itself in the effort to expel from the stomach the coloring matter of the blood which has accumulated in it. Asiatic cholera, on the other hand, seems to be a like precipitation of the serum, or watery matter of the blood, into the stomach, the coloring matter remaining in the veins and arteries.

Science discloses more and more every day the extent to which the electrical condition of the atmosphere influences epidemics. The appearance of a disease combining the symptoms of both of the pestilences usually generated by an over-heated atmosphere is a singular result of the influence alluded to.

THE next best thing to paying a pastor a large salary is to pay him his small one promptly.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have again to notice a dull market in nearly every branch of trade. Sugar, however, has been in fair demand and ruled at steady prices. Molasses has been quiet at previous rates. Operations in flour have been restricted by scant supplies, owing to which prices have improved, double extra and the better qualities ruling at about 25c. per barrel above Friday's rates. Corn has been in moderate request and prices have hardly been maintained. Pork has continued dull at previous rates. Bacon, from its light supply, has sold at stiffer prices, showing an advance of ⅛ to ¼c.

Our crop accounts from Mississippi are decidedly unfavorable, almost as unpromising as at any time this season, but from other States they are more encouraging. The reports from Alabama, Georgia and South Carolina are especially cheering, and from them we may expect a fair yield in proportion to the acreage planted. As to the general result, it is involved in so much doubt as to prevent estimates.

The river is 11 feet 9 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twenty-first instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales..	1,069
Lake		2
Mobile		47
Texas		226
Total		2,244

On Saturday 1,350 bales changed hands, mostly during the morning, when the movement was stimulated by favorable telegrams from Liverpool. Prices were steady at previous rates for the lower grades, but low middling was neglected and could not have been forced off unless at some concessions. On Monday the few buyers who came forward were enabled to fill their orders at concessions of ¼c. in good ordinary and low middling, while ordinary continued firm at previous rates, with some transactions indicating an actual improvement. The sales embraced 1,550 bales. On Tuesday there was some demand for ordinary and strict ordinary, which continued firm, but the other grades were neglected and could not be disposed of unless at further concessions. Good ordinary sold at 16c., and even as low as 15¾c., and strict at 16⅜c. The business embraced barely 500 bales.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 3,400 bales.

The receipts at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 1,428,169 bales, against 1,136,966 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 1,083,449 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 888,206 bales to Great Britain, 301,324 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 214,048 to France.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	14½ to 15¼
Good ordinary	16 to 16½
Low middling	17⅜ to 18½
Middling	20 to ..
Strict middling	.. to ..

SUGAR continues in good local demand, and quite a fair business is doing at 9¾c. for common, 11¼c. for good fair, 12¼ to 12½c. for primo to choice, and 12¼ to 12½c. for yellow clarified. About 100 hogsheads were sold to the city trade on Saturday and Monday at these prices. On Saturday 24 barrels cistern bottom sold at 5½c per pound. On Tuesday a lot of 25 hogsheads good fair sold at 11¼c. per pound.

PORK.—The market has again continued very dull, without a sale worthy of note, and holders asking $15.75 per barrel for mess. It is retailing at $16 to $16.50 per barrel. On Tuesday a lot of 85 barrels thin mess sold at $15.37½ per pound.

BACON.—The stock is light, and the market is firmer. On Tuesday 20 casks clear sides sold, in two equal lots, at 9⅜ to 9½c.; 10 tierces sugar-cured hams sold, to arrive, at 15¾c., and 10 do. at 15⅞c. per pound. Shoulders are now held at 7⅝ to 7¾c., clear rib sides 9½ to 9⅝c., clear sides 10c., sugar-cured hams 14 to 15c., choice do. 15½ to 17c. per pound.

DRY SALT MEAT.—There is little or nothing doing in this article. Shoulders are held at 6¾ to 7c. per pound, and are retailing at 7c. per pound.

LARD.—The stock is light, the demand is good, and prices have ruled higher. There were sales on Monday of 150 tierces refined, in two lots, at 10⅝ to 10⅞c., and 25 kegs do. at 11¾c. per pound. On Tuesday 100 kegs refined sold at 11½c., and 25 do. at 11¾c. per pound. Tierces are now quoted at 10¾ to 11c.; kegs, 11½ to 11¾c. per pound.

BREAKFAST BACON is in fair demand at 10 to 10½c. per pound. There were sales on Monday of about 100 boxes Western at 10¼ to 10½c. per pound.

MONETARY.—Gold, 112⅜ to 112⅝.

American silver half dollars, 107½ to 108½, and Mexican dollars at 3½ to 4¼ per cent. premium in gold.

The sales of State warrants include a small amount on Monday at 63; and $1,000 on Tuesday at 57¼; $1,500 at 57¾, and a moderate amount, the particulars of which did not transpire.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of truly unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching should not be offensive to the thought and feeling of the Southern people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. MAURY, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simplicity freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

COMPRISES, ALSO,

De Vere's French Grammar, Readers, etc.,

By M. SCHELE DEVERE, LL.D., Professor of Modern Languages in the University of Virginia.

Gildersleeve's Latin Series,

By B. L. GILDERSLEEVE, Ph.D., LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

Carter's Elements of General History,

By Rev. J. P. CARTER, A.M., of Baltimore, Maryland.

Holmes' English Grammars,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

LeConte's Scientific Series,

By the Professors LECONTE, late of the University of South Carolina.

Johnston's English Classics,

By R. M. JOHNSTON, A.M., late Professor of Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres in the University of Georgia.

To which list other books in other departments will early be added.

Send for our full ILLUSTRATED DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE, which will be mailed free to any teacher or school officer. Liberal terms given for introduction.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

Stoves! Stoves! Stoves!

THESE are not the best the world ever saw nor do I pretend to say that they will last for ages and generations to come; neither will they bake bread or warm rooms without some little wood or coal, and just the least bit of fire, judiciously applied. But I do believe they are just as good as any now in use, and with the same care in using and skill in managing will perform as well, and prove as durable and economical as the most approved pattern. For sale by

VOL. XVII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, AUGUST 3, 1871. NO. 29.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, July 26.—Tuscan, Arizona, advices to the eighteenth state that a fight occurred over a wagon train en route for Fort Brown, in which thirteen Indians and one soldier were killed, and three wounded.

Nothing has been received from General Crook for three days.

Fort Smith advices to the twenty-second report a party of Osages returned to their lodges with three white scalps, and loaded with plunder.

SALT LAKE CITY, July 27.—The smallpox is prevalent here. Every precaution has been taken to prevent the spread of contagion.

The twenty-fourth of July, the anniversary of the entry of the pioneers into this valley, was celebrated throughout the Territory.

CINCINNATI, July 27.—A suit against the Western Union Telegraph Company, pending since 1866, for $6,000 loss by an error in a cipher message, was decided in favor of the telegraph company. The decision absolves the company from all liability on account of alleged error.

WASHINGTON, July 27.—The Grand Duke Alexis leaves Cronstadt for America August 30, in the largest fleet that ever sailed from European waters.

The Evangelical Alliance Commission will have an interview with the Czar next week.

NEW YORK, July 28.—A large meeting last night bitterly denounced Governor Hoffman, and resolved to elect the policemen dismissed for disobedience of orders on the twelfth instant to some office.

Domingo Ruaz, indicted for a violation of the neutrality laws, in furnishing aid and comfort to the Cubans, has been released.

A Montreal dispatch says it has been definitely ascertained that the Cuban Junta of New York, for some weeks, has been actively enlisting men to form part of an expedition of about seven thousand men. The expedition will sail for Cuba in two or three weeks.

WILMINGTON, July 29.—A bloody riot occurred at Goldsboro to-day. About five thousand negroes arrived there from Newbern and the lower counties on an excursion train, chartered by the Republican Executive Committee to attend a mass meeting, at which Congressman Thomas, ex-Senator Abbott, Marcus Erwin and R. C. Badger were to be the speakers.

There were very few white people in town, and many of the negroes came in too excited. The police arrested a turbulent negro, and while on the way to the guard-house with this prisoner the negroes rallied and rescued him. The colored police fired on the prisoner, who was recaptured and taken by the police to the Exchange Hotel. About one thousand of the negro mob, with clubs and pistols, rallied to the hotel, attempting another rescue. The riot commenced by the negroes throwing brickbats at the police and using clubs, when a cross firing began between the police and mob. The white citizens forebore, but are now armed for any emergency. There is great excitement. About thirty or more shots were fired. Three or more whites were hurt; one negro killed, and one colored policeman killed and two wounded.

NEW YORK, July 30.—The Staten Island ferryboat Westfield, crowded with passengers, exploded her boiler at one twenty to-day, in the slip at Whitehall street. The concussion was terrific, shattering the forward part of the boat, and killing a great number of people. The hurricane deck was carried overboard. A large number of persons fell in the water and were drowned. The entire number lost is supposed to be one hundred and fifty.

The Westfield was leaving the slip at the foot of Whitehall street when she exploded. There were about three hundred usual Sunday excursionists aboard. A yawning abyss extended from abaft the engine room to the stern. The deck seemed to have opened, and the dead and dying lay in every direction among the timbers, splinters and heavy machinery.

The whole upper works were shivered into a thousand pieces. Many were blown into the water and hauled out by the boatmen with hooks. A large party are dragging the bottom of the river and constantly bringing up bodies. Men, women and children are brought in scorched, bruised and mutilated. Colonel Waurchie, formerly partner of Garibaldi, was badly scalded.

NEW YORK, July 31.—The deaths thus far are fifty-nine; injured, one hundred and forty-two.

The ferryboat Westfield attracts large crowds to where she lies moored, at the foot of East Thirteenth street, in charge of Coroner Young. All the human remains, bits of clothing, etc., have been removed by the firemen to the Morgue. The force of the explosion was upward, blowing away the main deck, cabin deck and hurricane deck in almost a straight line across, a little forward of the center of the boat.

The bulwarks forward were blown away, and the metal shade around the funnel lies crumpled like paper. The iron pipe, an inch thick, joined to the steam supply chest, was torn away like cloth and hurled against the side of the boat. Two water tanks were forced backward toward the stern a considerable distance. The afterpart of the cabin is comparatively uninjured.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—Felix R. Bunet has been appointed Indian commissioner, vice Parker, resigned.

The cabinet session to-day was attended by all the members, excepting Postmaster General Creswell, who was represented by one of the assistant postmasters general.

The Pleasanton-Boutwell imbroglio was a topic of consideration, but the discussions were not characterized by any difference on the point of adjusting the difficulties by supporting the Secretary of the Treasury. It may, therefore, be considered that Commissioner Pleasanton will be removed, and it is more than probable that Deputy Commissioner Douglass will succeed him.

The question of appointing an arbitrator, under the Washington treaty, was a feature of to-day's consultation, and, without positive official indorsement, it can be stated that in all probability Charles Francis Adams will be designated to that office by the Secretary of State.

The debt statement shows a reduction of $8,200,000.

Samuel Wakefield has been appointed postmaster at New Iberia.

Miss Phœbe Cary, sister of Alice, is dead.

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—United States Commissioners Belknap and Lowe have been busily engaged all day making arrangements for a thorough investigation into the cause which led to the explosion of the Westfield. They are determined to make a full and searching inquiry, and elicit such facts as will disclose where negligence or culpability existed. For this purpose numerous witnesses have been summoned to testify in the case, and the probability is the investigation will commence to-morrow before the commissioners.

BOSTON, Aug. 1.—During a storm at Haverhill four barns were struck by lightning and burned, with several valuable horses.

The mail steamer Delta, from Bermuda, reports a fire at Point-a-Petre, Guadaloupe. Nearly the whole town was burned, and thirty thousand people left without shelter. Sugar ready for shipping was destroyed.

The town was rebuilt entirely of wood after its destruction by an earthquake in 1843. The fire is supposed to be the work of an incendiary.

FOREIGN.

MADRID, July 21.—A cabinet has finally been formed under the lead of Zorilla.

All the ministers belong to the Progressist party and will follow the policy inaugurated in the September revolution.

LONDON, July 26.—It is rumored Bismarck has been created Duke of Luxembourg.

The Emperor and Empress of Brazil to-day paid a visit to the shipping yard of John Laird, builder of the Alabama.

LONDON, July 26.—Persian advices represent the famine dreadful. The survivers eat the dead. A plague has also appeared. A sanitary cordon has been drawn along the borders of Turkey and Persia.

The British gunboats sent to Canton protect English and other foreigners.

Charles James Mathews, the comedian, is dead, aged sixty-seven years.

Yellow fever is malignant at Para, Brazil. The English consul is dead and his wife is dying. Nearly every stranger who arrived within six months is dead.

Naval Captain James C. Williamson is dead.

LONDON, July 27.—The Pope disclaims the inherent right of the papacy to dispossess monarchs, but in ancient times Christian nations revered the Pope as an arbiter between the people and sovereign.

Persian reports are unexaggerated. Famine, cholera, typhus fever and plague rage.

The cemeteries are guarded to prevent the disinterment of the dead for food.

The diplomatic and telegrsph corps have fled from the country.

ROME, July 27.—The Maronite and Malachite Archbishops of Aleppo and thirteen Hungarian Archbishops have forwarded to Rome their submission to the dogma of infallibility.

PARIS, July 28.—The rumor that Bismarck consented to the evacuation of the environs of Paris, on the thirty-first of August, is pronounced without foundation. The German troops will not be withdrawn from their present position in the vicinity of Paris until one billion five hundred million francs of indemnity are paid, and it will be impossible for the French government to pay that amount so early as the thirty-first proximo.

MUNICH, July 29.—Dr. Dollinger has been elected rector of the University of Munich. Fifty-four professors voted in his favor and six against him.

LONDON, July 29.—A few particulars have been received of the famine in Persia. The drought last year in the central and southern provinces, and the consequent partial failure of the crops, caused great destitution and misery all the winter. At the same time taxes were increased on the people of Loriston, which brought on famine, and numbers of the people left their houses and the government lost its usual taxes. The new governor promised to raise not only the usual sum, but more, and this oppression drove all the country people from their homes, who thronged the cities, which pay no taxes.

The failure of the crops in Loriston was rendered more disastrous because the other provinces, which mostly raise opium, cotton and silk, depend on it for their grain.

The results in Ispahan, Yeosed, Kirman and Shiraz were terrible by the end of winter. Before the new crop the cities were crowded. Wheat at Kirman rose to nine times the usual price, and starvation began. Yeosed raised opium; the people could buy no grain, and ate grass and roots.

In Kharassoa the people sold their children to the Turcomans to save their lives, and in other provinces the people ate their children.

Having eaten all their domestic animals and vermin in Ispahan, the men were caught digging up corpses to feed their starving families.

THE Chicago river has taken a "new departure" that promises a more astonishing revolution in geography than even Vallandigham's resolutions can hope to make in the Democratic party. Having been awakened from its sluggish slumber by the gentle pushing of the pure lake water, it has left its dirty and odoriferous bed, and by this time is dragging its slow length along the Mississippi valley. When we were young our geography informed us that Lake Michigan emptied itself into the ocean via the St. Lawrence, but Chicago enterprise and capital cries "presto," and lo! the face of nature is changed, and the laws of science are defied, so that water is now made to flow up hill. Lake Michigan, rolling over into bed with the Mississippi, tumbles out at least in time to take a salt water bath into the Gulf of Mexico. Saturday last the coffer dam at Bridgeport was removed, and the improvements in the canal having created a descent of about six feet from the lake, the mud and water so long and offensively known to our nostrils and to our Board of Health as the Chicago river, was pushed down through the canal. Chicago enterprise did it. Another world this way! Let Cincinnati bring her unfinished tunnel. We weep for worlds to conquer!—Interior.

CHENEY, WHITEHOUSE, TYNG—Whitehouse, Cheney, Tyng—Tyng, Whitehouse, Cheney—which shall we put on top? There they are at it again, and it is impossible in the active struggle to tell which is "the under dog." Whitehouse has notified the wardens of Christ church that he is going to pay their church an official visit during the morning service in August next, but Cheney says—if we may be permitted to parody Tennyson—"Whitehouse may come and Whitehouse may go, but I go on forever;" and so he goes on, notwithstanding his excommunication. Tyng meanwhile declared to a recent "interviewer" that he and Cheney are not about to secede from the Episcopal Church and set up an independent organization. Which shall it be?—Cheney, Whitehouse or Tyng—Whitehouse, Cheney or Tyng—Tyng, Cheney or Whitehouse. We propound it to our readers as a conundrum. Which shall it be?—Interior.

THE COPE.—While the Purchas judgment wounded the Ritualists of the Church of England, the non-ritualists have, as an alloy to their triumph, the necessity laid on them to wear vestments they decidedly object to. Ministers are required to preach in surplices, and bishops in their cathedral churches to wear copes. "The best idea of its appearance," says a London paper, "that can be given to such as have not seen such a vestment, is a lady's waterproof cloak. It is made of purple silk, lined with black silk, and without trimmings. One merit attaching to the cope is this—a bishop is only obliged to wear it when officiating in his cathedral. Cathedrals are generally cold and draughty, even in summer, and a warm garment can be fully appreciated by the wearer."

SINGULAR RETRIBUTION.—When the unhappy Joan of Kent, a woman of eminent standing, was called to expiate her Baptist heresy in the flames, John Rogers was earnestly entreated to exert his influence with the Archbishop in rescuing her from so terrible a doom. Rogers replied that burning alive was no cruel death, but easy enough. The astonished intercessor answered: "Well, perhaps it may so happen that you yourself shall have your hands full of this same mild burning." The rebuke was prophetic. The martyrdom of Rogers inaugurated the bloody tragedy enacted by the ruthless bigotry of Mary, and around his stake was rekindled the smoldering fires of Smithfield.—Christian Review.

THE SHANGHAI NEWS LETTER.

We are indebted to Rev. J. W. Lambuth, missionary in China, for a copy of this paper of June 12. We make some extracts, as follows:

TELEGRAPHY IN CHINESE CHARACTERS.—Mr. Viquier, the harbor master of Shanghai, has invented an ingenious method for the transmission of telegraphic messages in Chinese. The China Mail describes the apparatus as consisting of several thousands of small wooden blocks having on the one end a Chinese character; the blocks are arranged systematically in cases, so as to be readily found, and with the Chinese character on the end of each showing upward. To transmit a message in Chinese the proceeding is as follows: A native assistant, appointed for the purpose, takes from the cases the blocks with the Chinese characters as written in the message tendered for transmission, and, placing them in proper order, takes an impression of the number ends; these numbers are then telegraphed to the desired destination. At the receiving station are cases of wooden blocks arranged in an opposite manner to those at the forwarding station—i. e., with the Chinese characters cut into the one end, and the other end having a number on it showing upward. On receipt of the telegram the blocks bearing the numbers telegraphed are selected, and with the type end of these the message is printed off in Chinese. The European signaller of course has not the remotest idea of the sense or purpose of the message; but from the system adopted correctness in transmission is insured.

JAPAN AND CHINA.—In anticipation of the early ratification of a treaty with China, now in course of negotiation, the Japanese have made arrangements for a consulate at Shanghai. C. Shinagawa, Esq., has hired a house in Hongkew for the Japanese consulate, and soon that august entity, the "consular body," will receive some new blood. If the Japanese should prove less changeable in their consular appointments than other foreigners, we shall have the satisfaction, being cosmopolitan in our tastes, of seeing Mr. Shinagawa, or some other extreme orientalist, dean of the body, and in virtue of seniority taking precedence of the successors of Messrs. Seward, Anneke, Mejan and Markham. When he presides, and the Tantai makes a call at the meeting, may we be there to see!

THE completion of the telegraphic line between Hongkong and Singapore has been announced by the Great Northern Telegraph Company. So we have now through communication with London. Our first installment of news, dated London, May 30, and received here on the morning of the third instant, was sad indeed, being no other than the announcement that the Louvre, Les Tuileries and l'Hotel de Ville had been burned; coupled with this was the news of the suppression of the insurrection, but if at the cost of the above monuments, how dear the price!

ON THE thirteenth ultimo, in the afternoon, while a number of the residents were assembled in the public garden to hear the music played by the band of the Prussian war steamer Hertha, an unfortunate accident happened to the new iron bridge now being constructed across the Soochow creek. Two of the supports, placed nearest the Kongkew side, suddenly gave way, by sinking almost to a level with the water. The accident, which was fortunately unattended by loss of life, is attributed to the shifting away of the mud on that side of the creek. The engineer, it is said, is not to blame in the matter, while the Chinese, true to their traditional superstitious notions, are not slow in attributing it to the influence of that old Bête noir, their own time-honored Feng-shuy.

FROM Ningpo is this about tea: "The tea season has commenced; and the numerous picking and firing establishments here are in full operation. Still everybody says trade is dull. In fact this is the common cry, year in and year out. No trader is ever heard with anything else on his lips. I do not know how true or false this may be in regard to foreigners. The trade of Ningpo, however, is not declining. On the contrary, it is increasing year by year; and if foreigners do not find it so, it is because they are beaten by their native competitors.

NO MAN has any right to manage his affairs in such a way that his sudden death would bring burdens and losses on other people.

EMORY COLLEGE.

The catalogue of officers, alumni and students of Emory College, for 1870-71, gives abundant reason for the wide and deep interest felt in this institution in Georgia, and in no small degree throughout the church. In the list of its alumni stand some of the foremost men of the day—legislators, physicians, lawyers, teachers, preachers, and many of the best and most influential members of society in the private walks of life. The Methodist Church has the deepest interest in a college which has furnished to the pulpit more than eighty of the leading preachers now guiding the fortunes of the church.

Georgia Methodists show annually their appreciation of this college by rallying in great numbers to its annual commencements. The thirty-first class graduated last week, after a session marked by great harmony between the faculty and pupils, and by a religious revival in both the fall and spring terms. One hundred and eighty-six students were on the rolls, and twenty-two young gentlemen received the degree of bachelor of arts at this commencement.

The sermon was preached by Bishop Pierce—a memorial sermon, wherein the life and labors of Bishop Andrew were commemorated. The text was: "A good name is better than precious ointment; and the day of death than the day of one's birth."—Eccle. vii, 1. We cannot attempt to characterize a sermon from Bishop Pierce. To say all that ought to be said would be offensive to a modest man. Suffice it to say that the sermon was worthy of the subject, the occasion and the preacher. Many who have heard Bishop Pierce preach scores of times, think they then heard his best sermon. It was asked for publication, and as soon as he can prepare it for the press it will appear in the Southern Christian Advocate.

In the afternoon Dr. L. Pierce, who by common consent has a life estate in that section of the commencement programme, preached a sermon replete with deep Christian philosophy; and at night Rev. James O. Branch happily rounded off the religious services of the day with a sermon on the liberty which the truth in Jesus brings, full of edifying thought.

The degree of A. M. in course was conferred on Rev. Walker Lewis, and J. E. Pope, M. D.; the honorary degree of master of arts on Rev. Mr. Darnell, of Tennessee; the degree of D. D. on Rev. Joseph W. Lewis, of Missouri, on Rev. Morgan Calloway, president of La Grange Female College, Georgia, and on Rev. John L. Cotton, of the Alabama Conference; and the degree of LL. D. on Chancellor A. A. Lipscomb, of the University of Georgia.—Southern Christian Advocate.

THE CHRISTIAN INDEX.

This is the organ of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America. It is published by contract at our Publishing House, by A. H. Redford, agent. It is a neat paper, semi-monthly, at $1 a year in advance. The number for July 15 is on our table—a very neat sheet, the cheapest and best paper, beyond doubt, that is published for the colored people anywhere. Will our friends do our colored brethren the great favor of bringing the Index to their notice? Unless this is done the colored Methodists, whose organ it is, will not get the benefit. It is important to them. It has good reading. It has their Conference appointments and church news. It has a catalogue of their Sunday school books. Tell the colored people where to get the Index, and how to get it, and put them in communication with their organ.

FIRST OF THE NEW CROP.—The first bale of cotton of the crop of 1871 was received last night (July 20,) at this port, by the steamship Austin. It was raised on the Guadaloupe river, Texas, and was shipped by Mr. A. Goldman, of Victoria, Texas. The bale weighs nearly five hundred pounds. It was consigned to Messrs. Francke & Danneel, of this city.—Picayune.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 3, 1871.

LEAVE IT WITH GOD.

Where shall I die? Shall death's cold hand
Arrest my breath, while dear ones stand
In silent, watchful love, to shed
Their tears around my quiet bed?
Or shall I meet my final doom
Far from my country and my home?
Lord, to thy will I bend the knee—
Thou evermore hast cared for me.

How shall I die? Shall death's stern yoke
Subdue me by a single stroke?
Or shall my fainting frame sustain
The tedious languishing of pain—
Sinkingsh wearineas away,
Slowly and sadly, day by day?
Lord, I repose my cares on thee—
Thou evermore hast cared for me.

When shall I die? Shall death's stern call
Soon come my spirit to appall?
Or shall I live through circling years
A pilgrim in this vale of tears,
Surveying those I loved the best,
Who in the peaceful church-yard rest?
Lord, I await thy wise decree—
Thou evermore hast cared for me.

BROOKHAVEN DIST. CONFERENCE.

TERRY, MISS., July 17, 1871.

MR. EDITOR: The Brookhaven District Confereuce, Mississippi Conference, closed its session on the fifteenth. It mst at Hazlehurst, Copiah county, July 13. Rev. George F. Thompson, presiding elder, in the chsir; Isaac V. Enochs, delegate from Georgetown circuit, secretary; Rev. L. R. Redding, assistant secretary.

Thsre are upon this work eleven charges, three of which (Brookhaven, Jackson and Braudywine) were not represented. We regretted this very much, more especially the absencs of Bro. Johnson, who had been called to a family reunion in his native State. There were forty-four msmbers and delegates present, and participated in the deliberations, hesidss the Rev. Dr. Abbsy, Sunday school secretary of the Mississippi Confsrence. Visiting hrothers: Rsv. Dr. Edwards, of North Mississippi Coufersnce, and Rev. A. B. Nicholson, of Mississippi Conference.

Reports were made verhally, taking up ths questions seriatim, and calling the charges in response to thsm.

Pending the cousideration of the first question ("As to the spiritnal state and attendance upon the ordinances and social mestings of the chnrch,") which consumed nearly two days, it was manifest that ths shouts of joy were scarcsly rsstrained by faithful men as thsy wsre enabled to realize with faithful Elijah that God has reserved to himself so many consecrated hearts that continue to witness tho saving grace and redesming love of Jesus; yet sorrow quickly follows when it is known how many are neglecting the means of grace. In some of the charges the prudeutial means of grace are sadly neglected. In others, where these are observed closely, spiritual cujoymont and a growth iu grace, together with joyful anticipations of refreshings from the presence of the Lord, are the fruits. There are strong manifestations that the church is awakening upon this subject, and we are led to hope that the day is near at haud when Methodism, clothed upon with her primitive institutions, shall go forth under the panoply of the Holy Ghost, "conquering and to conquer." Upon the whole, we think the reports nnder this question are hopeful and encouraging. Tho conference passed resolutions urging a closer conformity to the institutions and ordinances of the church as onnd in our Book of Discipline.

The uames of the local preachers were called, and while they gave an account of their labors, their trials, and often of their trinmphs, we thought how wonderfully the institutions of our church are adapted to the wants of Christianity.

Answers to the third question show that while there is considerable awakening upon this subject, there is by far too little attention given to the nnrsery of the church. Sunday schools are established at most of our churches. Most of our Sabbath school children attend preaching. There is some awaksning. Some have been transplanted to the vineyard. Some have even been recommended by our Quarterly Conference as lahorers in the vineyard. There are some well-instituted, well-instructed and flonrishing Sunday schools, with their own financial plans supplying them fully with our Sunday school literatnre. But in the majority of schools there is but little system, small supply of hooks, and nniform lssons nnknown. Our literature is neglected to a grsat extent, and a great want of that harmony of systsm which inspires life in this important department of the church.

The subject of "nnion schools" is causing much thought, hut our able Sunday school secretary thinks it will soon be solved.

Answers to the fourth question indicate that our commissariat is in rathsr bad condition; yet the reports encourage us in this, that they indicate a hetter state of finance than the condition of the country had lsd us to expect.

The "Confsrence financial plan" has been generally adopted as a base, but not exscuted in detail. On three of the chargss about the full amount to date has been collscted; on othsrs there is a large dsficit; yet our pastors are hopeful. What strong faith! When will our people lsarn to hring thsir suhstance into the church, and consecrate their meaus, that God may hless them?

One charge (Crystal Springs) dserves a special eommendation. Plan: Weekly voluntary contributions, in envelopes. Complete success. The Conference hesitatsd (we think wisely) to recommend this plan to the rnral districts. We think that it is indicated that where the Conference plan is earried out hy men who fesl that it is a privilege to be "set over this matter," it is working well.

Answers to the fifth qusstion indicate that our people will—that our pastors, like our blesssd Master, shall have not "where to lay their heads." But two parsonages—two more in contsmplation. This ought not to be so. We can do better. Will we? The conference, by strongly-wordsd resolution, committed themsslves to the erection of parsonages.

Pending the snbject of general education, Brookhaven Collegs was highly eulogizsd by the presiding elder, Bro. Linfisld and others, and warmly recommended to the patronags of our people.

The subject of ministerial education received the hearty indorsement of the conference, and an auxiliary society to the Ministerial Educational Society of the Mississippi Conference was orgauized, with eleven life members. Officers elected: Willis Barnes, president, Crystal Springs; R. C. Hilliard, vice president, Martinsvillo; J. Harvey Thompson, treasurer, Beauregard; J. F. Enochs, secretary, Crystal Springs.

A committee of "live men" was appointed to select and lay off, etc., a suitable lot for the district camp ground. Tho committee was invssted with prerogatives necessary to mako all arrangements for the camp meetiug next fall, at which it is contomplated to hold the District Conference.

Resolutions advising early spring meetings of tho District Conference, in connection with the district stowards' meeting, to plan the work, finances, etc., and fall meeting for summing up the work.

Resolutions disapprobating, in strong terms, informal agreements for allowances and apportionments between pastors and congregations.

Resolutions indorsing the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and recommending it to the universal patronage of our church.

Resolutions of well-merited thanks to the citizens of Hazlehurst.

Lay delegates elected: Rev. E G. Cooke, R. C. Hilliard, J. H. Thompson and J. V. Enochs. Alternates: Rev. W. W. Funches, John Dunniug, Jesse Thompson and Willis Barnes.

The religious exercises were thrown in between our hours of deliberation, strengthening us in faith, reviving us in hope, and making purer our love. Closed on Sunday with Sahbath school exhibition, Quarterly Meeting exercisss, and finally a Sahbath school address hy Dr. Ahbey.

Greensboro District Conference, Alabama Conference.

MR. EDITOR: This confsrence was hsld hy Bishop McTysire at Marion, Alabams, July 7–8, 1871.

With a tolsrably full attendance of the official members, the business was conductsd, without the intervention of committees, in a most harmonious and satisfactory msnnsr.

On ths subject of missions it was ascertained that the Snnday schools are becoming interested in forming missionary societies. In regard to missionsry operations within the district the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That this District Conference recommsnd to ths Alahama Conference the formation of a mission within the bounds of ths district, calling it by ths nams of Dublin; also another hy the name of Clanton.

On the subjsct of churches and parsonages it was ascertained that thsrs ars in the district forty-two and a half churches and six parsonages, generally in good condition.

As to the hest method of keeping up the finances, it was fonnd that the plan of assessments has bsen most successful. On this subject it was

Resolved, That in the judgment of this District Confersnce it is highly important that every memhsr of the church, male and female, young and old, should he impressed with the duty of paying for ths support of the gospel; and the stewards of the different circuits and stations be and are hereby instructed to assess, early in the year, evsry member according to his ahility.

On the circulation of our periodical litsratnre ths following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, 1. That in our opinion ths circulation of our periodicals and hooks is a very important part of our work as officsrs of the church.

2. That we pledge onrselves to renswed effort in the circulation of our literatnre.

3. That it is ths dnty of our ministers, having charge of circuits and stations, to call attention to the subject, publicly and privately, throughout the district.

In reference to ths colored psople this resolution was passed:

Resolved, That we, as members of this District Confersnce, co-operate, so far as may be practicable, with ths colorsd peopls in organizing them into the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America.

Befors preaching, on the night of the seventh, the Bishop ordained Adam Fair.

On the subject of the spiritual condition of the church, and of attendance on the ordinances, it was ascertained that preaching is generally well attended, especially on Sabbath; the sacrament of the Lord's Supper is generally administered once a quarter; children are generally bsptized; prayer meetings, in most places, kept up; class meetings and church meetings kept up only in some places. In several places on the district a spirit of revival is felt. Great interest is almost everywhere manifest in the Sahbath school. Prattville was chosen as the place for holdiug the next District Conference.

An election for lay delegates to ths next Annual Conference was hold, with the following result: J. G. L. Huey, Daniel Pratt, John Massey and C. M. Howard.

Tho following reserves were chosen: J. H. Y. Webb, Dr. S. P. Smith, D. H. Smith aud W. R. Browne.

A resolution of thanks to the psople of Marion and to tho different railroads was then adopted.

After the adjournment of the conference the Bishop congratulated the district and the presiding elder on the condition of the work, and clossd with some wholesome and affectionate admonitions.

JOHN MASSEY, Secretary.

A NERVOUS MAN, whose life was made miserable hy the clatteriug of two blacksmiths, prevailed upon hoth of them to remove by the offer of a liberal compensation. When the money was paid down he kindly inqnired what neighhorhood they intended to rsmove to. "Why, sir," replied Jack, with a grin on his phiz, "Tom Smith moves to my shop, and I move to his."

A LEADING LECTURER classifies his audience as follows: The "still-attentives," the "quick-responsives," the "hard-to-lifts," the "won't-applauds" aud the "get-up-and-go-outs."

OLD LETTERS.

Not a promiscuous collection of good, bad and indiffsrsnt—soms from garrulous heings, othsrs from such as like to flash hsfore you thsir deep spsculations, or pertaining to the daily business of lifs—hut those swset epistles that open to us the innsr chambers of a pure hsart. How few apprsciats this class of letters. The deep suspicion lurking in ths heart catches at the least expansion of the heart's hsat, and coustruss the good intended into some horribls crime contemplated. This springs from the fact that there is so little of nature in the natural heart, and confirms the doctrine of man's depravity. Even grace must be given without measure to euable us to overcoms this revolt against the simplicity of natnre, aud its purifying effects must work long and daily in our hearts before we awake to the conscionsness of a restoration. What has this ramhling to do with old lstters? says ths reader. Not much, replies the writer; but then it is so much after the fashion of man to commsnt upon his old thoughts; that's all.

Now for the old lstters. I have a few, a very few, and to ms they are indeed treasures. I open ous, and some dear frisnd stands bsfore me. I read, and there opens to me a tender and loving heart, there shinss in charming simplicity ths interior beauty of that heart, and from it comes a light and a warmth that kindlss within me a responsive feeling. No rude gaze heholds thsse sacred interchangss, and only whsn the thin vail separating us from eternity shall hs drawn will thsy he known. In thess "voices of the soul" I hear of kind sympathy, a dssire for evsry good thing ueedful; and thsn, better than all, the assurance that neither distance nor absence, the flight of time nor the changing fashions of this world, prevent hearty prayer for every spiritual blessing necsssary. Thus I mused and felt while re-rsading one of thsse cherished msmentoes of an absent frisnd, and whils thus musing there cams a solemn feeling, followed by "a still, small voice," sayiug: "Thou child of clay, dost thou linger over thess heart-breathings of one liks thyself? Hast thou no recollections of thoss many letlers I have sent thee? and do the 'voices' that awaken snch feelings in thy heart, that speak in these human letters, sound sweeter to thee thau those which sweetly speak in my letters? Do you fsol the need of sympathy? Where can you find such love as I offer? Are you in need of food and raiment? Who so competent to supply these requiremonts of thy nature as I, who creats all things? Have I not written for thy comfort that the widow's oil and meal failed uot, aud the raven's wing tired not in hearing supplies to the prophet, and that those who love me are uot forsaken, and their childrsn nover beg? And then do not my letters say to thee, in clear language, that I, your Father, will withhold uo good thiug from them that love me? What more can I say or do? The boundless fullness of my power aud love are exercised for your good. By night and hy day, in the storm and the calm, in joy and sorrow, when health hlushes on your cheeks as well as when pain and fever tear your hody, I, the Author of these so greatly neglected letters, uphold you. Thon mayst in reason keep thine earthly letters and bear the Author's in memory; thou mayst give of thy kindly sympathy to thom and receive theirs iu rsturn; but let not the memory of my letters fade from your mind. Ponder each loving promiss, the outflow of love, and treasure up each threatening, the expression of my disapprobation. Make these, my letters, a 'lamp unto your feet, and a light unto your path.'" Lord, help all thy people to love more thy letters.

INDAMORA.

LAKE CHARLES, June 14, 1871.

A PARIS LETTER says that forty or fifty Americans were killed during the Franco-German war, fighting on the side of the French; that most of them had long been residents of the country, and had adopted its manners, language and customs.

EVILS IN THE CHURCH.

MR. EDITOR: In my last I spoke of the evils of drinking whisky and improper music. Now this kind of music leads us into formality, which is anothsr great evil we have to overcome in our worship. I know that it is urged that instrumsutal music nesd not creats formality in worship. This I admit—it need not. But does it? I have yet to see any church that has adopted the "organ" to do their singing hut is formal in their worship. As a general thing hut few sing, and we are apt to commit that very interesting part of the service to a few to do our praising for us. If these few may do the praising in singing for the whole, why not lst one or two do all the praying? I know that the singing ought not to he conducted in this way; and if it was not, then my objections to this latter-day styls of worship would be withdrawn. I know also that a man ought not to swear or steal or drink whisky. Bnt because thsy ought not to do so, does that put an end to these evils? Having theu entsred upon a new-fangled mode of worship not knowu to our fathers, all things must he dons very decently and in order; consequently it is not very respectable to sing an old-fashionsd hymn, such as

"What wondrous love is this!"

But we must have something new, and especially something that no one can sing but the choir. Ths preacher may read his hymn to the congregation if he has the privilegs of sslecting it, hut after this he must take his seat and let the choir manage the rest. Some places they do away with our mode of worship, and instead of standing to sing, they sit. Now all these ars inroads upon Methodism, and lack a great deal of heing for the hest, or even an improvement on onr old mode of wording the hymn, and letting ths whole congregation sing. I believe that impressions are mads hy lining the hymn that otherwise would not be made. Well, of course it will be wholly out of order now for any of these old brethrsn or sisters to gst happy (if thsy could,) hecause we have quit all that since we got our "organ," and those swest songs that would carry our soul up iu ecstasy can't be sung now. I would not, Mr. Editor, he understood to oppose the "organ" in the church if it can be used with spirituality, and all the people sing, and sing Christian songs, and not operatic chants, and call ths words of the hymn so that auy one can understand what is being sung. These, we think, are some inroads upon our beloved Methodism that are robhing it of that spirituality for which it is so much noted throughout the world.

NOT LIKED.

MR. EDITOR: Permit me to say a few words on matters I deem somewhat important. I have read articles headed "Thiugs I Don't Like," and thus I wish to write. Here, thsn, is a thing I don't like:

The Bishop sends a man to a station in the country, and expects him to do all he can for the welfare of that church. Now if some bright Sunday morning he goes to church, and before entering hears from some brother whom he salutes that "Bro. Jones is going to preach this morning," do you think he will not experience queer sensations? He didn't know that Bro. Jouss was in town; is certain he did not invite him to preach; yet here, in spite of two weeks' labor on the ssrmon that fills his mind—in spite of the fact that himself is pastor of tho church, and for that year has, by church law, exclusive control of the pulpit—in spite of everythiug he knows anything about—here is the stubborn, strauge fact, known to all but himself, that "Bro. Jones is to preach to-day!" Ah! indeed. Well, who is Bro. Jones? "Why he lives down on Pine Tree hayou." Did he send any appointment? "Oh, no, he stopped with Bro. Smith last night, and he made him promise to preach, and sent round this morning and notified everybody."

Thus the pastor of the church, thongh glad to have a worthy brother fill his pulpit, is placed in a bad predicament by the presumption of one of his stewards. Everythi like the respect and courtesy d the pastor has been ignored, and man has been forced in ahead him to take that place which no has a right to take in that way! T ministsr thus invited by the stewa without the permission or kno edge of the pastor, may be one w should and would not be pla before that audisnce but for officiousness of this steward. so is ths pastor situated that w perfsctly aware of this, he ean help it without injuring himself some way or another. GERMAN PEASANT HYMN.

The late Dr. James Hamilton, of London, made the following translation from the German:

Neighbor, accept our parting song,
The road is short, the rest is long;
The Lord brought here, the Lord takes hence,
This is no place of permanence.

The bread, by turns of mirth or tears,
Was thine these checkered pilgrim years;
Now landlord world, shut to the door,
My guest is gone for evermore:

Gone to a realm of sweet repose,
Our convoy follows as he goes;
Of toil and moil the day was full:
A good sleep now!—the night is cool.

Ye village bells, ring, softly ring,
And in the blessed Sabbath bring,
Which from the weary work-day tryst
Awaits God's folk through Jesus Christ.

And open wide, thou gate of peace,
And let this other journey cease;
Nor grudge a narrow couch, dear neighbors,
For slumbers won by life-long labors.

Beneath these sods, how close ye lie,
But many a mansion's in yon sky;
Even now, beneath the sapphire throne,
Is his prepared through God's dear Son.

"I quickly come!" that Savior cries;
Yea, quickly come! this church-yard sighs;
Come, Jesus, come! we wait for thee—
Thine, now and ever, let us be.

ROMAN CATHOLIC ITEMS.

The Methodist notices "Romanism and Government" as follows:

The New York Tablet (Romanist) attempts to define the position of its church relative to the State. A flimsier example of tergiversation, of logical dodging, it would be difficult to find in newspaper literature. It affirms the entire compatibility of American republicanism with its church, and yet, in defining the relation of the latter to government, nullifies entirely this affirmation. Here is the gist of its definition:

"But the authority of the State, held as a trust from God, is held subject to the law of God, and the church is the divinely appointed guardian and judge of that law, whether the natural law or the supernatural law. The State has no right to do or command anything not authorized or permitted by the law of God as interpreted, declared or defined by the infallible church of God; and the faithful are forbidden to obey it when it commands them to do anything the law of God, as declared by his unerring church, forbids or does not permit. This, of course, asserts the supremacy of the spiritual order, and subjects the State, whatever its form, to the law of God as defined by the spiritual authority. This is, as far as we know it, Catholic doctrine. The State is not bound by the opinions of churchmen or priests any more than it is by the opinions of statesmen, but it is bound by what the church teaches and declares is the law of God. The church defines for the faithful the powers of the State, but it is not the medium through which they are necessarily conferred. If the principles declared in the Declaration of Independence and the Bills of Rights adopted by several States are incompatible with this doctrine, it by no means follows that it is not true. They who deny the infallibility of the church must not expect us to admit the infallibility of the State, or of the people, in or out of the convention. We subordinate our politics to our religion, not our religion to our politics; and if the American people do otherwise, so much the worse for them."

This is enough, certainly. Could our republicanism stand one day subjected to such a condition? Has the editor of the Tablet never heard of the "Syllabus?" Does he not know that this document, recognized universally by Romanists as the decision of the church on this very question, denounces nearly every essential principle of American liberty?—that it proscribes our organic doctrines of toleration, of free religious inquiry, of the independence of Church and State, etc.? And what is thus theoretically taught is historically exemplified. The papal system is inherently monarchical and absolute. The present Pope is the personal embodiment and representative of the extremest reactionary ideas of Europe. The "Syllabus" outrages all the progressive ideas of our age. The late Roman Council went as far as any that ever assembled in the dark ages, to defy liberal opinions in politics as well as in religion. The Roman Catholic Church in America tolerates our republicanism only because it must; it compromises here its theoretical and historical principles as a necessity of policy. Let that necessity cease, and no intelligent man who has examined its theory can doubt the result.

The following is an abstract of the recent appeal of the German Catholic theologians to the Roman Catholics of Germany. The appeal has been drawn up by Dr. Dollinger:

"1. We persist in the rejection of the Vaticanian infallibility and dogmas, which concede to the Pope personal infallibility and absolute power in the church, notwithstanding the opposition of the bishops. 2. We persist in the firmly-grounded convictions that the Vaticanian decrees constitute a serious danger for the State and society, and are irreconcilable with the laws and institutions of existing States, and that their acceptance would involve us in an insolnble contradiction with our political duties and oaths. 3. The German bishops show by their differing and contradictory interpretations of the Vaticanian dogmas that they know full well their novelty and are ashamed of them. We deplore such a use of the episcopal office. We deplore that the German bishops have not scrupled to answer in their latest pastoral to the cry of conscience of their dioceses with objurgations of reason and science. We regret the menaces of the bishops as unjustified, their compulsory measnres as invalid and not obligatory. We know that their excommunications cannot deprive the faithful of their good right to the means of grace of the church, or the priests of the right to grant them; and we are resolved not to let our right be curtailed by the censures which have been passed for the furtherance of the false doctrines. 4. We live in the hope that the struggle which has broken ont will, under a higher guidance, be the means to further and to realize the long-desired, inevitable reform of the clerical conditions in the constitution as well as in the life of the chnrch. We hope for a real chnrch regeneration, permitting every civilized Catholic nation to form, according to its inherent qnalities and civilizatory mission, a free member of the body of the nniversal church; permitting the co-operation of clergy and laity in the formation of the life of the church, and the restoration of the chnrch as the head of nniversal culture by a scientific episcopacy and primate. We hope by such a regeneration to be able to approach the highest aim of Christian development, the reuniting of all Christian confessions."

Among the thirty-one signatures appended to the appeal are those of Dollinger, Friedrich, Hnber, Reinekens, Schnlte, Knoodt, Michelis, Stumpf, Lord Acton, Count Moy and others.

FRANCE AND THE TEMPORAL POWER. The following is from a letter in the Debats, by Pere Hyacinthe:

"Facts have proved the inntility of the temporal sovereignty of the Pope for the free exercise of his spiritual authority. The prison of the Pope at the Vatican is a myth that no one here regards as serious, unless it be the victim of it, and in the eyes of whom it has been made to appear a duty. This prisoner, who can see every day from the windows of his palace the crowd of priests and monks peacefully walking through the streets of the city—this prisoner acts toward Italy in a manner that no government in Europe would tolerate. He excommunicates the professors of the university who cannot believe in his infallibility; the officers of the army who wish to remain faithful to their flag; he prohibits the students from following the courses of their masters, and orders the soldiers to desert the service of their king. Let me add that the restoration of the temporal power, if it was not impossible, would be fatal to the cause for which it was said to be necessary. That conviction is not solely mine; I hear it every day in Rome from the mouths of the most enlightened laymen, priests and eminent ecclesiastics who cannot speak openly, but with whom I manage to converse in spite of the secret police of the Cardinal Vicar—for truth obliges me to say that it is not the authority of the Pope which is in danger here, but private life, which is neither free nor respected. 'Since you have got rid of the gag which closed your mouth,' one of those venerable men said to me, 'tell your country boldly that it has been deceived, and that the root of nearly all the evils of the church is that temporal power which is said to be an indispensable condition of its independence and prosperity.' What I wish to say to France is that she is deceived in a manner no less dangerous when she is exhorted, in the name of her offended honor, to attack, or at least to threaten Italy."

IDOLATRY AND INDULGENCES IN ROME. Rev. F. S. DeHass, writing to the Pittsburg Christian Advocate from Rome, says:

"I have been surprised at the amount of idolatry tolerated here. Rome is essentially a pagan city. Idolatry gross as that of Nineveh, or Greece, or imperial Rome is daily practiced in her churches. Go to St. Peter's any day, and you will see hundreds and often thousands kissing the toe of an old bronze statue of St. Peter, though some say it was cast for Jupiter.

"In the Church of St. Agustine there is a marble statue of the Virgin and infant Savior. The image is supposed to possess power to work miracles, and thousands of devotees may be seen crowding her chapel, kneeling before her, kissing her feet and paying her all divine honors.

"The other Sabbath I visited St. Maria Via Lata, built on the supposed spot where Paul "lived two whole years," when in Rome. No church could be more hallowed in its associations or better calculated to inspire one with devotion than this. And yet the whole service consisted in the adoration of a wax doll, about twelve inches long, representing the child Christ. Before this toy the priests bowed and crossed themselves in a hundred ways, as though it was the Almighty himself they were worshiping.

"The sale of indulgences seems to be as common here as that of meat or flour. Over most of the church doors may be seen in large letters: 'Indulgence plenary may be obtained every day for the living or the dead.' Also the most generous grants are made for the performance of certain duties. For instance, attending the Church of Santa Croce on the second Sunday in Advent eleven thousand years of indulgence and remission of all one's sins.

"On many altars you will see inscribed: "Every mass said at this altar liberates one soul from purgatory." Most of the worship rendered in Rome is to secure indulgence in some vice, pardon for some sin, or to fill the coffers of the Pope. Yet this is all tolerated under the shadow of St. Peter's, and in the name of Christianity."

A NEWSPAPER EXCOMMUNICATED.—A writer in the New York Observer says, in a recent letter from Rome, that "the Capitale, an impertinent little newspaper, published in that city, has been solemnly excommunicated by the Pope! The Capitale, it appears, has been very troublesome to the Ultramontane party, finding out their most secret designs, and publishing them. It exposes all their humbugs. Its editors, although not religious men, search the Bible diligently for arguments and proofs with which to confound their enemies. They publish notices of the meetings of the Italian Protestant churches in Rome, and they laugh to scorn all the solemn and stupid attacks made on them in the Ultramoutane papers. Of course this is not to be endured forever. The patience of the paternal heart is at last exhausted, and fearful chastisement has fallen upon the Capitale."

ALL WORK AND NO PLAY.—A man of my acquaintance has two sons—bright, active, intelligent boys. The family are not rich, and as soon as the boys grew old enough they were set to work at such tasks as sawing wood, carrying water, and weeding and hoeing in the garden.

The lads were quite willing to work a part of each day, but thought they ought to have a part for rest and recreation, and again and again they went to their father and asked him to set them a task—so many hours that they must work, or so large a job to get through—after which they might play.

But he only answered them roughly: "No, I won't; I have to work all day, and you must too."

What was the result? The boys were discouraged. If they could never reach the end of their task, what was the use of trying to do it at all? and if they were not allowed any time for rest, for sport and recreation, they would just take it whenever they could get it. So work was dropped, or done in a very indolent manner when the father's eye was not on them. Instead of habits of steady industry those of an opposite character were formed, and there is danger that they may never become good, active business men.—Martha Farquharson, in Sunday School Times.

IS DRUNKENNESS CURABLE?—A writer in Putnam proposes as a cure for the appetite for alcoholic drinks bromide of potassium (a drug to be found at any druggist's,) saying: The first part of the medical treatment in this physical disease requires the immediate removal of the patient from all disturbing influences, of whatever nature. He must have absolute quiet and repose. The patient must take a two weeks' holiday and go to bed, where nothing can trouble him or get at him but one faithful friend. Having obtained twelve twenty-grain powders of the bromide, he takes one, and after a conflict the sedative wins the victory and he sleeps. When he wakes the struggle against the tastes for liquor begins again, and another powder is taken, and so on, until perfect success and glorious victory are attained. The desire for drink will be completely eradicated, and its return will not be likely to occur. During the treatment food should not be taken, unless urgently desired, and then it should be of the most nutritious character. Broths of fowl or beefsteak, and such other means as are best calculated to preserve the tone of the stomach, are to be preferred.

THE NOISY SUPERINTENDENT.—Some time ago a superintendent of a successful mission school was asked to make another school a visit, and afterward, when asked by a friend what he thought of it, gave a reply that has a bit of wisdom as well as fun in it: "If that man would keep still for one Sunday the children would be so surprised that they couldn't make any noise for a month."

THE REIGN OF VICTORIA.

Of the persons who occupied thrones when Victoria's reign began almost all are dead or in exile. Nicholas of Russia, Louis Philippe of France, Ferdinand of Austria, Frederick William of Prussia, Charles-John of Sweden, Leopold of Belgium, William of Holland, Ferdinand of the Two Sicilies, Louis of Bavaria, Maria of Portugal, Sultan Mahmoud, Pope Gregory and others, all have gone beyond that river which every breathing thing must cross, without the aid of bridge or boat or balloon. Don Pedro the Second, of Brazil, is one of the few sovereigns of 1837 who survive—but he was then a child of eleven years. Isabella the Second, the Spanish Queen, "still lives," but she does not reign, being an exile. Mr. Van Buren, who was our President in 1837, has been dead for some years. If we look at the great changes that have taken place since Victoria became Queen, we cannot fail to be struck by their number, for they include the overthrow of the papal temporal power, the conversion of Italy from a number of small countries and foreign dependencies into a united kingdom, the loss of the European leadership by Russia, the destruction of the Germanic Confederation, the defeat of Austria by Prussia, the overthrow of three branches of the house of Bourbon, the restoration of the Bonapartes in France, the creation of two French republics, the conquest of France by the Germans, the fall of Napoleon the Third, the recreation of the German empire under the house of Hohenzollern, the setting up of a new dynasty in Spain, the disestablishment of the Irish Church, the Second British Reform Bill, the Sepoy mutiny, the opening of China and Japan to Western intercourse and influences, the gold discoveries of California and Australia, the establishment of ocean steam navigation, the creation of the electric telegraph, the conquest of Mexico by the United States, the secession war, and the abolition of American slavery and the overthrow of American slaveocratic rule, and many other strange events. Perhaps not the least remarkable of these changes is that which placed Victoria herself on the Mussulman throne of Akbar and Aurungzebe.—Watchman.

IN JANUARY, 1774, James Madison wrote a letter to his college friend, Mr. Bradford, of Philadelphia, which proves that he had already risen superior to the standard of the age, and become a strong and rational adherent of absolute religious freedom. In this letter of familiar friendship, after adverting in no complimentary style to the character of too many of the representatives of the church, both of the clergy and laity, he writes: "There are at this time, in the adjacent county, five or six well-meaning men in close jail for publishing their religious sentiments, which in the main are very orthodox. I have neither patience to hear, talk or think of anything relative to this matter; for I have squabbled and scolded, abused and ridiculed so long about it, to little purpose, that I am without common patience. So I must beg you to pity me, and pray for liberty of conscience for all." In this brief extract we find the germ of the great idea which Mr. Madison carried with him into all his career as a maker of laws and a framer of constitutions, and which he at length had the happiness to see triumphing over the ecclesiastical establishment of his native State, and by his own exertions wrought forever into the very substance of her fundamental law.—Christian Review.

GOOD LUCK.—Some young men talk about luck. Good luck is to get up at six o'clock in the morning. Good luck, if you have only a shilling a week, is to live on eleven pence and save a penny. Good luck is to trouble your head with your own, and let others' business alone. Good luck is to fulfill the commandment, and to do unto other people as we wish them to do unto us. We must plod and persevere. Pence must be taken care of, because they are the seed of guineas. To "get along in this world" we must take care of home, sweep our own doorways clean, try to help other people, avoid temptations, and have truth and faith in God.

THEODORE HOOK once saw an exceedingly pompous man walking in a street in London, whom he immediately accosted thus: "Sir, may I inquire if you are anybody in particular?" He then walked off without waiting for a reply.

A SAW-MILL OWNER of Vigo county, Illinois, on celebrating his wooden wedding recently was presented with ten thousand feet of lumber and thirteen poplar logs.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

REV. NOAH PORTER, D. D., LL. D., has been elected president of Yale College, vice Dr. Woolsey, resigned. The vote in the Board of Curaters was fourteen for Dr. Porter, five for other parties, among the number Hon. W. W. Evarts, of New York.

THE superb and commodious new hall of Natural Science, erected by Orange Judd, Esq., of the Agriculturist and Hearth and Home, New York, for the Wesleyan University, Middletown, Connecticut, was formally presented on Tuesday, the eighteenth of July. Its cost has been a little over $100,000.

THE revisers of the New Testament Company met on Tuesday, June 27, for their eleventh session, in the library of the Deanery, Westminster, the Old Testament Company being now sitting in the Jerusalem Chamber. The company sat seven hours, and considered and concluded the third chapter of St. Mark's gospel.

A MORMON BISHOP recently said to the Methodist minister in Salt Lake City that there were thousands in the Mormon Church who are not really Mormons. "They have come here," said he, "from a variety of reasons; but though nominally Mormons, they are not of us, and in time will break away from us by the thousand."

THE deputation from the American Evangelical Alliance to the Czar of Russia was favorably received by Prince Gortschakoff at Stuttgard, on Saturday last, assurance being given that all oppressive laws against Protestants would shortly be abolished. The address presented by the Alliance consisted of a powerful appeal in favor of religious liberty with especial reference to the condition of the Lutheran population in the Baltic provinces.

A LIBERAL GIVER.—The Lehigh University was founded by the Hon. Asa Packer, of Mauch Chunk, Pennsylvania, in 1866, as a polytechnic institution. The original donation of Mr. Packer was $500,000, most of which has been expended upon the college buildings and houses for the professors. Mr. Packer now makes the following proposals: "The institution is to be hereafter under the auspices of the Protestant Episcopal Church. The tuition is to be absolutely free in all the regular classes. The original endowment is to be increased by $250,000 as soon as the Board of Trustees raises $125,000. A second gift of $250,000 will be bestowed when a second $125,000 is raised by the board. Until the first $125,000 is raised, the generous founder will give $20,000 a year toward the incidental expenses."

A JAPANESE EVANGELIST.—The following interesting statement respecting one of the Japanese students at Rutgers College, New Jersey, named Kozo, and who has become a convert to Christianity, appears in the Lutheran Observer: "As he was treasurer of the other students who were placed in his charge, he wrote to the authorities in Japan that he felt bound, in honor, to inform the government of his conversion and changed purpose in life, in order that they might release him from his responsibility for the other students, and no longer provide for his support. To this he received a reply from the proper official, that he should continue his studies under their auspices as before, and retain his charge of the other students, at the same time sending an increased allowance for his support. Kozo was then called upon and made a brief address, stating the fact of his conversion to Christianity since he came to this country, and declaring his design to devote his future life, to the evangelization of his native land."

THE Irish Wesleyan Conference met at Belfast, June 21. "The proceedings," says the Methodist Recorder, "were marked by a degree of hope and enthusiasm far in advance of what has been witnessed in former times." Fifteen young men were received on trial. Dr. Robinson Scott and Rev. Messrs. Wallace McMullen and William Gorman were chosen representatives to the British Conference. The Rev. William Arthur gave notice of a movement to confer more ample educational advantages on ministers' daughters, and to enlarge those accorded to their sons. The Rev. Robert Crook, LL. D., was appointed Mr. Arthur's successor as principal of the college. Efforts are being made to instruct the Irish-speaking Romanists through the medium of their language. Mr. W. G. Campbell is engaged in this work. An unusual attendance of the laity was observed, attributable greatly to the organization of the Committees of Review, and partly to the new responsibilities which disestablishment imposes on the voluntary churches.

THE religious system of Auguste Comte has been put in practice in London by a little band of Positivists, whose church is in Chapel street, Bedford Row. The English correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial gives a brief account of this assemblage. The audience seldom numbers over forty people. The head of the congregation is Richard Congreve, formerly fellow and tutor of Wadham College, Oxford. He is described as "a tall, handsome man, with a fair complexion, a serene and clear eye, and a high, full forehead. While he rejects all the arts and tricks of fine talking, there is a fascination in his simple and vigorous English, and he wields all the impressiveness which attends one convinced of his own principles." The temple of Positivism is arranged on Comtean principles. One important feature of the creed is the division of the year into thirteen months, each month having its own calendar saint, either a great poet or philosopher or discoverer. "Their year is further subdivided—almost as minutely as the Christian year, the days being associated with nearly all of the great poets, artists, composers, etc. In their little temple in Bedford Row there are portraits or busts of those great men—Plato, Bacon, Condorcet, Hegel, etc., and the discourses generally refer to them as representative characters. * * * The usual formulas of ascription and prayer are dispensed with. One of the most prominent men connected with the society is Dr. Bridges, poor-law inspector of the London district, who is one of the finest scholars in London. Prof. Beesley, of London University College, is another celebrity of this school, and the well-known Frederick Harrison is another. Dr. Congreve, being now absent on the continent, these gentlemen are filling his desk, and their lectures are producing considerable impression. Dr. Bridges recently gave an admirable discourse entitled 'Love is our Principle; Order is the Basis; Progress is the end.'" Only one discourse is preached each week. John Stuart Mill, G. H. Lewes, and his wife, "George Elliot," although in general sympathy with the system, have not attached themselves to the Chapel street enterprise.—Christian Union.

WHAT we have to do in Spain and Portugal, for example (and probably in other nominally Christian countries,) is suggested by the evidence that a deep religious popular yearning for gospel truth and for Christ as the One Mediator is breaking forth into churches of converted men, one after another, so fast that we scarcely keep the count of their number. Few of us are, perhaps, aware that so far back as the eighth of last January the sixth new chapel for evangelical worship was dedicated in Madrid, the capital of (so lately) priest-ridden, intolerant Spain—a chapel that will accommodate from six to seven hundred people. This sudden and strong development of evangelical ideas and yearnings, so surprising to many, is going on all over Europe in very considerable degree. Indeed, it comes not from without, but from within. We are witnessing the commencement of a mightier religious reformation than that of the sixteenth century; and one on which, we may believe, no Spanish Inquisition will fall with annihilating or even checking power. But while we are not to go there with missions to originate movements, as we go to heathen lands, we are to go there to supplement, to foster, to encourage, to aid as we may, out of our longer experience and more abundant trial of the evangelical faith of Jesus, those who are just being led by his Spirit to its blessed light and peace. What is thus true of Spain and Portugal is not less true of Italy. Her "Free Italian Church," representing so many self-governing, separate churches, is not a creation from without. Foreign Christian agency had a little to do with helping and with guiding, but the movement itself was from within. The Italian people were hungering, and Rome did not feed them. The famine was sore in the land; and, when the barriers were broken down and permission given, the people flew upon the bread of life. Witness the rapidity with which, through one agency alone, more than six hundred thousand Testaments were distributed—multitudes of them sold—in Spain. Witness also the avidity with which the people of Italy have seized on the Bible. We are to prosecute our work among them, then, not as among the heathen, but on a system which shall recognize and honor and put faith in what has already been done in the way of preparation by that poor representation of Christianity they have had in Romanism. It gave enough, it preserved enough of the old faith, however encumbered by its own sinful falsehoods against the truth, to make many real Christians in its communion, and to awaken this deep, unsatisfied hungering in a multitude of other souls. And now Providence is making us to see this by this sudden and surprisingly rapid formation of evangelical communities and churches as fast as the yoke of repression is broken.—Independent.

Bishop Keener left Ocean Springs on Tuesday, August 1, for the Pacific coast. He goes, of course, by way of St. Louis, and expects to spend Sunday, the sixth instant, in Kansas City, and will then proceed to San Francisco. The Bishop has promised us a series of letters, and new subscribers ordering the paper within the next few weeks will be in time to enjoy them.

We have reached the beginning of August and New Orleans is enjoying the best of health. No yellow fever has appeared, and there is nothing as yet to excite apprehension on the subject. At no time since the war have we noticed more activity in building and repairing, and our business men are looking forward to an early and prosperous fall trade. Western produce and provisions are cheap, and the prices of cotton and sugar are high.

Martha Washington College.—This institution is one of the best for the education of girls. The location at Abingdon, Virginia, is most favorable for health, and is easily reached by rail from any point South or West. President Arbogast having resigned to accept the presidency of the Kentucky Wesleyan University, Prof. R. W. Jones, of Petersburg, has been elected in his place. We believe there will be no falling off in the high character and excellence of the college under its new president, as he is an experienced educator, and a graduate of the University of Virginia. Dr. Cunnyngham still retains his place as a member of the faculty. For particulars see advertisement.

We are pained to hear of the death of Mr. D. C. Wood, son-in-law of Rev. William Finn, of the Mississippi Conference. He died in great peace at Nashville, Tennessee.

The Mission Church being built by the Rev. W. M. Patterson, says the Western Methodist, on Georgia and Tennessee streets, in this city (Memphis,) was blown down by the heavy storm that occurred on the night of July 18. The house was weatherboarded and sheeted, ready for shingling. The timbers, door and window frames were badly broken to pieces by the fall. The pastor proposes to rally his forces at once, and rebuild the house according to the original design.

Atheism in Paris.—Pasteur Fisch, writing from Paris, says the atheistical party have been making the most of their opportunity. In the government schools irreligion and atheism have been methodically inculcated. He tells the following story: A little girl who goes to a commercial school in the week, but comes to Pasteur Fisch's school on Sunday, said the other day with great sorrow: "The mistress tells us that there is no longer a good God. Who, then, will make me grow big? I must always remain little now."

DECEIT IN THE WORK OF THE LORD.

The curse pronounced upon him "that doeth the work of the Lord deceitfully" calls the Christian to a careful examination. Negligence, as the marginal exposition, does not greatly affect the meaning. There is a pretension to obedience and devotion which may mislead the judgment of others, or there is a degree of service which satisfies the conscience of the partially consecrated soul. The thought that God accepts work carelessly done is also part and parcel of the delusion. To do the work of the Lord negligently is to do it deceitfully. In negligence we practice a deception upon ourselves, and also upon others. The commands of God are willfully bent and modified to suit our own tastes and desires, and a blemished offering is laid upon the altar. Saul was guilty when, from covetousness or from religious considerations, he failed to obey the letter of his commission to destroy the Amalekites. The sheep and the oxen might have been spared for the altar, but no plea of piety could excuse disobedience. "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams."

The services of the Sabbath and the observance of divine worship may be the ground of exculpation for a work of worldliness and religious indifference, and acts of devotion may be set off against a formidable array of sins. The child who devoted his property to God was, by the corrupt Jewish tradition, released from the obligation of supporting his parents. By saying it is a gift—corbau—the command to "honor thy father and mother" was set aside as inoperative. One of the most solemn duties was evaded by the plea of giving to God what was needful to carry out an express commandment of the decalogue. The Jewish doctors have their successors and followers in the Romish communion, where the greatest stress is laid upon keeping fasts and attending to formal acts of devotion, confession and penance, while sins of theft, drunkenness and other grave immoralities are absolved with comparatively little trouble. The doctrine of indulgences, and of absolution upon condition of counting beads and prayers, is a familiar illustration of the pious deceptions of religious error and superstition. The root of the matter, however, is in the sinful heart, and this composition for sin crops out in many ways. Religion is substituted for morals, and prayers and alms-giving make amends for a godless life. Men are compounding for their sins by setting off against them such works of piety and benevolence as are least onerous to perform. Nothing is more certain than that men thus deceive themselves in the work of the Lord. Jews, Romanists and Protestants do it in their formal worship and in their partial conformity to the spiritual requirements of the divine law. There are thousands building upon the sand, to be swept away in the great day of revelation—multitudes whose religion has served no better purpose than to blind them to the ruin which will overtake them at last.

The work of the Lord is something more than a tactual relation to sacraments, and more, even, than the inward grace of the heart. It embraces the great field of personal labor, ministering to the destitute, seeking and saving sinners, and toiling and giving for the spread of Christ's kingdom. To do this work negligently is to do it deceitfully. Christians are deceiving themselves, and they are mocking God, if they suppose that a partial service will be accepted. It may be defective in the sacrifice, the believing prayer, the heartiness and painstaking which ought to attend the performance. We may compare the spirit and manner of our own work with the way in which we do the work of the Lord. There should be at least the same vigilance, the same industry, the same exercise of the mind in planning, and equal readiness and energy in the execution. If our own work rests heavily upon our thoughts, and intrudes upon the hours of repose, so should the work of the Lord. To build up the church should occupy us quite as much as to build up our own fortunes. Like the pious King of Israel, we should be ashamed to live in a house of cedar while "the ark of God dwelleth within curtains." In our several offices in the church we should carry the zeal and thrift which mark our secular pursuits. The steward may do the Lord's work negligently and be very attentive to his own. So also with preachers who plant judiciously, and buy and sell shrewdly, and who are remiss in their holy calling. Trustees who look carefully after their own title deeds and conveyances, and keep their lives and property well insured, sometimes leave the church and parsonage in a loose and unsafe condition. Professional and business men meet their appointments sharply, while they forget, or for trivial reasons fail to attend, the official meetings of the church. There is listlessness, indifference and impatience in District or Quarterly Conference, while the same men on a police jury, or at a meeting of bank or railroad directors, would be wide awake and deeply interested.

To insist that Christian men should not be more negligent about the Lord's work than they are about their own is, indeed, a low standard, but we generally fail in reaching it. "The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light," but we should aim to make the reverse of this true. Not only in wisdom, but in enterprise and zeal should the Christian outstrip the world. The enterprises of the church need the largest infusion of business sense and energy, and it is our duty to bring them prominently into its affairs. In reference to the law of religious giving, negligence is a chronic evil, scarcely to be cured until men get where money is no longer wanted for any purpose. Underlying it are doubtless ignorance, avarice and perverted convictions of duty; but it is largely a matter of negligence and deception. Giving is a work of the Lord, if the Lord has any work in the world; and yet in nothing is so much carelessness. There is want of disposition, want of system, want of conviction. Where a man devises liberal things for himself, he is a churl here. Where he meets his own obligations promptly, the drafts of heaven are dishonored or but grudgingly and imperfectly met. He is careful to protect his own paper and to maintain his own credit, while a bankrupt missionary treasury or a church mortgage gives him no uneasiness. A fire or a failure of a crop, or some unlucky venture in trade, strips a man of thousands of dollars, and he meets the loss and gets along very well; but to part with half the amount as a gift to God would be ruinous! Owing to this negligent way of giving, or of not giving, there are embarrassed colleges and churches, suffering preachers and destitute mission fields all over the land. In this thing, as in many others, the work of the Lord is done negligently and deceitfully. Christians are deceiving themselves as to the measure of their ability and as to the strength of their obligations. There are few in any church who are girded and braced for full and honest work for God, and who do not in some way fall under condemnation for the manner in which they are doing it. There is slackness and indifference precisely where the greatest alertness and the most untiring energy are demanded.

EUROPEAN CORRESPONDENCE.

Brussels, July 11, 1871.

My Dear Stewards: On Thursday last I stood on two spots historical for scenes of death. The one was Tower Green, within the precincts of the Tower of London, where Anne Boleyn and Catherine Howard, wives of Henry the Eighth, of England, met their unhappy fate. The other was where the good man met his fate. I felt it to be quite on the verge of heaven. It was the room in which John Wesley died. I ascended the steps which led to it with a very conscious dread and awe, similar to that which I have often experienced when summoned to a death-bed side. I thought I was going to see him die. Great, immortal man! In vain shall his biographers, who note exceptions to his character and his administration of the affairs he had in hand, affect a just impartiality. The true impartiality would be to recognize him before men what he was before God—a perfect man. I stood by his grave in City Road Chapel yard. Hard by are the tombs of Richard Watson, Joseph Benson, Jabez Bunting and John Bunyan; and just across the street, in Bunhill Fields Cemetery, are the graves of Susannah Wesley, the happy mother, Isaac Watts, and others of Methodist story. Sacred precincts, those, I judge. In the same grave-yard is a beautiful white marble shaft erected to Daniel DeFoe, author of Robinson Crusoe, that will be the delight of children as long as the English tongue survives, and inscribed: "Representing the contributions of seventeen hundred persons." A curious epitaph met my eye there also, which I transcribed on a card for you: "Sacred to the memory of Captain John Cheesmont, who came to an anchor in a place of Rivers and Broad Streams, within the Veil of the Fair Havens, on the twentieth day of February, 1783, in the fifty-second year of his voyage."

As to London in general, my curiosity has been gratified, my tastes have been pleased and my stock of information has been increased; but with respect of the great facts of human life—sin, labor, sorrow, goodness—Solomon's words have received a fresh confirmation before my eyes: "There is nothing new under the sun." London is a great city, of course—say the greatest in the world, as it is the wealthiest; but in its population it is only a vast mass of people intent upon personal and selfish aggrandizement. A population of three millions, however, is inconceivable, even when you are in the midst of it. They throng the streets in a mighty tide—streets, by the way, that are a tangled knot of a thousand involutions. By a little inattention, or the slightest mistake, the stranger, if striking out, may find himself suddenly back at the point he started from; or, if returning, may find himself on a straight course for the antipodes. The Metropolitan underground railroad is one of the wonders of the city, stretching around almost the entire circumference underground. Long, crowded trains follow each other at intervals of about three minutes, from station to station, that are only about two minutes apart. Leaving the underground, you may take a train that will convey you in places over the tops of the houses, their very roof-peaks literally under your track. Thus it is London over you and London under you, and London everywhere around you. You fly along for miles and inquire: "What place is that?" "London." So that hereafter I shall find it convenient, when I am asked the name of some town or village with which I am unacquainted, to answer: "Loudon." Hyde Park would hold a very respectable city for America, and Regent's Park another, and Peckham Rye perhaps another, yet these are spots of remarkably rural aspect in the very heart of this great city.

I mail this letter to-night at Brussels, hoping to keep up my regular weekly communication with you. Here I am surrounded by the French-speaking people. I find my little French valuable as a source of amusement, if for nothing else. For example, I asked a gentleman a question in French on the street, inquiring my way, and he answered me in English. He evidently understood the question, but concluded that I could understand better an answer in English. Comment is unnecessary. W. V. Tudor.

Oak Grove Academy, Meigs county, East Tennessee, is an institution for the education of boys, and offers great inducements on the score of economy and a healthy country. Prof. J. T. Shanklin has accepted the principalship, and will devote himself to the building up of the academy. The advertisement appears in our columns this week.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. Elizabeth Kinnear, the widow of the Rev. David Kinnear, died at Jackson, Louisiana, on the twenty-seventh of January, 1871.

She was born in Malone, Franklin county, New York, October 14, 1807. Her parents were Noah and Mary Lee. In the seventeenth year of her age she embraced religion and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1824 she began to teach a school in the neighborhood of her home, and continued to do so until 1839. In that year she was solicited by the general missionary secretary, Dr. Nathan Bangs, to take charge of a mission school in Oregon, and she was quite ready to undertake it, but her family were opposed to her going to so distant a field, and she at length yielded to their wishes. She subsequently agreed to take charge of a class in the male department of the contemplated Indian Manual Labor School in the territory west of Missouri, under the Rev. Thomas Johnson, presiding elder of the Indian district. When the time came for her to leave home upon this service her relatives and friends assembled at her father's, and with prayer and song and solemn valedictory bade her God-speed on the errand of mercy. On the twentieth of March she arrived at Pittsburg, and there met the Rev. Wesley Browning, the station minister, and the Rev. J. C. Berryman, then agent for the school to which she was going. A steamboat was chartered, named the Shawnee, goods were purchased for the school and mission, and the missionary company was embarked, consisting of Rev. W. Browning and family, Rev. J. C. Berryman, and Miss Lee. On the fifteenth of April they arrived at the Rev. Thomas Johnson's, in the Indian Territory. For the time Miss Lee was assigned to the government school at the Kickapoo mission, in the place of the Rev. David Kinnear, then absent on a visit to his friends in Ohio.

At the session of the Missouri Conference, which met at Fayette, October, 1839, the Revs. W. Browning and David Kinnear were appointed to the New Indian Manual Labor School, and Miss Lee was also added to its corps of teachers. Six hours of the school-day were devoted to teaching and six to manual labor. As the Indian pupils were all boarders, and there was no going home, the care necessary was incessant, week-days and Sunday, from four in the morning until ten at night.

In about one year after Miss Lee entered upon this work she was united in marriage with the Rev. David Kinnear. It was no ordinary event when this holy pair were united in wedlock. It was on the tenth of March, 1840. They both continued at regular work until the middle of the afternoon. The Rev. Wesley Browning performed the ceremony and gave the certificate, in which he appositely says: "There appearing to me no lawful cause or just impediment to hinder the same." The several missions were well represented on the occasion—the Rev. Thomas Johnson, superintendent, and wife, Rev. J. C. Berryman, of the Kickapoo mission, Rev. L. B. Statler, of the Delaware mission, Rev. W. Johnson and wife, from the Kauzas mission, Rev. N. Talbot, from the Peoria mission, and the Rev. E. T. Perie, from the Potawatomie mission; the Rev. B. Johnson, Rev. Mr. Carter and family, Mr. Kline and family, the mechanics and workmen then employed at the institution, several "respectable Indians," and about fifty Indian children—in all about eighty persons. In a characteristic note the Rev. David Kinnear, in speaking of it, says: "This wedding was in a heathen land. There were people present from the Eastern, Middle, Western and Southern States, and also from Europe, and Indians from more than six different tribes; and notwithstanding all this, there was not a single person that spoke or acted improperly or disrespectfully. So much for the influence of the gospel in a heathen country." It was indeed a day worthy of the presence of Europe and America when these noble spirits came together. Never were two people better suited to each other. For simplicity, faith, steadfastness, purity, and zeal in God's cause they were equally pre-eminent. They exemplified the power which Christianity has in making ordinary talents effective to the spread of God's kingdom. And if we may judge of events by the happiness which they diffuse throughout society, the marriage of royal parties does not deserve a more detailed notice.

In 1841 her husband was appointed to Independence circuit, Missouri Conference, she continuing in the school. In 1842, his health failing, he located, and they "set off for the sunny South, with the faint hope that health would there be restored." They there first appeared at a camp meeting, then being held near Woodville, Mississippi. In 1842 he was employed to fill Opelousas station, Louisiana, where she opened a school and kept it up for three years, which was not only self-sustaining, but profitable. The next year they were sent to Chicot circuit. I say "they," for she filled no small part of the appointment. Having "a sound mind," gifted in prayer, in leading class, in the Sabbath school, and able to discharge all the offices of a pastor except that of filling the pulpit, she left upon the churches in that part of the State an impression of her saintly devotion and diligence, fervor in the cause of Christ which still remains to strengthen the hands of the ministers of God. She had lost an arm in early life, yet could thread her needle, sew, and do all the work of an housewife with as much readiness as any one. This was matter of much wonder, and often awakened a sympathy for the preacher and wife, which they never failed to turn to account for the church. In 1845 her husband was appointed to a mission among the colored people in Madison parish. Here her health gave way, and the next year (1846) they were sent to the Opelousas colored mission, where the Lord was with them, and much good was done. Her health, however, continued to decline, and this year was spent, from the 1st of May to October, in a visit to Ohio. In 1848 her husband was appointed to Moreau St. Church. It was to them "a year of great trials and afflictions." But they attended to the station, the sick and the poor. The church was unfinished and involved in a law suit, and the prospect was far from encouraging. Her husband prayed to fainting, and then she held up his arms. I shall never forget the confident way in which they could look into an impenetrable night and affirm that "Moreau Street" would certainly be finished and all would right. They did indeed fully realize their expectation, and saw the church dedicated during his pastorate. In 1850 they were sent to Wesley and Soule chapel (colored), New Orleans. His health and eyesight failed, and they spent a large part of that year in Ohio. In 1851 he was appointed to the Opelousas district. She traveled constantly in company with her husband around the district, and, in his own words, "she was more popular among the people than he was, and they gave her much encouragement." All the Quarterly Meetings were duly attended, and though he was extremely feeble and suffered constantly from a complicated chronic disease, yet this faithful pair held steadily on without intermission, and did a full year's work. Wherever they went they advocated and testified to the Wesleyan doctrine of entire holiness of heart and life, not more by precept than by example. Not only religious people, but the most irreligious were profoundly impressed with their energy and charity. Persons who were notoriously hostile to Methodism and to Christians on several occasions made them valuable considerable presents in money.

Upon the complete superannuation of her husband they removed to Jackson, Louisiana. There she taught a school of little children to help out in their support. During the war they not only lived by Providence, but were able to fur-

...ny a stranger and famished sol-...r with food. In this position, as ...every other, their light shone to ...e glory of their Father in heaven. ...ways cheerful, always hospitable, ...ways prayerful, always zealous for ...e Master, it was only necessary to ...ow them to feel the blessedness ...d beauty of a godly life. BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

REINDEERS, DOGS AND SNOW SHOES. By Richard J. Bush, late of the Russo-American Telegraph Expedition. New York: Harper & Brothers, publishers, 1871.

This volume is a narrative of travel and exploration in Siberia. The author was connected with an expedition having for its object the establishment of a telegraph line to connect Europe with America, extending through high northern latitudes, crossing Behring Straits, extending to St. Petersburg, and thence diverging to various points. The author spent the most of 1865, 1866 and 1867 in the inhospitable regions of northern Europe and Asia, and has collected a large amount of information concerning the countries through which he passed. The book abounds in incident and adventure, and is most readable and entertaining throughout. The illustrations are numerous and well executed. The volume is a large 12mo, 518 pages, elegantly bound. For sale by Ellis & Brother, New Orleans.

PINK AND WHITE TYRANNY. By Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe. Boston: Roberts Brothers, 1871.

This is called a Society novel, and is in Mrs. Stowe's characteristic style. The author requests her readers to "call this little sketch a parable." Our readers may call it what they please. The tone is said to be wholesome, and the moral good. For sale by Eyrich, New Orleans.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE for this month has a most attractive table of contents. We note especially: The Great War of 1870; The Politics of Women; American Journalism; Something about the Isles of Shoals; The Copper Fever in California. Our Monthly Gossip and Literature of the Day are entertaining and suggestive. The notice of American Religion is, however, altogether too favorable. John Weiss is not fit for commendation in any way.

THE UNIVERSITY MONTHLY for June and July has a number of good articles. Among them are: The Public Schools of Louisville; Learnt; Sectional Education; Storm Signals, No. 3; School Government.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL JOURNAL, published by Carlton & Lanahan, New York, contains the usual amount of valuable matter for teachers and scholars.

THE LITTLE CORPORAL for August maintains its long-conceded claims as one of the best periodicals for children published anywhere.

TYERMAN'S new Life of Wesley says that Thomas Maxfield was not the first of Wesley's lay preachers. Maxfield was not converted till May 21, 1739, yet in June of the same year John Cennick, the converted land surveyor, was employed by Wesley in preaching to the Kingswood colliers. Cennick, though not an educated man, essayed poetry, two of his hymns commencing:

"Jesus, my all, to heaven is gone," and,

"Children of the heavenly King,
As we journey let us sing."

These hymns were very popular—and for that matter are yet popular with the masses—but they never passed muster in the critical eyes of Wesley.

JOHN L. SEHON, ESQ., only son of the Rev. E. H. Sehon, D. D., died last week at his father's residence in the city of Louisville, after a long and painful illness.

WHAT a difference it makes whether you put Dr. before or after a man's name!

Obituaries.

MRS. ELIZABETH JULIAN, wife of Mr. G. W. Julian, was born in Franklin county, Alabama, May 4, 1820, and died in Fayette county, Alabama, June 2, 1871.

She professed religion in the thirteenth year of her age, and afterward joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in which she lived an exemplary member until her death. She possessed a meek and quiet spirit, was amiable in her disposition, and deeply pious. In all the relations of life she was faithful. In her sickness she manifested a degree of resignation that was characteristic of the true Christian. She conversed freely about dying, but felt no fear. Her only regret was leaving her husband and children, for whom she possessed an undying affection, and for whom she would have still lived and labored. There was no cloud nor doubt upon her mind—all was right; and when death came she said: "I am ready." The community feels the loss of such a Christian. "Earth is poorer, but heaven is richer."

E. NICHOLSON.

MRS. HARRIET ELIZABETH SCARBOROUGH, wife of Mr. A. L. Scarborough, died on the morning of the thirtieth of June, near Osyka, aged forty-nine years, four months and nine days.

She was formerly a resident of Meridian, Lauderdale county, Mississippi. She had long been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. I saw her frequently during her protracted illness, which was of such a character as to greatly impair the clearness of her mind. During her lucid moments, when questioned as to her prospects beyond the grave, she always spoke confidently of the hope which sustains the Christian in passing through the shadow of the valley of death. Although racked with pain at times, yet she murmured not at her afflictions, but, as if to catch a view of the promised land, her soul would burst forth in singing the praises of God. About twelve hours before her death she fell asleep, and apparently was not in any pain. Thus she passed away without a struggle.

She leaves a husband and nine children to mourn her loss; but no doubt their loss is her gain. May the Lord prepare them all to meet her on that bright morning in heaven.

A FRIEND.

BRO. THOMAS C. BICKHAM was born in Washington parish, Louisiana, on the seventeenth of March, A. D. 1818; was married to Elizabeth Magee on the thirtieth of January, 1840, and departed this life, in bright hope of a blissful immortality, on the twenty-seventh of June, 1871.

Bro. Bickham joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South early in life, in which he lived a faithful member until his death. He was a sufferer for many years before he died. Some twenty years ago a small scab made its appearance on his face, which proved to be a cancer. For seven years he and his friends had some hopes of having it cured, but all in vain, for it gradually grew worse, and for many years before he died he had no hopes of ever getting well, but anxiously awaited his Master's call. While he knew he might be of great service to his family while living, yet his chief desire was to depart and be with Christ. He felt assured that the Lord would provide for his family. His last days, while they were days of suffering, were his best and happiest days. He often talked to his family and friends about the goodness and love of God, and urged upon them the necessity of seeking his favor.

It was my privilege to visit him frequently during the last few months of his existence on earth, and I never saw any one more resigned to the will of God in all things than Bro. Bickham seemed to be. He invariably got happy when he heard good singing, and he seemed anxious to have

"Music charm him last on earth,
And greet him first in heaven."

Bro. Bickham suffered a great deal, and at times his mind was in such deep sympathy with his body that it wandered in an uncertain maze. But it is all over now.

He leaves a wife and eleven children to mourn his loss. May they follow him as he followed Christ.

H. P. LEWIS.

Died, after years of declining health, on the ninth of June, 1871, Mrs. CLARISSA WHITNEY, of Jefferson county, Mississippi, widow of the late Judge J. M. Whitney, of precious memory, in the seventy-fourth year of her age.

Mrs. Whitney was well known to a large circle of relatives and friends, including many of our aged ministers. For more than half a century she has been a member of the Methodist Church, and through good and evil report has maintained a steadfast allegiance to the church of her first love. Of a talented and wealthy family, but not distinguished for piety, nor for any special predilection for her church, she embraced it with the ardor of a soul aflame with the love of God, and clung to it her life-long because she enjoyed the life and power of the religion of Christ in its communion. She was a Methodist of the old school and highest type—a class-meeting Methodist—rejoicing in a conscious experience of the divine favor, and always attesting with fervid zeal the realization in her own heart of the profound and unvarying conviction that her salvation, and that of her house, was assured. This ruling conviction of her life was strong in death. Many a time has the writer, during his acquaintance of a quarter of a century, heard the cheering declaration from her lips, in times that tried her soul, that the great faith of her life did not fail her. She could not doubt the faithfulness of the divine promise, and wondered that others could; and there have been many occasions, in that period, to test the genuineness of that faith. Many of her loved ones having preceded her to the better land, she never failed to have her bleeding heart abundantly comforted with the great consolation that her dead lived, although in several instances she was not permitted to wipe the death-damp from their brows, and whisper words of cheer and hope to their hearts in the death struggle.

Never can be effaced from the memory of her children and grandchildren the triumph of this aged servant of God, our mother, and her dying testimony and her last exhortation, and how sweetly she fell asleep in Jesus after life's fitful dream was o'er. Such a legacy bequeathed to her household is more to be prized than all earthly treasures, and would not be exchanged therefor by her sorrowing family. As long as she could whisper a word, the dying saint gave the same cheering assurance of a consciousness of the divine presence and the divine favor. Several of her grandchildren have since consecrated themselves to God. Surely none of them can forget the promises she exacted of them to meet her in heaven. God grant that her lifelong faith may be realized in the salvation of her house—her children and children's children. She did not forget those who were absent while exhorting those who were present—five children and their companions, and twenty-six grandchildren.

Mr. Editor: Among your New Advertisements I notice one of the "Woman's Friend Washing Machine;" and if you will allow me I will say a word or two in regard to it, for the benefit of any who might like to have an outsider's opinion of it. Walking down Camp street some days since, I noticed one of these machines in front of a store, and, interested as I always am in everything that promises to be labor-saving and useful, I stopped to examine it. My first thought was: Here is the true principle on which to construct a machine for washing clothes. A day or two after, having consulted my good wife, I ordered one sent to my house; and having had it tested most thoroughly, under my own eye, I do not hesitate to say that its performance comes fully up to all that Mr. Thompson, the proprietor and manufacturer of it in this city, claims for it. The machine does its work, and does it well. In the time specified in the advertisement; and if the person managing it is active in handling clothes, and putting them through the "Wringer," it will be found that the job of washing is one that is soon over with.

Argyle Bitters—Argyle Bitters.—A FEW WORDS FOR EVERYBODY.—These Bitters, so favorably known throughout the country for the last fifteen or sixteen years, have recently been reduced in price, while their purity and efficacy remain the same as in former years. They are manufactured of pure, full-strength Bourbon Whisky, and medicinal agents selected carefully and solely for this purpose. They are warranted pure and unadulterated.

They are anti-periodic in their effects, and are known to have warned off the baneful influences of malarial poison by their timely use.

They are known to have cured Intermittent Fever by their use alone, and are safe for any age, and are retained by the most delicate stomachs.

They are anti-bacchanalian, tonic, alterative and invigorating, and a certain preventive against Dyspepsia.

It is the safest, pleasantest and most efficacious family medicine now used. aug3 1m

MARTHA WASHINGTON COLLEGE,
ABINGDON, VIRGINIA.
The College of the Holston Conference.

THE TWELFTH ANNUAL SESSION of this well-known institution will begin OCTOBER 4, 1871, and continue forty weeks.

FACULTY.

R. W. JONES, M. A., of the University of Virginia, President.

Rev. W. G. E. CUNNYNGHAM, D. D., Professor of Moral Philosophy and Belles Lettres.

Miss MAGGIE J. TUCKER, Preceptress.

Miss ANNIE M. RHODES, Drawing and Painting.

F. L. FUNK, Professor of Music, with a full corps of assistants in each department.

Board and English tuition, for term of twenty weeks, from $95 to $105.

No extra charge for Latin or Greek. Charges for the other branches moderate. All charges to be paid in advance.

The course of instruction embraces every subject of a solid and finished education.

The system of instruction is that of the University of Virginia, at which the President graduated as Master of Arts.

The college buildings are substantial brick structures, commodious, comfortable and elegant.

The grounds have been laid out with exquisite taste, and present an appearance of surpassing loveliness.

All the associations and surroundings are such as to cultivate the taste and refine the feelings.

Abingdon, situated on the Virginia and Tennessee railroad, eight miles from Emory and Henry College, and fifteen from Bristol, amid the mountains of southwestern Virginia, is noted for the beauty and grandeur of the surrounding scenery, a balmy atmosphere, general healthfulness and refined society. Mineral waters abound in its vicinity.

Parents in the South cannot find a place in the United States where the influences are more favorable for the perfect development of the physical constitution, and where educational advantages of a higher order are afforded.

For catalogue or any additional information address the President or

MONTGOMERY FEMALE COLLEGE,
Christiansburg, Virginia.

THE EXERCISES of this institution will be resumed on the eighteenth of SEPTEMBER next, under the presidency of Rev. Samuel K. Cox, D. D., assisted by an able faculty.

The course of instruction is exact, thorough and progressive; the situation unsurpassed for healthfulness and accessibility. The college building, which is one of the finest school edifices in the State, is located on the very summit of the Alleghany mountains, two thousand one hundred feet above tide-water, near the Atlantic, Mississippi and Ohio railroad, the great thoroughfare of travel between the North and the South.

Pupils from a distance board in the President's family, and receive parental attention and oversight. Those from the malarious districts of the South can remain at the institute during the summer vacation at the same rate for board as during the session.

CHARGES.

Board, for term of twenty weeks	$75 00

OAK GROVE ACADEMY.

THE EXERCISES of the above institution were opened on Monday, JULY 31, 1871.

Students can at this institution, at comparatively no expense, prepare themselves to enter the senior classes of the best colleges, where they can acquit themselves with as much honor as those who have spent $1,500 to $2,000 in the acquisition of an education.

TUITION PER TERM OF FIVE MONTHS.

First class	$6 25
Second class	10 00
Third class	12 50
Fourth class	15 00

Board and washing can be obtained, in good families, at $2 per week. Students wishing to board themselves can have cabins free of charge.

The locality of the institution being in one of the most healthy portions of East Tennessee, certainly recommends itself to the young men of the South, who should always remember that while they are cultivating that higher type of their nature, they should also be preserving or restoring a sound constitution, without which there can be no great enterprises.

CORONA.

CORONA STRIVES TO JUSTIFY ITS name,

THE CROWN OF SCHOOLS

for the higher education of women, by judiciously combining in its scheme the spectapoints of excellence found in all other schools. It aspires to superiority in all departments—literary, scientific, æsthetic, domestic and hygienic. The principal, after spending nearly twenty years in studying educational questions and in the practice of teaching, is devoting his whole mind and heart to the task of maintaining not the largest but the best school in the South. His system of education comprehends such an harmonious development of all the powers of mind, heart and body as will fit the young lady for the faithful discharge of the highest and lowliest duties of life.

The methods of instruction are those approved by the foremost educators of the age. The very best aids are employed for imparting real knowledge, such as maps, charts, globes, specimens and apparatus of all kinds. There is no rote—learning of the mere letter of text books—no cramming of the mind with disconnected facts.

Assistant teachers of known scholarship and well-tried aptness in teaching are engaged. In physical science and modern languages instruction is given by the eminent professors in these departments of Cumberland University.

The course of study is very extensive. It is arranged into schools after the plan of the best universities, and pupils are graduated in such schools as they or their parents may elect. Music on piano, harp and guitar.

In the boarding department young ladies enjoy all the comforts of an elegant home. The rooms are large, well ventilated, neatly furnished and newly carpeted. Fires in rooms whenever wanted. The table is bountifully supplied with wholesome food.

The location is most favorable in point of health, social refinement and religious privileges.

The health and physical development of boarding pupils are promoted by a system of gymnastic exercises, under a competent teacher, with dumb-bells, wands, rings and Indian clubs, without charge.

The expense of boarding and regular tuition is $250 or $260 a year. Extra branches at usual rates. The annual session always begins on the first Monday of September.

The Child's Corner.

THE BLUE BIRD AND THE THRUSH.

"Good day, neighbor Blue Bird."
Said young Mrs. Thrush,
Stopping short in the midst of a song;
"Pray what is the state of your health to-day,
And how do the children get on?"

"I thank you, kind neighbor,"
The Blue Bird replied,
"With my health I have no fault to find,
And Jenny and Patty are getting on well.
But I'm very much troubled in mind.

"The farmer's boy, Dick, has discovered my nest
My nest near the top of the elm—
And I heard him this morning
Tell Watty and Fleece,
Ere many more days had passed over their heads
He'd present them a blue bird apiece.

"I would be simple in me, you know, to remain,
Since the rude boy has given fair warning;
So, sweet Mrs. Thrush, let me bid you good-by;
Little Jenny and Patty are yearning to fly,
And we shall all be off in the morning."

"Not off yet this morning,"
Said sweet Mrs. Thrush;
"Not off yet, I am happy to find;
But dear Mrs. Blue Bird, permit me to ask,
For what reason have you thus changed your mind?"

"Well, early this morning,
My kind neighbor Thrush,
Ere my darlings had opened their eyes,
I looked from my nest, near the top of the elm,
And saw, far below me, that naughty Dick Helm
Just climbing the tree for his prize.

"Oh my heart! my poor heart!
How it fluttered and throbbed!
I thought it would break with its woe!
The dread, the distress, the sickening fear!
Oh! none but a parent can know.

"But Dick placed his foot
On a dry, withered branch,
(So thoughtless was naughty Dick Helm;)
The withered branch snapped,
And, quick as a flash,
He lay stretched at the foot of the elm.

And now—so I hear—the doctor declares
That another tree Dicky'll ne'er climb;
And in bed he must stay
For many a day,
For the rude boy has broken a limb."

THE TREE OF LIFE.

"She is a Tree of Life to them that lay hold of her."

This was Emma's verse. The children each learned a verse to say at breakfast every Sunday morning. "Who is she?" asked James, hearing his sister repeat it.

"Sure enough," said Emma. "It cannot be God, for God is he." "I know," cried cunning little Lill; "it is mother." "Good!" shouted the rest of the children; "Lill knows more than all of us put together."

"Well, of course it isn't mother," said Emma. "We must ask father at table." So when the family were seated at their pleasant breakfast table—one of the pleasantest in the world—and the recitation went around, Emma, who was last, ended by asking immediately who the "she" was in her verse; and five pairs of bright eyes looked eagerly up to papa for his answer. And papa's answer I shall give without the questions which he put, and all the answers which the children gave.

Who, then, is "she?" It is "Wisdom," a name by which Christ is called in the book of Proverbs. It is a religion which is compared to a great many things in the Bible; sometimes to gold and silver, to leaven and seed. It is here called a tree. But how is religion like a tree? Let us see first what we can get from a tree.

We get food from a tree—apples and oranges, bananas and bread-fruit. People in the South seas get most of their food from the bread-fruit tree.

We get shelter from a tree. How grateful is its shade in a hot day! What an umbrella it is in a sudden shower! Our houses are built of trees; and some of the poor Africans stick their little huts up among their spreading branches.

Trees yield us medicine, gum arabic, liquorice and senna.

And pleasure; yes, I am sure they do. You know that by feeling how bleak and lonely it is where there are no trees. I never felt so desolate in all my life as I did on a great prairie. They are company, and very good company too.

You see, then, what trees are to us? Is not religion all this, and more too? Is not religion food to the soul? Indeed it is. Just as the body has to be fed with bread to make it strong and beautiful, so the soul must be fed with the "bread of life" to make it strong, wise and good.

Jesus Christ and his great salvation is that bread of life. If we know and love and obey him, never fear about other things, we shall never go hungry or unhappy.

It is shelter also. We are exposed to Satan, who, like a roaring lion, goes about seeking whom he may devour. We are liable to a great many temptations, big and little, which meet us both at home and abroad, and around every corner. Evil company will try to entice us into crooked paths, and little faults are always ready to trip us up. Nothing can keep us from harm but trust in the Lord Jesus; nobody can protect and shelter us from sin like him. The Bible says: "The beloved of the Lord shall dwell in safety by him." Daniel found it so in the lion's den; Joseph found it so in the Egyptian prison; John found it so on Rocky Patmos; and every child who keeps close to its Savior will find it exactly so. He is kept from evil.

Is religion medicine? I should think so. Jesus himself is called the great Physician. He cures us of sin, the worst sickness we can have. The Bible says in one place: "He sent his word and healed them." The nobleman's little girl found it so; and so did the captain's servant. But medicine which is not taken is useless. Will you not take his word and follow it, and be healed of your sins? Then you will find true enjoyment. Everybody who has laid hold of this Tree of Life will tell you so. I went to see a young woman the other day, and she said: "I have found my Savior, and my home has seemed like a heaven on earth ever since." Pretty soon her husband came in, and he said: "We have set up family prayers, and our home has been a heaven on earth ever since."

So you see the comparison is a good one. A tree is a beautiful object. The wind sings softly among the green leaves, which seem to clap their hands with joy. The birds build their nests among the branches, and praise God from the topmost boughs. Each is called by its name; each is beautiful in its season; but among them all the TREE OF LIFE should be our choice and delight. Let us build in its branches; let us eat of its fruit; let us scatter its leaves, for its leaves, says the word of God, "are for the healing of the nations."

A SENSIBLE RESOLVE.—"Did you ever hear, sir, how it was that Edwards, the mason, gave up drinking?" said a workingman to my father, one day, when he was talking to him about the evils of intemperance.

"No," said my father; "how was it?"

"Well, one day Edwards was drinking in a public house, when the landlord's wife came to call her husband to his dinner.

"'What's for dinner?' said the man.

"'Roast goose,' replied his wife.

"'Is there apple-sauce?' he asked.

"'No,' she answered.

"'Well, go and make some; I won't eat goose without apple-sauce.'

"'When the woman had left the room to prepare this delicacy Edwards was so impressed by the scene he had witnessed that, for the first time in his life, he began to think what a fool he had been.

"'Here's this man,' said he to himself, 'can't eat his dinner of roast goose without apple-sauce, while my poor wife and children at home are glad to get a herring for their dinners, and very often can't have even that. Whose money, I should like to know, goes to provide this fellow with good things? Mine, and that of other poor fools like me. Well, what's done can't be undone. It's no use crying over spilt milk, but that fellow shan't dine off roast goose again at my expense.'

"So he paid his reckoning, and walked out of that public house, never to enter it again."

AN END TO QUARRELING.—The Presbyterian tells a capital story of two dogs that got a ducking by quarreling, and were made firm friends by the danger of drowning:

"One day a fine Newfoundland dog and a mastiff had a sharp discussion over a bone or some other trifling matter, and warred away as angrily as two boys. They were fighting on a bridge; and being blind with rage, as is often the case, the first thing they knew they went into the water.

"The banks were so high that they were forced to swim some distance before they came to a landing place. It was very easy for the Newfoundland dog; he was as much at home in the water as a seal. But not so poor Bruce; he struggled and tried his best to swim, but made but little headway.

"Old Brave (the Newfoundlander) had reached the land, and then turned to look at his old enemy. He saw plainly that his strength was fast failing, and that he was likely to drown. So what should that noble fellow do but plunge in, seize him gently by the collar, and keeping his nose above water, tow him safely into port!

"It was funny to see these dogs look at each other as soon as they shook their wet coats. Their glance said as plainly as words: 'We'll never quarrel any more.' And, sure enough, they kept their resolution. I think some boys might learn a good lesson from this old Newfoundland dog."

TURN TO-DAY.—Rabbi Eliezer said to his disciples:

"Turn to God one day before your death."

"How can man," was their reply, "know the day of his death?"

"True," said Eliezer; "therefore, you should turn to God to-day; perhaps you may die to-morrow; thus every day will be employed in turning to him."

"Behold, now is the accepted time"—"for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth."—Sunday School Visitor.

The Farm and Garden.

FACTS ABOUT BEES.

There are three classes of bees in a hive—the worker, queen and drone.

Queens are raised by peculiar food and treatment from eggs that would otherwise produce workers.

The worker is an undeveloped female. Workers, in the absence of a queen, sometimes lay eggs. These invariably produce drones.

The queen lives from two to five years; the worker from two to three months in the working season, and from six to eight during the season of rest.

The queen is perfected in fifteen or sixteen days from the egg, the worker in twenty to twenty-one, and the drone in twenty-four.

The queen usually commences laying from seven to twelve days after leaving the cell, and is capable of laying from two to three thousand eggs in a day.

The impregnation of the queen always takes place outside the hive, on the wing, and generally the fourth or fifth day after leaving the cell. Excepting in rare cases, one impregnation answers for life. The drone she has mated with dies immediately.

The eggs of an unimpregnated queen produce nothing but drones; and it is generally conceded that impregnation does not affect the drone progeny; consequently the male progeny of a pure Italian queen is pure without regard to the drone she has mated with.

The queen and worker are provided with stings; but while the latter will use it upon any provocation, the former will only use it on her own rank. The drones have no stings.

One queen, as a rule, is all that is tolerated in a hive; but previous to throwing off "after swarms," two or more queens are permitted in the same hive for a short time; but the extra ones are soon disposed of. In cases of superseding a queen the old one is preserved until the new one is fitted to take her place. Queens have a deadly hatred for each other, and will destroy, if permitted, all queen larva or cells in the hive, and, will fight each other until there is but one left living.

Bees gather three kinds of product—propolis, from the gum of trees and shrubs, for fastening their hives; pollen or bee bread, from flowers, for feeding their young and themselves, and honey, which constitutes the main food of the hive. Water is also carried into the hive during the breeding season for mixing with the food of their young. Salt is also made use of for the same purposes.

Wax, like fat, is an animal product, and is secreted by the bees in thin scales from the under side of the body. While doing this they consume large quantities of honey—from fifteen to twenty pounds for every pound of wax secreted.

A frightened bee, or one filled with honey, is not disposed to sting.

A good swarm contains about twenty thousand bees.

A strong or medium hive, with a good laying queen, is never seriously troubled with the moth worm; but a hive without a queen, or the means of raising one, is sure to be taken by them.

Bees recognize each other by their scent.

The first one or two weeks of the young bee's life is spent inside the hive as nurse or wax-worker.

The range of a bee's flight for food is generally within two or three miles; much greater range is of but little benefit to them.—Western Rural.

UPLAND RICE.

This is again attracting the attention of readers and writers. We say "again," because some twenty years ago, perhaps, there was much said of it, and some spilling of ink. And for whose good? Cotton not remunerating, the feverish mind caught at every bubble, hoping for something to turn up. In the multitude of exchanges we see some proposing a brau new thing—cultivating rice on upland—when we know of its being done in Alabama by Dr. Brumly fully twenty-five, we may say thirty years ago, and as a paying crop. We are satisfied it must be over twenty years ago since we directed how we had grown—we think now—some fifty bushels from a half bushel of seed or less, and fully fifteen or twenty feet above any overflow, and three-fourths of a mile from its edge. In Hinds county, Mississippi, very many knew that popular, noble soul, Green E. Beauchamp, ere he passed away. He taught us five to ten years before his death. We give a modification, or an improvement, but essentially his directions: Plow good fresh land (best,) and rich enough for twenty-five or thirty bushels of corn, a month or more before planting. At time of planting turn with a small plow and shallow to each other two furrows, fifteen to eighteen inches apart. Make an opening of the ridge, and drill in a straight, narrow drill in rice about two inches deep, then run round with small turn-plow to cover nicely. Rains will settle this down before vegetation shows rice above ground. With the rice there may come up a full crop of weeds and grass; mind them not. There is no fingering grass, as our old papa put us to do, when a "broth of a boy," and when we, for spite, rolled up our sleeves to the arm-pits, and in one day skinned a pair of white arms of a petulant boy. When the rice is all up, say two inches or about, "bar off:" the old plan is scraping, which leaves the middle clean and covered with fresh earth; rice grass and weeds on a three or four-inch strip, all lightly done. Then with a well-sharpened hoe (all good planters keep them thus, in scraping time at least,) shave off the entire ridge with say one-eighth or one-fourth of an inch of surface. In a few days the rice is up again, and a clean field. This is so; we have done it our own self to teach the negro. Now it can be dirted with the bull tongue or the sweep; and we thinned ours to bunches of eight or ten, and about eight inches apart. Stir to keep clean and earth light. One hundred bushels of rough rice can be made with less labor than thirty bushels of corn.—Southern Farmer.

CORN NOT AN EXHAUSTIVE CROP.—It is in accordance with the experience of our best farmers that corn is the least exhaustive to the soil of all the cereal crops. Why is this? Is it not largely owing to the fact that the soil is kept loose during a large period of the growth of the crop, and, being thus kept loose, does it not absorb a large amount of fertilizing matter from the atmosphere? Does it not take in a great amount of ammonia and carbonic acid gas, substances which are necessary ingredients in the growth of vegetation? If this is so, does it not furnish us a hint in regard to growing small grains in rows, eight, twelve or sixteen inches apart, thus enabling the farmer, by means of horse-hoes, to keep the soil stirred during the growth of the crop? We understand that in England the wheat crop is horse-hoed to a large extent, and we know that in that country the average yield of wheat per acre is annually on the increase. Cincinnati Gazette.

MILDEW is readily removed by rubbing or scraping a little common yellow soap on the article, and then a little salt and starch on that. Rub all well into the article, and put it in the sunshine.

WHEN TO KILL BUSHES.—The best time to kill trees and bushes is to cut them in July or August. There will be no trouble in killing any kind of a tree or shrub.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

SARAH CAKE.—One-half cup of shortening, two eggs, one cup of milk, three cups of flour with one teaspoonful of cream of tartar sifted in, one teaspoonful of soda dissolved in one-fourth cup of hot water, a little salt, and flavor. This makes two loaves.

TAPIOCA PUDDING.—Take four tablespoonfuls of tapioca, one quart of milk, three eggs (leaving out the whites of two for icing,) sweeten to taste, and flavor with vanilla. Soak the tapioca over night in a little water, set in a warm place. Boil the milk and pour over the same. When it is lukewarm add the sugar and eggs, well beaten. Bake one hour, being careful not to let it whey. When cool cover with icing. For icing use the whites of two eggs and six tablespoonfuls of granulated sugar, beaten together to a stiff froth.

WHAT CLOVES ARE.—Cloves are the unopened flower of a small evergreen tree that resembles in appearance the laurel of the bay. It is a native of the Malacca or Spice islands, but has been carried to all warmer parts of the world, and it is now cultivated in the tropical regions of America. The flowers are small in size, and grow in large numbers, in clusters, to the very end of the branches.

The cloves we use are the flowers gathered before they are opened, and while they are still green. After being gathered they are smoked by a wood fire, and then dried in the sun. Each clove consists of two parts of a round head, which are the four petals or leaves of the flower rolled up, inclosing a number of small stalks or filaments; the other part of the cloves is terminated with four points, and is, in fact, the flower-cap of the unripe seed vessel. All these parts may be distinctly seen if a few cloves are soaked for a short time in hot water, when the leaves of the flower soften and readily unroll. Both the taste and the smell of cloves depend on the quantity of oil they contain. Sometimes the oil is separated from the cloves before they are sold, and the odor and taste in consequence much weakened by such unfair proceeding.—The Household.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

Dolbear Commercial College

A CARD.

All who wish a cash-paying education for themselves or sons can obtain it in the shortest possible time, and with the least possible expense, at

DOLBEAR COMMERCIAL COLLEGE,
Nos. 164 and 168 Canal St., New Orleans.

This College, founded in 1852, and chartered by the Legislature of Louisiana, has a full and able Faculty, and separate professors for each branch of study, so as to save the time and money of students, and fit them at once for business. They can take the Commercial Course, or the modern or ancient languages or mathematics, Book-keeping or Penmanship alone, or the whole course of the College. They have a LIFE SCHOLARSHIP in all the departments they enter and never pay but once. Persons from twelve to sixty years of age attend.

N. B.—Of all our numerous graduates for the past thirty-nine years, not one is now out of profitable employment, so far as known. Those of last year are now receiving from $1,000 to $3,000 per annum. We have ample arrangements for board, from $25 to $30 a month. When Clubs of three or more enter at the same time ten per cent. deduction is made.

There are no vacations. Students can begin at any time. Those who begin soon will be able to fill good situations in the summer, when Merchants make their changes. Liberal deduction for sons of clergymen and crippled soldiers. For catalogues address

my4 1y RUFUS DOLBEAR, President.

J. W. BLACKMAN'S

COMMERCIAL COLLEGE,
61 CAMP STREET,
Corner Commercial Place, N. O.

Open day and evening the entire year.

Penmanship, Book-keeping, Mathematics and Languages are practically taught by experienced professors. Persons from fifteen to fifty years of age attend. Instruction given privately to each student, who has a separate desk to himself, and is put through a thorough and systematic course of study to qualify him for the situation he intends to fill. Persons who have neglected their education are here speedily prepared for business. Students from the country may obtain board in the family of the principal.

TERMS—Twenty per cent. less than other Commercial Colleges in this city. Cost of full Commercial Course only $100. Average time, three to four months.

The principal has been a professional teacher in New Orleans since 1851.

EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE,
VIRGINIA.

THIS INSTITUTION, located on the great railroad line from New Orleans to Baltimore, among the mountains of Virginia, is offering peculiar advantages to those who are seeking a thorough collegiate or business education. Two Hundred and Thirty Dollars will cover the expenses for an entire collegiate year of ten months, for Tuition, Board, Fuel, Room-rent, Washing and Contingent Fees. For the character of the school, please consult our own Alumni, or any of the Bishops or of the leading men of the Southern Methodist Church, or the Professors of the University of Virginia, who have authorized this reference. Our Fall Session begins AUGUST 17, 1871. If you desire a catalogue write to E. E. WILEY, Prest., je8 tm Emory P. O., Va.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE.

THE TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL SESSION of this school will begin on the FIRST MONDAY IN AUGUST, 1871. The entire expense for board and tuition, for forty weeks, will be $150. The board is of the best description that the country affords, being furnished by the steward from his own farm and prepared by the hands of his own family. We had boys from five different States last year, and not a word of complaint was ever made on this point, which is often the subject of just complaint at boarding schools. The fare is peculiarly grateful to Southern boys, who require a more generous diet when they change their climate.

The manner of governing the school is paternal, as the entire exemption from temptations in the surrounding country renders the discipline easy. The institution is under the care of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, but under my own control. The young men attending the school last year were, without exception, moral and religious. Young men preparing for the ministry may receive tuition free, and in certain cases can obtain lower rates of board. Regular services are held in the College Chapel.

The location of the school is near Madisonville, Monroe county, East Tennessee, in the midst of a fruitful and beautiful country, and surrounded by a thrifty and intelligent population. No negroes live in the neighborhood, all the laborers in the fields and servants in the families being white. The citizens of Monroe county were true to the South in her late struggle, and have adhered to Southern churches.

Students arriving by the East Tennessee and Virginia Railroad will get off at Sweetwater, forty miles south of Knoxville, whence they will find conveyance to the college, seven miles distant.

Our post office is Madisonville, Tennessee.

F. M. GRACE, President.

P. S.—1. Families from the South will find good board in the neighborhood, and a delightful summer retreat at White Cliff Springs, sixteen miles distant from Madisonville. For information on this point parties may address H. A. McKenzie, steward of the college. The health of the country is proverbial.

P. S.—2. Younger boys may be safely sent to this school, as all are under the immediate oversight of the principal, both when in school and when at the boarding house.

Preparatory studies..... $15 00 and 20 00
Contingent fee 1 50

Board in private families, per month, $14. Board with room furnished, $15.

Total expenses for board and tuition will range from $85 to $105 per session, while the course of studies is as full and thorough as that of any college in the land.

Active measures have been taken for a full and permanent endowment.

For health and association it is believed that the location cannot be surpassed.

It is the aim of the Trustees to place Homer College in the front rank.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE,
Staunton, Virginia.

WILL BEGIN the Twenty-second Annual Session SEPTEMBER 21, 1871, and close June 24, 1872. Than this no college for young ladies ranks higher. The President, Rev. WILLIAM A. HARRIS, is aided by an able and accomplished board of eighteen teachers and officers. System of teaching thorough, and based on the plan of the University of Virginia. English Science and Literature are taught by experienced graduates of our first universities and colleges. French is taught by a native master of the language. Music by two able masters, aided, among others, by two of the most distinguished vocalists in the South.

This is one of the healthiest climates in the world, and young ladies who come here from the South with feeble constitutions are entirely restored to health.

Buildings elegant—fanned by the purest breezes, and commanding the most magnificent rural and mountain scenery for thirty miles along the beautiful Valley of Virginia, making it one of the most delightful college homes in the Union. During the last session one hundred young ladies attended this institution from fourteen Southern States.

(From Judge JOHN N. HENDREN, M. A., University of Virginia.

I regard the Wesleyan Female Institute under the management of Rev. William A. Harris, as one of the very best and most attractive schools in the State. * * * *

(From Prof. WILLIAM E. PETERS, LL. D., University of Virginia.

* * * The sterling worth of Prof. Harris as a man, his Christian character, his devotion to duty and his mature scholarship, also his successful experience as a teacher, furnish ample assurance that young ladies committed to his charge will enjoy advantages of moral and intellectual training rarely found.

* * * From personal knowledge I believe that as the president of a female college Rev. William A. Harris has no superior; indeed, within the purview of my acquaintance he has no equal.

(From Bishop E. M. MARVIN, D. D.)

The Wesleyan Female Institute is an honor to the church. Instruction is thorough. All classes stand high. In Music, advantages are offered of a very high order. The most talented professors are employed, and neither pains nor expense are spared to make this department eminent. The school is very prosperous, and deserves to be so.

TERMS FOR THE ENTIRE SCHOLASTIC YEAR. Board and tuition in the Collegiate Course, $235. Music and other extra studies, moderate.

WHITWORTH FEMALE COLLEGE,
Brookhaven, Mississippi.

ON THE New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad, one hundred and twenty-eight miles from New Orleans, and fifty-seven miles south of Jackson, Miss., Mississippi.

The location is healthy. The instruction in all the branches, including French and Music, is thorough. During the past term there were one hundred and eighty-two pupils. The Faculty consists of four gentlemen and six ladies. The total expenses for board, tuition in English, Latin and Greek, English text-books, school-room stationery, medicines and medical attention, for the term of forty weeks, amount to $263. The next session will open on the Twentieth of September, 1871.

Catalogues can be obtained from B. M. Harp, 112 Camp street, New Orleans, Louisiana, or from the president.

MEDICAL.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR.

A Purely Vegetable Compound

FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF

RHEUMATISM AND GOUT

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered them mable relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Rawson, Bellevue, Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Bradley, Floyd, Louisiana.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to duration of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia, from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

No charge made except for medicine. For directions as to use and for further information address

AGENT FOR THE SOUTHWESTERN STATES FOR THE SALE OF

GEORGE WOODS & CO.'S

PARLOR And CHURCH ORGANS.

To those who are at all acquainted with the trade in musical instruments, or those conversant with the improvements that during the last twenty years have been made in that most popular of instruments, the Reed Organ, it is entirely superfluous to speak of the reputation or ability of the firm of GEO. WOODS & CO. We will however, mention, for the benefit of any who may be without information on the subject, that the senior partner, Mr. Geo. Woods, has been engaged in the manufacture of Organs for many years, that he is the inventor of many valuable improvements and ingenious devices, and that his confrères in the business are all men extensively known to the trade as being possessed of uncommon skill, taste and experience in their different branches.

In offering our instruments to the notice of all interested in music, we merely ask a comparison between those of our manufacture and those of others, and briefly mention upon what points in our instruments we base our claims of superiority to the productions of our competitors in business:

QUALITY OF TONE.

Its Purity, Clearness and Brilliancy, Extraordinary Power,
CAPACITY FOR VARIETY, AND BEAUTY OF EFFECT,

Which is owing in a great measure to the excellence of our famous SOLO STOPS,

VOX HUMANA AND VOX CELESTE,

which differ materially in their construction and effects from other Stops of the same or similar name.

Our MANUAL SUB-BASS; smooth as well as effective in quality of tone.
PATENTED INVENTIONS AND INGENIOUS DEVICES.
Our method of employing SOLO SETS in separate WIND CHESTS.
IMPROVED VALVES AND WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.
THOROUGHNESS OF CONSTRUCTION AND ELEGANCE OF DESIGN.

All material used in the construction of our instruments will be found to be strictly of the best quality. Our workmanship will also be found to be of a very high order.

The Cases are constructed with a proper regard to the laws of sound, having acoustic chambers at the ends of the case.

The Fronts of Keys are Ivory, and are not of Holly wood.

The Carvings are hand-made.

The Stops are of Ebony and Ivory, engraved by hand.

Special attention is called to these Organs. Price Lists and Catalogues, containing full particulars of the many numbers, sizes, varieties and prices—ranging from $110 to $650—will be mailed to any one on application.

☞ All instruments will be thoroughly examined and shipped in good order. Therefore parties can safely order without coming to select. Address

HOUSTON (TEXAS) STATE FAIR, MAY, 1871.

THE BLUE RIBBON AND DIPLOMA

—AWARDED TO—

PHILIP WERLEIN, OF NEW ORLEANS,

—FOR HIS TWO ENTRIES—

Best Piano (Cottage Square) and Best Organ made in United States,

OVER ALL COMPETITION.

The Silver-Tongue NEEDHAM ORGANS AND MELODEONS are the most approved, most elegantly cased, cheapest in the market, and of the most improved construction.
Organs at $60, $75, $100 and $125 for six stops; and $150 for seven stops and upward.

Fine new Seven Octave PIANOS, of different first-class makes, at $310 and upward. Second-hand Pianos, of good tone and good make, six octave, at $75 to $100; 6¾-octave, $125; 6¾-octave, $150; 6¾-octave, $175; seven-octave, $200 to $225—very good.

☞ Owing to extraordinary facilities, a large and well-established trade, very low rent and small expenses, persons can buy at a less price at this house than elsewhere in the South.

Reference is made to Bishop J. C. Keener, Rev. Linus Parker, D. D., and Rev. Robt. J. Harp, who have bought Pianos from this house.

IT IS SAID that the improved lands in South Carolina are worth $20,000,000, while the fences that inclose them have actually cost $16,000,000. The fences in New York have cost $144,000,000; those of Ohio, $115,000,000; and according to an estimate made by Nicholas Biddle, thirty years ago, the fences of Pennsylvania had then cost $100,000,000. The fences of the whole Union are estimated at $1,300,000,000.

SALT YOUR CHIMNEY.—In building a chimney, put a quantity of salt into the mortar with which the intercourse of brick are to be laid. The effect will be that there will never be any accumulation of soot in that chimney. The philosophy is thus stated: The salt in the portion of mortar which is exposed absorbs moisture from the atmosphere every damp day. The soot thus becoming damp, falls down to the fireplace. This appears to be an English discovery. It is used with success in Canada.

STEP out into the purest air you can find, stand perfectly erect, with head and shoulders back, and then fixing the lips as if you were going to whistle, draw the air through the lips into the lungs. When the chest is about half full, gradually raise the arms, keeping them extended, with the palms of the hands down, as you suck in the air, so as to bring them over the head just as the lungs are quite full. Then drop the thumbs inward, and after forcing the arms backward and the chest open, reverse the process by which you draw your breath till the lungs are empty. This process should be repeated immediately after bathing and several times during the day. It is impossible to describe to one who has never tried it the glorious sense of vigor which follows this exercise. It is the best expectorant in the world.—Dr. Paine.

FOOD FOR THINKERS AND WORKERS. The Phrenological Journal says: Those who expect to think should not eat much food which simply produces warmth and fat, such as ham, fat pork, white bread, butter, rice, tapioca and starch. These contain very little phosphatic food, being chiefly carbonaceous. Prof. Agassiz says: "Fish enters largely into the requisition of the human system, especially after intellectual fatigue. There is no other article of food that supplies the waste of the head so thoroughly as fish diet. Fish contains phosphorus to a large extent, a chemical element which the brain requires for growth and life. He would not say that exclusive use of fish would make a blockhead a wise man, but that the brain would not be wanting in one of its essential elements." Man cannot, however, live on fish alone, because most fish are not fat enough to furnish the heat-producing element in sufficient quantity. The amount of phosphate or brain-supporting food contained in the flesh of animals is in proportion to the activity of that animal; those of great activity, such as the canary bird, for instance, secure food which feed brain, nerve and muscle, but do not produce it. The flesh of the trout, the pickerel or salmon impart more mental and physical vigor to the eater than the flesh of comparatively dormant fish, like the eel and flounder. The flesh of wild animals, such as the bison, deer or boar, promote activity in the eater more than the stall-fed ox, sheep or hog. Wild game generally is considered better food, especially for the convalescent, than the fattened domestic turkey or goose. Barley, oats and wheat ground without boiling, furnish food for brain; but lawyers, ministers and students eat the white superfine or bolted wheat bread, and go to sleep. That which would fatten a pig and give him no desire to exercise or to think if eaten by the learned and refined of the human race, who look in pity upon the poor peasant following the plow, because he is obliged to eat his brown loaf, which brown loaf and cheap fish and wild game contain the incitement to brain work, in which poems, orations and art are conceived and nursed. The proper food for laboring men—we mean those who have to exercise muscular strength chiefly—should be that which contains the greatest amount of nitrogen. Among these articles barley and cheese stand high.

The red flesh of the ox or sheep and unbolted bread are the leading articles. Men who train prize fighters seem to understand much better than others how to build up physical strength and endurance. When their battle and their race is ended they lay aside their unbolted bread and fruit, their lean beef and mutton, and fall into their old habits of liquor-drinking and of eating starch-bearing articles, such as rice, fine bread, pudding, with fat meat and butter, and they soon become as fat and lazy as these carbonaceous articles can make them.

LOVE is an alchymist that can transmute poison into food.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We notice a dull market in nearly every branch of trade. Sugar has been in fair demand and ruled at steady prices. Molasses has been quiet at previous rates. Operations in flour have been restricted by scant supplies, owing to which prices have been well maintained. Corn has been in moderate request, and prices were hardly maintained during the early part of the week, since which they have been steady.

We hear of worms from several localities on Red river, and also on the Ouachita and near Port Hudson, but nothing yet to cause any alarm. The crop report issued by the New Orleans Cotton Exchange on Tuesday will attract general attention. It is more favorable than the previous report, and is intended to fairly represent the spirit of the committee's voluminous correspondence.

The river is 12 feet 2 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twenty eighth ultimo:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales	2,031
Lake		4
Arkansas		156
Moone		24
Total		2,655

On Saturday the demand continued moderate and the sales embraced 1,150 bales, but under the influence of the Liverpool and New York telegrams low ordinary and ordinary gave way ⅛ to ¼c., and low middling ⅛c., while good ordinary was weak at previous rates. On Monday buyers again came forward with some degree of spirit and took 1,300 bales at still easier prices, but hardly showing a quotable decline. The advantage, however, was on the side of the buyer throughout the day, and in some cases factors were compelled to make further concessions. On Tuesday the inquiry was fair, but operations were restricted by scant supplies and factors meeting the demand less freely, at least for good ordinary and the lower grades. Strict ordinary, in particular, was held higher, and the sales indicated a recovery of the previous decline; 15 to 15⅛c. being the ruling rates, but clean white parcels occasionally commanding 15⅜c. Good ordinary also ruled in favor of factors, and there was little to be had at the inside rate of 16c. The business was confined to 750 bales.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 3,200 bales.

The receipts at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 1,432,910 bales, against 1,438,307 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 1,087,867 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 871,831 bales to Great Britain, 301,091 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 214,048 to France.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	14 to 15
Good ordinary	15 to 15⅝
Low middling	15⅞ to 15⅞
Middling	16
Strict middling	to

SUGAR.—There has been only a moderate local demand, and prices have undergone no change, so we yet quote 9½ to 9¾c. for common, 10⅛ to 10½c. for fair, 11⅜c. for good fair, 12¾ to 12⅞c. for yellow clarified. Refinery yellow clarified is quoted at 12¼ to 12⅝c., and white at 13½ to 13⅝c. ₱ lb.

MOLASSES.—City refinery reboiled is quoted at 30 to 35c. ₱ gallon; golden syrup 90c. to $1 ₱ gallon. On Monday 70 barrels reboiled sold at 30 to 45c. ₱ gallon.

PORK continues extremely dull, with some disposition on the part of buyers to sell. On Friday last a sale of 350 barrels winter-cured mess was made at $15. Since then buyers have evinced more disposition to cooperate, but could find no sellers under $15 25 ₱ barrel until yesterday, when 450 barrels sold at $15 ₱ barrel.

LARD is also very dull and flat, though the stock is small, there is very little consumptive demand. On Saturday there was no movement worthy of notice; holders asking 7c. for shoulders, 9c. to 9½c. for clear rib sides, and 9¾ to 9¾c. for clear sides. On Tuesday the market was quiet, with sales of 30 casks at the following prices. Hams, a small job lot at 16 to 16½c. ₱ lb, but these were sugar cured.

BULK MEATS.—There is little or no change to note in this article. Shoulders are held at 7½c. ₱ lb, clear rib sides at 9¾c., and clear sides at 9¾c. ₱ lb.

LARD.—Holders are asking 10½c. to 10¾c. for tierces, and 10¾c. to 11c. for kegs, but the market is dull at 10c. to 10½c.

BUTTER.—Good 11½ to 11¾c.

MONDAY.—Good 11½ to 11¾c.

American silver chain dollars, 107 to 108¼, and Mexican dollars at 2 to 3c. per cent. premium in gold.

In stocks we note sales of Monday $3,000 City Appropriation Certificates at 83; and $1,300 Louisiana Levee Company on Tuesday at 82½; and the market closed at 83, and 60 Louisiana State Certificates at 62.

THE WOMAN'S FRIEND WASHING MACHINE.

IT IS THE INVENTION of a Kentuckian, on the Fulling Mill principle, and is operated by rocking.

Washing of clothes is so simplified by this machine that either a man, woman or child can do the work, and do it well.

It will thoroughly WASH, RINSE and BLUE one hundred (100) ordinary Pieces of Clothing in forty-five (45) minutes, without the LEAST WEAR of the cloth, or the breaking of a button or the pulling of a thread.

The most delicate Fabrics can be washed with it without the least injury.

While it washes, it Bleaches Bleaches.

It will wash Blankets, and give them a new appearance and feeling.

Wool may be washed on this machine at the rate of six pieces in two minutes.

No Wash Tubs are needed.

Its construction is so simple it will last for years with care, and cost less than any wash tub in the aggregate. Any one can repair it, as there are no rag-wheels or cranks to replace.

Price, $12; with Wringer, $14.

Attention is also called to the "Little Giant Wringer," that we sell, as being superior to any other Wringer in use, simply for the reason that no adjustment is necessary to wring either a collar or a blanket. Address

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Aug. 3.—Westfield disaster deaths amount to eighty-five.

David A. Kielicher, associate editor of the Irish World, has been missing since Sunday. Feared he was lost on the We

Two men were thro om the Second avenue cars, on Sunday, by two roughs. One is dead and the other will die. The murderers are at large.

Boston, Aug. 3.—Lyman School has been destroyed by fire.

Salt Lake City, Aug. 3.—Smallpox is reported in this vicinity. Three deaths have occurred.

Charleston, Aug. 4.—The official count shews that the municipal election of Wednesday resulted in the choice of the citizens' candidate, General John A. Wagener, by a majority seven hundred and seventy-seven votes, over Gilbert Pillsbury, the present Republican mayor. The entire citizens' ticket is elected by about the same majority.

Wilmington, N. C., August 4:—In New Hanover county the Republicans gained several hundred on the vote of 1870.

Anson county gives a small Conservative gain; Warren county, two hundred Conservative gain; Columbus county, reported heavy Conservative gain.

The news thus far received is favorable to the call of a convention by a small majority.

San Francisco, Aug. 4.—Ex-Governor Belger is in a dying condition from the dropsy.

Boston, Aug. 4.—The National Division of the Sons of Temperance have arranged a convention in this city for September 6, to continue five days.

The Prince of Wales will be provisional grand master of the Dublin Free Masons.

The Orangemen and Catholics are preparing for a row at Londonderry on the twelfth instant.

In the House of Commons, this evening, Sir Charles Bowyer Adderly made a speech of some length in denunciation of the treaty of Washington.

Sir Roundell Palmer followed in defense of the treaty.

It is probable that Parliament will be prorogued on the nineteenth.

The troopship Niagara is ashore at St. Paul Island, and it is feared will prove a total loss. The crew and passengers are safe.

Niagara Falls, Aug. 5.—The proprietors of the Clifton House are in receipt of information that the Marquis of Lorne and Princess Louise will be here in October.

San Francisco, Aug. 5.—Abraham Kenning, the old president of Arizona, was murdered at Camp Wood by Apache Mojave Indians, whom he had fed for six months, because he refused to furnish them with ammunition.

Cincinnati, Aug. 5.—A secret organization, known as the "Union League of the United Sons of America," composed principally of young men, are forming here to oppose Catholicism in all shape. All nationalities will be admitted.

Washington, August 8.—Charles Francis Adams has signified his acceptance of the arbitratorship under the Washington treaty.

Commissioner Pleasanton has been formally suspended. Douglas was appointed and is in possession of the office.

The postal money order system with Germany goes into effect October 1, 1872, the North German Lloyds requiring a year's notice.

The immediate causes assigned for Pleasanton's removal in official circles are: The revenue was not collected with efficiency; the revisal of the rulings of his predecessors; making decisions, the effect of which needlessly lessen the revenue, and acting on important matters without consulting Boutwell, wherein Boutwell had a paramount authority.

Columbus, Ang. 8.—Hon. Thomas Sparrow died of lockjaw to-day.

Louisville, Ang. 8.—The Democrats carry Kentucky by about thirty thousand majority. All Democratic candidates for the Legislature are elected.

New York, Aug. 8.—Within the past few days one steamer and six sailing vessels have been quarantined with yellow fever from the West Indies.

FOREIGN.

Constantinople, Aug. 2.—The Porte has dispatched twenty thousand troops against the insurgents in Albania.

Paris, Aug. 2.—It is rumored that Ecmusat will be appointed minister of foreign affairs.

The only French prisoners now in Germany are 4 officers and 800 privates in hospital, and 10 officers and 70 privates imprisoned for various offenses.

The journals say that the insurgents are burning the forests and committing horrible atrocities.

The deputies of the left center have resolved to vote for the prolongation of M. Thiers' powers, and for changing his title from chief executive to president.

It is reported that the Orleans princes will take their seats in the Assembly after recess.

Paris, Aug. 3.—Algerian advices are alarming. The insurgents are burning the forests and committing horrible atrocities. The natives of Oran have joined the insurrection.

The French post office authorities are about arranging a money order system with England and the United States.

Two hundred and thirty witnesses have been already subpenaed to appear before the courts martial.

The minister of finance yesterday completed the payment of another installment of five hundred and ten million francs indemnity.

The German army of occupation has been reduced to one hundred and fifty thousand men.

Marshal McMahon reports the casualties to the Versailles forces in the second siege of Paris at seven thousand five hundred and fourteen.

Trains for the transportation of passengers and freights have commenced running through Mount Cenis tunnel.

London, Aug. 3.—The British charge d'affaires at Teheran telegraphs to the foreign office that the famine in Persia is ever, bnt provisions are still held at exorbitant prices.

The Versailles government has information that a general socialist movement is imminent in the south of France.

London, Aug. 3.—A caucus of the left center voted, one hundred and ninety against five, to make M. Thiers president for two years, and to allow him to choose a vice president and president of councils, the ministers to be responsible, bnt Thiers not.

This proposition will be submitted to the Assembly next week.

A Holland firm has sold in Frankfort-on-the-Main bonds of the Rockford and St. Louis railroad to the value of $9,000,000.

The transaction is a swindle. An investigation will be institnted.

London, Aug. 5.—The Duke of Argyle will preside at the Glasgow celebration of the birth of Sir Walter Scott.

Hon. Tom Hughes, member of Parliament, is prostrated by sudden illness.

The American ship Southampton, ready to sail for New York, with a cargo of coal, was burned at Liverpool this morning.

The British iron-clad frigate Warrior, which was ashore at Leghorn, got off and was towed to Spezzia for repairs.

Lady Franklin has paid several visits to the studio of the American artist Bradford, and has given a banquet in his honor at her residence.

London, Aug. 5.—The steamer Spain, on a trial trip, easily attained a speed of fourteen knots and one-quarter per hour.

A dispatch sent by the Czar Alexander of Russia to the Empress Eugenie, after the fall of Sedan, has been made public.

Alexander said he would intervene on the basis of preserving the integrity of French territory.

This intention, however, was spoiled by the treaty of September 4. All these things are facts, notwithstanding the denials of the Republicans.

City of Mexico, July 30, via Havana, Aug. 5.—The permanent deputation of Congress finished counting the electoral votes for president on the twenty-seventh instant. The following is the result: Diaz 1,982, Juarez 1,963, Lerdo 1,366. There being no choice according to the constitution, the election goes to Congress, where, if a coalition of the opponents to Juarez is effected, the majority will be against him.

An attempt will be made to unite the votes of the opposition on Diaz.

The permanent deputation is known to be hostile to Juarez.

The enemies of Juarez report he proposes to bribe the doubtful Congressmen, and imprison others before they can reach the capital.

On the other hand, Diario, the official organ of the government, declares that Juarez has a majority over all his competitors. In this conflict of authority and direct contradiction of the statement, it is impossible as yet to decide who is actually elected. The States of Puebla, Oaxaca and San Luis Potosi threaten a revolt, and the prospects of the country are gloomy.

Revolution has begun in Tabasco.

Voze de Mexico has a bitter article against Protestants, and points to the appearance of certain crimes as coincident with the introduction of Protestantism, and laments the evil produced by religious divisions. The same journal calls for restriction of suffrage.

A number of rude images of the human body, carved from stone, with strange heads of clay and stones cut in the shape of cannon balls, have been dug up near Cordova.

Dublin, Aug. 6.—In spite of the prohibition of the authorities, the friends of Amnest attempted to hold a meeting this evening, in Phœnix Park. Smythe, a member of Parliament; Sullivan, editor of the Nation, and John Sullivan Byrne, an Irishman, entered the park with a large crowd.

The Police Snperintendent Howe, standing on the Wellington monument, ordered Smythe and his followers to desist, when he was hurled to the bottom of the monument and barbarously treated. A fearful riot ensued.

The police charged upon the mob, and beat and kicked men, women and children indiscriminately. The fight lasted half an hour, when the police, having been reinforced, succeeded in dispersing the rioters. Smythe, Sullivan and a man named Nolan were badly wounded.

Over one hundred of the injured were taken to the hospital. The authorities are firm in their determination to punish the rioters, and the leaders will be tried to-day.

London, Aug 7.—A dispatch from Dublin to-day says the city is quiet.

Several places visited by the royal party were gutted on Sunday by the mob.

Several French war steamers are now ready at Toulon, in view of apprehended Eastern complications.

Trouble continues in portions of France occupied by the Germans. A Prussian subject was hanged a day or two since at Paligny, in the department of Jura.

A riot followed, in which the German soldiers wounded about twenty of the citizens, and threatened to burn the place.

Quiet restored by the authorities [illegible] ing the arrest of the offenders.

Versailles, Aug. 8.—The Assembly to-day passed the indemnification bill. It compensates the inhabitants in different departments for the loss and damage suffered either from the enemy or from the French troops; after a due investigation of the claim a settlement will be effected. It also authorizes the minister of finance to distribute immediately one hundred million francs among the most needy claimants.

A bill providing for a system of compulsory and gratuitous education throughout the country was introduced to-day.

The committee have agreed to report in favor of the income tax.

London, Aug. 8.—In the Commons, after a bitter debate, Gladstone implored the House to pass the ballot bill, and the bill passed.

It is again rumored that Napoleon intends to take a residence in Switzerland.

Paris, Aug. 8.—The Journal states that Jules Simon is a member of the International Society.

Versailles, Aug. 8.—A council of war, at which President Thiers and Marshal McMahon were present, resolved to adopt energetic measures to suppress the Algerine rebellion.

At the second election at Strasbourg yesterday over half the voters abstained. There was a similar result at Mulhouse and other conquered towns.

"Whosoever will may come." "I thank God," said Richard Baxter, "for the word whosoever. If God had said there was mercy for Richard Baxter, I am so vile a sinner that I would have thought he meant some other Richard Baxter; but when he says whosoever, I know that includes me, the worst of all Richard Baxters."

A little boy at the Portsmouth navy yard, son of a naval officer now at sea, recently concluded his usual evening prayer with: "O Lord, please send my dear papa home again as quick as Uncle Sam will let you."

As the climbing up a sandy way is to the feet of the aged, so is a wife full of words to a quiet man.—Ecclesiasticus.

DEATH OF JOHN SLIDELL.

Among the telegraphic dispatches published this morning (July 31) will be found one from London announcing the death of John Slidell, Esq., widely known throughout Louisiana and the South as one of the most prominent politicians of the day, and a principal actor in the events which brought on the late civil war.

John Slidell was born in New York, in 1793, and was educated somewhere at the North. While yet a young man he emigrated to this city, where he commenced practicing at the bar. His legal career was an unusually successful one, and taking a deep interest in politics, at the expiration of about twenty years he abandoned it in order to devote himself entirely to political pursuits. He was elected to serve Louisiana in Congress, first in the House of Representatives, and afterward in the Senate. At the outbreak of the Mexican war, in 1846, he was appointed by President Polk minister to that republic, and was known throughout that era as an ardent advocate of the "manifest destiny" doctrine, which aimed at the absorption of Mexico, Cuba and Central America. He was subsequently re-elected to the Senate, where he remained until the outbreak of the civil war. During Mr. Buchanan's administration, of whom he was a firm and intimate friend, he was offered and declined the embassy to France. From the moment of Mr. Lincoln's election, however, he became an ardent secessionist, taking a leading part in the chain of political events which led to the subsequent contest. Among the leaders of the Confederacy he also became conspicuous in his labors to carry it to a successful establishment. At an early stage of its existence he was appointed by President Davis one of the commissioners to Europe, in which capacity his seizure upon the "Trent," subsequent imprisonment, and final release at the demand of England, was one of the most notable occurrences of the memorable contest. During the continuance of the war he remained at Paris, where he has indeed resided up to the present time, always upon the most intimate terms with the Emperor, and much respected by the French people. Mr. Slidell, during his career, accumulated a large fortune, and leaves a family of children, all of whom are residing abroad.

With the small space at our disposal this morning it is impossible to lay before the [illegible] than the above hasty outline of his life. But the career of [illegible] thoroughly identified with the history of Louisiana, so high in the estimation of her people, and linked to them by so many ties, requires a more extended notice, which we shall take an early opportunity to furnish.—New Orleans Times.

LOUISIANA SUGAR.

The sugar crop of Louisiana, says the American Sugar Planter, for the last season [illegible] estimated at 144,881 hogsheads, weighing 168,878,592 pounds, against 87,090 in 1869-70; an increase of about sixty-six per cent. The coming crop promises to reach, with a good grinding season, at least 225,900 hogsheads. The first crop after the war was only 6,668 hogsheads; and as the attention of planters is now more and more turned toward sugar planting, on account of the low price of cotton during the past season, and the destruction of fully one-half of the Cuban plantations, thus insuring for sugar a good market in the future at paying prices, it is probable that very soon the production will equal, if not surpass, that of the year before the war, or about 500,000 hogsheads of sugar, and 875,000 barrels of molasses. Of the last crop 126,657 hogsheads were brown sugar, made by the old process, and 1,825 hogsheads were refined or clarified sugars. The yield of molasses was very large, being about seventy-one gallons to each hogshead of sugar, while last year the yield was but sixty-five gallons. The total amount of molasses this year was 10,281,419 gallons.

The number of sugar-houses in operation the past year were 1,105, of which 837 were worked by horse power. In 1869 the number in operation were 817, of which 661 used steam, and 153 horse power. We may consider this a very gratifying increase, especially as all reports from Cuba, Mauritius and the East Indies show a large falling off in the production of cane sugar, and as the next beet sugar crop of the continent, owing to the late war, will also show a decided deficiency.

Yazoo District Conference and Camp Meeting.

Mr. Editor: Our District Conference and camp meeting for Yazoo district, North Mississippi Conference, at Bethel camp ground, Attala county, closed on Monday night, July 31. It was a great success. The attendance of preachers and laymen was very good. The absentees have missed a great blessing. Family affliction kept me away till Saturday. The conference elected Rev. K. A. Jones president, and Joseph McGee secretary. They conducted their business harmoniously and rapidly, but thoroughly. The pastoral reports are encouraging.

The camp meeting was on the self-sustaining plan—each tenter provided for his own. The crowd was immense. The order was perfect—no whisky, no profanity, no improper conduct to mar the religious feelings of any one. We intended from the beginning to give prominence to revival efforts. The brethren well carried out our views; so when I got there I found things progressing beautifully. The preaching, praying and singing were of the right kind, and attended with the power and demonstration of the Holy Ghost. Convictions were pungent. Agonizing cries for mercy told too plainly of the distress of the penitent. The joy of converts equaled the anguish of the penitents. By Monday night the encampment was in a blaze of religious life. Preaching gave place to altar work. Scores of the slain of the Lord, around the altar, in the aisles, all over the vast assembly, rent the air with penitential cries, agonizing prayer, and victorious shouts. You could but think of the day of Pentecost. A great many were happily converted, many reclaimed, and the whole church rebaptized with the Holy Ghost. All agreed they never saw a better meeting. The supporters of the meeting were astonished at how little trouble and expense a self-sustaining camp meeting is maintained. Camp meetings are reinstated on this district, thank God.

WHISKEY STATISTICS.

The Methodist: "The Statistical Bureau [illegible]shington presents, from time to time, invaluable data in almost [illegible] department of the public interests. Reformers, journalists, all sorts of publicists, find its reports an inexhaustible arsenal of munitions for their various contests. Its chief, Mr. E. S. Young, has given the temperance reformers some mighty facts lately. The government returns of the annual whisky product show 62,5[illegible],000 gallons—valuation, $375,000,000! Total product of fermented liquors, [illegible],000 barrels—valuation [illegible],000. Valuation of distilled liquors, $100,000,000. Estimate valuation, $601,000,000! Licensed liquor stores in the country, 150,000; value of their annual sales, about $700,000,000! According to these figures, then, we are gulping down our throats, in worse than useless liquids, enough wealth to pay off, in about three years, our immense national debt!

"There are two somewhat contrasted suggestions which will occur to considerate men in contemplating these enormous statistics. One is the discouraging folly and depravity that still beset the most advanced civilization and override our most obvious self-interest. That a nation characterized, like ours, by the most energetic industry, the intensest love of money, for bettering our condition in life, should pour out this vast sacrifice of treasure at the altar of a hideous and ruinous vice, is simply astounding. Mr. Young gives some startling illustrations of the prodigious annual waste. If spread upon the ground in one-dollar notes, it would cover an area of 20,446 acres. If paid in gold, a ton of which is worth $574,000, and loaded on wagons, each carrying one ton, and occupying a space of seven yards, it would require 1,045 wagons, which would form a procession six miles long. In silver, worth $31,200, it would require 19,230 wagons, which would form a line 76 miles in length. To complete the picture, let the wives and children of drunkards, and the widows and orphans of those who have died drunkards during the past year, follow these wagons in melancholy procession, their cries of anguish ascending to heaven, and the line would extend thousands of miles. And yet what are all these facts compared with the moral wrecks with which the vice stains both time and eternity?"

THE POPE AND THE IRISH.

We take the subjoined extract from the news department of a Catholic paper, and it is therefore authentic. That fable of St. Colombo and the relics of the saints, and that other about St. Clare and "the body of the Lord himself," sound more like nursery tales than the words of a venerable prelate addressed to grown men. Were his holiness and his hearers grave and composed while the instructive incidents were being narrated by the infallible vicar of Jesus Christ?

Rome, July 1.—The following is the answer made by his holiness to the address laid at his feet in the name of the Irish in Rome, by Count de la Poer, M. P., D. L.: "It is a great consolation to me to see myself surrounded by the good Irish. Yes! Ireland has given continued proof of her love, respect and filial attachment to the vicar of Jesus Christ; she has assisted him also liberally with an open hand, generously and untiringly. This is due principally to her faith, which she has known how to maintain intact in the midst of long sufferings, assisting also largely to preserve it in England and Scotland. To preserve this faith, your episcopacy, united and compact, labored assiduously, and your clergy fought with zeal and courage the battles of the Lord, and the fruit of this unshaken fortitude was the dawn of the greater liberty you enjoy to-day. This faith by your labors has spread itself all over the world. You speak of St. Colombo, one of your illustrious apostles. Well, let me recall a trait of that ancient faith of which he was the master and example. While the enemy was besieging the walls of his monastery, he collected here and there the relics of saints which he placed on them, that they might be their defense, and the besiegers, terrified, did not dare to advance or to assail walls consecrated by the venerable relics of holy men. A similar fact occurred in Italy. When St. Clare saw her Assisi surrounded by Saracen invaders, she caused not relics, but the body of the Lord himself to be brought, that he might be protected of the monastery and of his daughters. The freebooters, blinded and disheartened by God, precipitated themselves from the walls and fled ignominiously. I pray to the Lord that this faith, the greatest of his gifts, and the foundation of all others, may return and reign in this world. And now I bless you all with my whole heart; your bodies, your souls, your substance, your whole island, that God may preserve you from all evil, may protect you at all time, and in the last moment of your lives, that you may gain a happy eternity."

An Honest Man.—The Observer and Commonwealth thus notices the recent death of an old citizen of Lonisville:

On the morning of July 25 Robert F. Hibbitt, a merchant of Lonisville, Kentucky, died suddenly at an advanced age. His career as a business man is spoken of by every one in terms of highest praise. Some twenty-five years ago, having become security for some of his friends, he failed in business, but he never rested till he had paid every dollar, principal and interest. Even in cases where usurious interest had been stipulated upon, he insisted upon paying it also. He was an earnest member of the Methodist Church South, and a man who showed his faith by his works. In his funeral sermon the Rev. Dr. Rivers expressed his opinion that "a more honest man never lived, a more sincere Christian never died. No purer spirit has ever gone from the church in Lonisville to the church in heaven. Let us honor his virtues and follow his example, and, in a few short years at most, we that mourn now shall rejoice in a reunion which shall be as joyous as it shall be undisturbed, by all the changes of time and through all the cycles of eternity."

Do good, and throw it into the sea; if the fishes don't know it, God will.

WHAT IS SOUND?

BY SHIRLEY BROOKS.

A sound came booming through the air;
"What is that sound?" quoth I.
My blue-eyed pet, with golden hair,
Made answer presently:
"Papa, you know it very well—
That sound—it was Saint Pancras Bell."

"My own Louise, put down the cat,
And come and stand by me;
I'm sad to hear you talk like that;
Where's your philosophy?
That sound—attend to what I tell—
That sound was not Saint Pancras Bell.

"Sound is the name the sage elects
For the concluding term
Of a long series of effects,
Of which that blow's the germ.
The following brief analysis
Shows the interpolations. Miss.

"The blow which, when the clapper slips,
Falls on your friend, the Bell,
Changes its circle to ellipse
(A word you'd better spell,)
And then comes elastically,
Restoring what it used to be.

"Nay, making it a little more,
The circle shifts about;
As much as they shrunk in before,
The Bell, you see, swells out;
And so a new ellipse is made
(You're not attending, I'm afraid.)

"This change of form disturbs the air,
Which in its turn behaves
In like elastic fashion there,
Creating waves on waves,
Which press each other onward, dear,
Until the outmost finds your ear.

"Within that ear the surgeons find
A tympanum, or drum,
Which has a little bone behind—
Malleus, it is called by some;
Those not proud of Latin grammar
Humbly translate it as the hammer.

"The wave's vibration this transmits
On to this incus bone
(Incus means anvil, which it hits,)
And this transfers the tone
To the small os orbiculare,
The tiniest bone that people carry.

"The stape's next—the name recalls
A stirrup's form, my daughter—
Joins three half-circular canals,
Each fill'd with limpid water;
Their curious lining, you'll observe,
Made of the auditory nerve.

"This vibrates next; and then we find
The mystic work is crown'd;
For then my daughter's gentle Mind
First recognizes sound.
See what a host of causes swell
To make up what you call the 'Bell.'"

Awhile she paused, my bright Louise,
And ponder'd on the case;
Then, settling that he meant to tease,
She slipp'd her father's face.
"You bad old man, to sit and tell
Such gibberygeek about a Bell!"

CALL TO THE MINISTRY.

Mr. Editor: Once I heard a brother say to his congregation: "If my salvation did not depend on my preaching I would come down from the pulpit and never go up into it again." The remark astonished me exceedingly; and in talking with him about it, I saw he was driven into the ministry rather than called—and driven, too, by the fear of hell; yet he was a good and useful preacher. Once I heard Bishop Pierce, making a speech, say he felt it was a privilege to preach the gospel, that he delighted in the work, and would rather be on the poorest circuit in the Georgia Conference than to be president of a college, or even Governor of the State. It seemed to me he obeyed a call rather than yielded to a force.

Once I heard a man, who wanted to obtain license, say a voice came to him in the night, saying: "Go preach the gospel." The winds and trees and birds repeated the command, "Go preach the gospel," and with much trepidation and reluctance he was seeking the indorsement of the church. This man seemed to me to be under a delusion; yet I will not say that God did not call him. In his ignorance he mistook, perhaps, the inward movings of the Spirit for an audible voice from without. This is not an uncommon thing with certain states and conditions of mind. And he may have been mistaken as to the manner of the call, and not mistaken as to the fact of the call.

I have heard other experiences differing from these, and have known the men to be faithful and efficient. Among Methodists there is no difference of opinion as to the necessity of a divine call. All agree that no man should take this honor to himself, and that it is a special function of the Holy Ghost to designate men to this work. But about the signs accompanying—the thoughts and feelings—there is not such a perfect agreement of sentiment.

The standard held up by most writers in the church papers is that of the first brother. The penalty of eternal death must, according to them, be always over a man, and his eye must always be fixed on that penalty. The Holy Spirit must always call through fears of the pains of hell. The imagination must have vividly before it the image of some poor lost spirit reeking and dripping with flames, and everlastingly wailing out: "Woe is me that I did not preach the gospel." Whoever enters the ministry, without having had his fears alarmed by some such horrible vision, is a soul either deluded by Satan or filled with all hypocrisy and guilt, going where angels would tremble to stand, offering strange fire on the altar, bringing ruin into the temple and dissolution into the vineyard, and doing a great many other blasphemous and sacrilegious things. Their great proof-text is First Corinthians ix, 16: "For necessity is laid upon me; yea, woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel."

Now I do not deny that this is a mode used by the divine Spirit; for I believe it is. But I do not believe it is the only mode, nor even the one generally used in calling men into the ministry. The tendency of constantly insisting on such feelings, and of making them the test and proof of this duty, is to discourage young men, and to keep them from entering the work. They reason thus: "If such feelings and views always accompany the call, I am not called, because I am not conscious of such an experience. It is true I do not desire money, except to relieve distress and help the gospel. True, I care not for the praise of men, and am unwilling to contend for the crowns of bay and laurel. True, my most pious friends think I ought to preach, and some of them urge me to do so. My father and my mother consecrated me to the Lord, and in their prayers they say they have asked him a thousand times to put me into this work. True, I grieve and am sad when thinking of the sins of my neighbors, and pray they may be converted, and that light may dawn on the darkness of the heathen. True, I delight in nothing more than a revival of religion, where souls are born to God. True, I think with peculiar delight on the time when all men shall praise and honor the blessed Redeemer. But I don't feel that terrible 'woe is me' the preachers talk so much about, and therefore, however much my heart would delight in the work of proclaiming the truth by which men are made happy and free, yet I am not called, and must not go." In this way it is that men to whom the Spirit speaks softly—whom he touches gently—are hindered from seeing what God would have them do. They are afraid to touch the ark or to offer incense, lest they be destroyed, because of the absence of the feeling "woe is me."

But does the expression of Paul, in First Corinthians, have the meaning usually given to it? I believe not. "For woe is me if I may not, cannot preach the gospel." Both these verbs are in the present tense, and have by no law of the language any reference necessarily to a future time. The woe is on him now, if he cannot preach the gospel now. It is a present and not a future affliction—a sorrow and distress now endured, and not one yet to come. From the words employed by St. Paul there is no reason to think he had eternal and future punishment in his mind at all. Suppose you were standing at the door of an immense hospital, filled with persons, as far as you could see, all dying with a common disease, and that yourself, having had the identical disease, had recovered by using a certain medicine, and that, full of vigor and health and hope, you had the remedy in your hand, and enough to restore every one of the miserable wretches before you. As you looked over the vast multitudes languishing in want, crying in pain, groaning in despair, and struggling with death, would you not feel it a great hardship to be denied the privilege of helping them to live? Would not your sympathy for the poor creatures before you, and your gratitude to the benefactor who had saved your life, and your desire to tell others his name and make known to them his goodness, urge you to do what you could for their relief? Certainly. And if this privilege were denied you, and you were forced to stand and do nothing but look on, or to depart from the place without relieving a solitary case, as you retired your heart would be oppressed and burdened, and you would feel exceedingly unhappy. This illustrates what the apostle meant when he said: "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel." And I have no doubt that this woe is on many a young man to-day. He is miserable, and don't know the reason. God has called him to take the balm of salvation to the perishing multitudes in the great cities and towns and country places; but the old and the wise and the good of the church tell him not to go—that it will be to carry death instead of life to these immortal souls. He listens to them because he reveres and honors their piety and wisdom. So he is of no use to the church—stifling, at the suggestion of the church itself, the voice of God in him. The church should not only pray the Lord to send laborers into the harvest, but should hunt out the laborers; and when the Spirit suggests to her heart a particular one as suitable, she should communicate the fact to that one, and urge him into the service.

PARSONAGES.

Mr. Editor: As Methodist ministers are consecrated to one great work—the salvation of souls—like their Master, Jesus Christ, they sunder the ties of home, and go out, not having where to lay their heads, save as temporarily provided by a Mary or Martha. The Methodist economy will not permit her ministers to remain long enough in any one locality to provide a permanent home for themselves. She counts it her chief strength to possess an itinerant host of able, consecrated men of God.

A late District Conference revealed the fact that within its bounds, comprising eleven charges, only two parsonages are in existence, and these at stations. Nine circuits without homes for their ministers! Where do they live—that is, their wives and little ones?

O what waste of precious time and service in going to and from their work! Who visits the sick, buries the dead and performs the duties of a pastor while the pastor is away? Who is to blame for this condition of affairs?

We are advancing in matters appertaining to home comforts, such as stoves, wells near the kitchens, with pumps; store clothes, etc., for home; neat framed church buildings, with organs and choirs, for God; the Sunday schools are in great favor; finances looking up (slightly.) But the parsonages! Only two on one of the strongest districts in the Mississippi Conference. Our Bishops at Conference tell us of the cry coming up from every quarter: "Send us a good pastor." The Bishops appreciate good pastors and always send them where there is a good parsonage. Now, brother circuit stewards, secure five, ten or twenty acres of good land, located as near the center of your circuit as possible; get a clear deed in Discipline form, and have it recorded at once; then build a comfortable parsonage, with necessary out-buildings. Furnish it as well as possible, send word to the Bishop that "you want a good pastor," and "you mean to take care of him." And, mark my word, you will get a worker.

Tredor.

The South London Press tells this characteristic anecdote of Mr. Spurgeon:

"Recently an eminent Baptist called on him, and made a statement to the following effect: Ten years ago he had set aside £1,000 toward building a chapel, but untoward circumstances had intervened and prevented the execution of his design. This he was now, he said, desirous of carrying into execution, and he trusted Mr. Spurgeon would render him his assistance. 'What do you wish me to do?' asked the pastor of the Tabernacle. 'To give me your powerful aid in raising a second thousand, which is imperatively required.' 'I understand,' said Mr. Spurgeon; 'but let us see—you have had the use of this money for ten years?' 'Yes.' 'During that time it must have been worth to you at least ten per cent. per annum?' 'Well, I dare say.' 'Then, my dear sir, you have got the money without troubling me. Go and build the chapel.' And the applicant departed, satisfied with this business-like and thoroughly practical view of the matter."

MOUNT STERLING HIGH SCHOOL.

Mr. Editor: Mount Sterling is situated four miles west of Tuscahoma, a landing on the Tombighoo river, in Choctaw county, Alabama. Its geographical location is a good one, being accessible to a large section of country, unoccupied by a school of so high a grade. The truth is we cannot have too many schools of high grade, if properly located. Of colleges this is not the case. If our views of a college be correct, it is easier to apply the term college to a high school than for such a school to do the work of a college. If we had a less number of colleges, and gave to them the work properly belonging to a college, it would be better for us. Bishop Asbury did not see the necessity of colleges so much as schools of high grade. Now no man ever had a keener perception of the wants and necessities of the people than he had, and our present surroundings are not so dissimilar to those of his day and time. Is it not true that nine students out of ten would have all the advantages that their mental capacity is capable of receiving in first-class schools? and is it not true that such schools can be sustained with more certainty and at less expense than colleges? and will they not eventually furnish our colleges with such material as is only proper for college training? If there ever was a time when the people were called upon to exert themselves to their utmost ability for the education of their children, that time is upon us now. The church of Almighty God demands this of us; our heroes that sleep in their soldier graves demand it of us; the future welfare of our country demands it of us; and would it not be wisdom upon our part to pursue that course that would draw loss upon our wasted substance and give a more general diffusion of knowledge? This, we believe, can be best accomplished by building up schools of high grade; and such is the character of our school at Mount Sterling. It is located in a section of country where no other school of similar character exists, and where the absence of such a school would paralyze many of the interests of the country, and prevent many enterprising emigrants from seeking a home among us. Surrounded by fair agricultural advantages, with good health and the best of water, it becomes the duty of every good citizen to contribute his influence to assist in building up and sustaining this institution of learning.

This school is under the care of Bro. S. S. Mellin, A. M., who has made teaching the business of his life, and whose past success as an instructor of youths warrants us in saying he is excelled by but few if any teachers in the South. As an instructor of our sons and daughters he has, by his quiet and unassuming, yet firm and decided manner, won a high place in the esteem and confidence of this community, and the influence exercised by him over his pupils makes him a model disciplinarian. His pupils are found all over this Southern country, and many of them are now filling high and responsible positions, both in Church and State. The church is proud of such men as Prof. Massey, now principal of the male department of the Centenary Institute, at Summerfield, and we doubt not that Prof. Massey rejoices that early in his educational career he fell into the hands of so accomplished a scholar and so thorough a teacher as Bro. Mellin.

We may state that Bro. Mellin is favorably known to many of the preachers of the Methodist Church South, and we feel confident that what we have said of him would be cordially indorsed by all of them, including such names as Drs. Hamilton and Andrews, of Mobile, J. T. Heard, of Vicksburg, Mississippi, and J. A. Heard, of Jackson, Tennessee.

Could the reader have been present at the annual examination of Bro. Mellin's school, on the fifth and sixth of July, he would have been impressed with its real merits. The full and undivided attention of the large audience was a compliment beyond anything we could write. The valedictory address was delivered by Mr. George G. Slater, of this county. It was a touching tribute of respect to his teacher, fellow-pupils and community. During its delivery there was many a moist eye in the audience. The soul of his teacher was filled to overflowing, and the speaker's voice gave evidence that his heart accompanied the words his lips were uttering. When he had taken his seat Colonel Prince, a distinguished citizen of Mount Sterling, well known throughout the State and the South as a warm friend of education, came forward and made such an impromptu address as only Colonel Prince can make. In this address he spoke in the highest terms of the school. He alluded in feeling terms to the entire exemption of this institution from those riotous scenes in which boys are so apt to indulge when out loose from the restraints of home and parental influence, and justly complimented the pupils for their high-toned bearing and uniform courtesy in all their intercourse with each other and with the citizens of the place. Thus closed the literary exercises of the occasion. A grateful community had prepared a sumptuous repast, around which teachers, scholars and audience then gathered, and for awhile forgot the toils and labors of the year.

BAPTIST IDEAS.

Mr. Editor: Yesterday was a day of unusual interest to our quiet little town. Our people turned out en masse to witness the dedication service of the new Baptist church in Mansfield. This year the Baptist Church here, notwithstanding the hardness of the times, have built and paid for a commodious and handsome church edifice, which cost, perhaps, not less than $4,000. This speaks well for their benevolence and devotion. In less than two years Mansfield, with a population, it may be, of not more than a thousand, has built two commodious church edifices — Methodist and Baptist—at a cost of not less than $8,000; for which we feel very much like congratulating the citizens for their good fortune and benevolence. Elder J. R. Graves, of Tennessee, preached the dedication sermon, made an address in the evening on the subject of a Baptist publishing house, and preached at night. After hearing him through patiently, our impression of him was that he is a man of strange and unfortunate ambition.

In the morning sermon, after a harangue of two hours and a half, having unchurched all other denominations of Christians, from the Roman Catholics to the Quakers, making them all human organizations, wicked in design, and unapproved of God, and even saying vulgar things of some of them, he seemed to charge the final point by reading, from what looked to us from our standpoint like an encyclopedia of religious knowledge, that some pedo-Baptist author in the Netherlands had said: "The Baptist Church is the only church on the face of the earth that dates its origin from the days of the apostles." It occurred to us, and we were hardly responsible for it: "What a flood of light!" In the evening we wondered if the tirade would be changed, or the theme different; but the necessity of a Baptist publishing house was based upon the ground that all other denominations had theirs, and by their literature were shelling them at long range. To an outsider the impression would have been that all Christian denominations were a set of belligerents, whose only design was to conquer each other.

At night the first half of the sermon, "On the blessedness of the man whose sins were covered," was lucid and to the point, but then the finale was a labored discussion, first, on the doctrine of the final perseverance of the saints, in preaching which we never could see what was to be gained. If it be true, nothing is gained; if not, it would certainly be injurious.

Next he repudiated the notion of a final judgment in the sense it is usually received by all the churches. If any religious impressions we made, or better emotions create we are not aware of it. We kno that there were some bitter feelin and sectarian prejudices stirred u The churches of Mansfield claim live in peace and harmony wi each other, being influenced by t cement of brotherly love, and wh strangers come among us as teac ers they should hear this in min

SENTIMENTAL RELIGION.

Mr. Editor: What a poor sub stitute in the hour of sickness an death is a religion of sentiment. saw an illustration of this in an ac complished lady, who tried to co sole herself with its poetical illusio without any correct views of th plan of salvation by faith in th atoning blood of Jesus. I visite her once on a bed of sickness, fo her constitution was very delicat She looked back upon a happy lif filled up with artificial tastes of re fiuement, in which fancy and im agination were cultivated at the ex pense of the reflective powers o thought. Her kind intercourse o friendship, and interchange of mu tual feelings with the refined tast of fashionable forms and conven tionalities of life, constituted fo her the perfection of human happi ness. She had a fine library o handsomely illustrated books, which adorned her shelves, composed o light literature.

She was herself a great reader could talk eloquently about books, and also on religious theories. I visited her again on a bed of linger ing sickness. A splendidly bound Testament was lying by her side, and she directed my attention par ticularly to its magnificent binding. She lived in the past, and kept up an animated conversation, telling me what she had been, how she had shone as a belle in the circles of fashion, and the attentions received.

"Fame! fame! thou can'st not be the stay
Unto the drooping reed,
The cool, fresh fountains in the day
Of the soul's feverish need;
Where must the lone one turn or flee?
Not unto thee—O! not to thee."

Her rooms were furnished in har mony with her character. Her portfolio, which lay upon her table, was full of beautiful engravings, various pictures adorned her walls, and everything was designed to in terest those who called upon her, especially the young, whose society she delighted to entertain. A widow, and childless, she dwelt alone with her servants, having wealth enough to sustain her position. Her house was situated in a romantic place, re lieved with a back-ground of woods; the front, a flower garden with ter raced walks, overlooking a beauti ful valley below. Everything was designed to amuse her lonely hours and court admiration; although her resources were comparatively inno cent, and in good taste, yet she felt their insufficiency to satisfy the yearning of the immortal spirit. She was advancing in years, and health failing, death looked fearful as she approached its vestibule. She studied some religious works, and was able to go out and be baptized, and for a while these outward cere monies satisfied her conscience, without the testimony of the Holy Spirit.

The hour came at last when she was about to change time for eter nity. She was in anguish; she called upon others to pray for her, and wept bitter tears of repentance. She passed away, feeling truly her need of Christ, and the insuffi ciency of every theory and opinion of others, without the evidence of the Holy Spirit in the forgiveness of sin.

How sweetly does the religion of Jesus tinge with its radiance every earthly blessing. How it mellows each gift, and reconciles us to dis appointments and afflictions de signed to wean us from this world of change, making the gloomy val ley of the shadow of death a bright pathway to heaven above, where all tears are wiped away, and our happi ness is to endure forever!

DANGEROUS ELEMENTS.

If my observation has not deived me, we are even now in the idst of a movement as forceful and regular as any in the past ages. here is always, in the very nature these movements, cause of alarm. here is danger in them, even the st of them. Among the forces at ork there is much depravity of ought and feeling. The movent is not always that of the wise ader. Not unfrequently it is the ging of a blind domigod, roused some chance to fury. There is uch unwise demolition of struces that must be bnilded again. If we are, then, in the midst of a w era of thonght, if the great eam of history in Christendom s just started down a slant toard some now preoipice, it bemes us well to study the elements d direction of the movement, and ert, as much as in us lies, the evil at may be in it. Much evil mixes self in with the best movements, d some are almost wholly bad. e is a wise man who can, at all nes, distinguish the tares from the heat. For every Luther there ust be a John of Leyden, and for ery Latimer a Bonner. Licentiusness and despotism will balance ch other.

Let us look around. What are e forces that are coming together w to coalesce with or to antagoze each other? Take American ciety as it is now. The ends of e earth are coming together here. any antagonisms are meeting. om Europe—Germany and Ireand especially—there are coming two streams, upon one classificaon—that is, on the basis of religon. Superstition and unbelief are e two streams. They are diverse the waters of the Missouri and ssissippi rivers, but henceforth ey are in one channel, and must t along down the stream together mehow, mingled or distinct, a e forces present may determin long with these is the sound Prtstant thought of the country.

Not to be despised among the lements of thought which affect ith, is Spiritism. Its appeal is ade at once to that potent fact of onsciousness, superstition and to nsuality, which is as powerful in sinfluence as the other. Yet no man uppose that the American people re too highly educated to be superstitious. No culture can furnish a uarantee against it It is a depraved exercise of the faith-faculty. his faculty is in the very constitution of man, and must become active. If it turns away from the hristian Scripture it must find ome false object. Then its exercise superstition. So grotesque exravagance need surprise us, even mong the most cultivated people, when the objects of faith are left to the "natural selection" of a depraved heart.

As matter of fact the Spiritists re very numerous, especially in those sections where "public schools" have held undisputed sway for so long a time. They publish several periodicals and cheap books. They support a number of lecturers, men and women, of no little wit. They carry on an active and formidable movement of propagandism. What the end is to be no man can tell. They strike at the very foundation of social order. All sorts of social and disorganizing views gravitate toward this diabolical center. In its relation to Christianity it is directly and intensely infidel.

Let us hope that Mormonism and Chinese Buddhism will never be appreciable elements of society on this continent. And yet, who knows whether they will not?

Among the social elements coming into active force, the chief are the doctrine of "woman's rights," so called, and Communism. The latter's movement assails, without flinching or disguise—or at least many of its advocates do, and, logically, it comes to that—the scriptural order as to domestic relations. A large proportion of its champions are infidels. The system itself is, logically, infidel and disorganizing. This is fatal to the existence of the family, and that is the corner-stone of all organization, both social and civil. Without the family the State goes to pieces, and anarchy takes possession of the world. Then civilization itself becomes impossible. Loosen woman from her heaven-appointed and most beautiful orbit, and everything goes to wreck. It is the charm of woman's modesty and purity that holds all society in its coherency. Analyze it and you will see that this is true. Woman's modesty and purity are the very heart of the social fabric. They form the center of gravitation, holding everything in its place.

Yet there are not wanting popular preachers, and influential dignitaries of the church, who are urging this mad theory, and lending the influence of their character to coarsen woman into a political hack, so that all the magnetism of her pure, high nature may be, if possible, destroyed. It is not the first time that professed ministers of religion have volunteered to do devils' work. But, as I have intimated, there is an irresistible drift toward infidelity in all this business, and many of the women engaged in it are already debased. One of the most fatal features of it is that those women who have the credit of being virtuous wink at the base characters who volunteer to help on the movement. In some quarters the tendency of this movement to destroy the distinction between vice and virtue is already apparent. Yet the movement has gained ground, and many believe that it is still gaining. Whereunto it may grow who can tell?

Communism is Radicalism in its final form. Its historical antecedents are the leveling doctrines of the French infidelity of the eighteenth century, imported by Jefferson, Franklin and Paine into this country, and popularized by them and others during our revolt against the mother country. These doctrines were taken up and pushed forward upon the line of their inevitable logic by the Radicals and fanatical Abolitionists of this country, until they embroiled the nation in a horrible civil war. And the momentum of the movement, if I see clearly, is still increasing. We have seen its last bloody work in Paris. Thoughtful men, in the more populous regions of our country, dread the development of the next five years. For this Radicalism, Abolitionism, Communism, whichever you may choose to call it, is also called by another name—Agrarianism. It is a war on all distinctions. It is the last term of its syllogism, the first being this: All men are created equal.

Communism, too, is, in the essence of it, infidel, for it assails the very foundations on which religion is built. It contemns authority, despises dignities. It is the antagonist of order, for distinctions are essential in the very idea of order, and religion rests on order.—Bishop Marvin, in St. Louis Christ. Advocate.

PHYLACTERIES. — "Mother," said Mary Smith, "I have been reading in the New Testament, and it says here, in the twenty-third chapter of Matthew and fifth verse, that 'the scribes and Pharisees make broad their phylacteries, and enlarge the borders of their garments.' What were their phylacteries? I have been looking a long time in the Bible to find out what they were, but I cannot find any explanation."

"That is nothing strange, my child," said Mrs. Smith; "for Matthew xxiii, 5, is the only place where that strange word occurs in the Scriptures, and it is simply the name given to strips of parchment or paper, on which were written passages of the law of Moses. The Jews were accustomed to wear these strips of parchment fastened upon their foreheads and on their left arms, but the scribes and Pharisees made theirs broader than others because they desired to have people think that they were better than others."

"Well," said Mary, "that is very simple when you come to explain it. I had no idea that it was anything that I could understand so easily. I think I shall always remember now what phylacteries mean, and I shall take more pleasure in reading this chapter because I know what they are."—The Guiding Star.

SHAKING HANDS.—There are two small churches in a little village which I know about. All the new people who come to stop in the village go to one of these churches, and not to the other. Both are neat, both are pretty, both have the pure gospel preached in them, both have good pastors, both have good members.

Now, what draws strangers and outsiders to one church more than to the other? Can you think? Because the people shake hands with them, and are glad to see them. When a stranger comes to town they take pains to hunt him up and ask him to come to church with them, and make room for him in their pews.—Child's Paper.

Thou wilt conquer in me as thou hast for me.

GESTURE-LANGUAGE IN ITALY.

In southern Italy there is current a venerable story, which is here given with all reserve, as the diplomats say; in other words, it is totally unworthy of belief. The story is this: A stranger present at a cabinet council at Naples, after some silent pantomime had taken place, asked when business was going to begin, and was told that it was over.

"But," objected the astonished stranger, "nobody has said a word."

"True," was the answer, "but surely you observed what was going on?"

"I saw nothing going on," said the stranger, "except a few shrugs and grimaces, and the king signing his name. You don't mean to say you call that business?"

"Of course," was the answer. "What's the use of a long talk, when we can express our meaning as well, and more quickly, by signs."

The story, though an exaggeration, is, nevertheless, not so utterly absurd as it seems to the English reader. Southern Italians use a great deal of gesture while speaking; not because they are deaf or dumb, for they are quick of hearing, everlasting talkers, and remarkably intelligent, but because they have picturesque instincts, and are not satisfied with expressing their ideas by feeble words; while they satisfy their natural impatience by gestures in lieu of whole sentences, and can and do occasionally carry on conversations without any speech at all. For example: I have seen a man in a balcony near the top of a house narrate entirely by gestures his day's adventures to a friend on the ground floor of a house on the opposite side of a street.

The gesture-language is believed to be, in the main, the same all the world over; still, in places widely apart, in which the habits of life are very different, it is natural to expect a corresponding difference in a language which is plainly imitative, and nothing else. In Mr. Tylor's work upon the "Early History of Mankind," which contains a very interesting account of this language, it is stated that according to the general practice of mankind, shaking the head is the sign for the negative "No." In southern Italy, however, shaking the head never means "No," but always, "I don't understand you; what do you mean?" while "No" is expressed by elevating the chin and protruding the under lip a little; and a still stronger negative by the same movements, to which is added scraping the under side of the chin with the tips of the right hand fingers, holding the knuckles outward, and the fingers slightly bent. In the curious affidavit in support of the will of a deaf and dumb man, unable to read and write, quoted by Mr. Tylor, which explains the signs used by the testator to express his testamentary wishes, it is to be observed that the testator expressed his death by laying the side of his head in the palm of his right hand, and then lowering the right hand, palm upward, to the ground. In southern Italy, a Catholic country, death is expressed by making the sign of the cross with the first two fingers of the right hand held together, upright, before the face, that being the final action of the priest when administering the sacrament to a dying person. The gesture by which the English deaf and dumb man expressed his death would, omitting the lowering of his hand, mean, in southern Italy, sleep. In this country we beckon a person toward us by holding a hand or finger with the tips upward. In southern Italy, however, the tips are held downward, and the English manner of beckoning is used for salutation. The verb "go" is expressed in southern Italy by holding the open hand, the palm perpendicular, to the ground, and pointed in the intended direction, and shaking the hand up and down from the wrist; while in this country we simply point with the index-finger. In southern Italy hunger is expressed by extending the thumb and first finger, keeping the others closed, over the mouth, and giving a rotary motion from the wrist. The reader is at liberty to try this upon any organ-grinder he meets, and mark the result. "To-day" is expressed by closing all the fingers of the right hand except the index, then pointing downward, making a rapid slight movement of the hand up and down; "to-morrow" is the same, except that the movement is greater and from the elbow. Numbers, of course, are shown by holding up the fingers.

COURTING.—Here is a specimen of the good old-fashioned mode of courting as it is done in Connecticut. Deacon Marvin, a large landholder and most exemplary man, accomplished his in this business-like way:

Having one day mounted his horse, with a sheepskin for a saddle, he rode in front of the house where Betty Lee lived, and, without dismounting, requested Betty to come to him. On coming he told her that the Lord had sent him to marry her. Betty replied:

"The Lord's will be done."

WHO CAN DRINK MODERATELY?—A moderate drinker always tells me: "I can give it up when I please." So you can. But when you say so, you don't "please." It depends more on the temperament than strength of mind whether, if a man drinks, he becomes a drunkard. You take a cold, phlegmatic man, and he is not likely to become a drunkard. He may be a good man, a good father, a good husband, a good Christian, for aught I know, but he is not warm-hearted, impulsive, quick and generous. His hand falls on yours cold and clammy. Give him drink, and he feels "very comfur-rurrurable." Give him a little more, and he feels "very comfur-rurrurable." Give him another, and he will go to bed "very comfur-rurrurable;" he will get up next morning feeling "very comfur-rur-rurrurable." You can't get him beyond the point of feeling "very comfur-rurrurable." It may affect his vital organs in the end, but there is no evidence of his intemperance. Take the other extreme, for I am dealing in extreme cases. Take a young man, nervous, full of fire, full of poetry, and full of music—a young man who can sing a song or tell a story, noble-hearted, and always ripe for some mischief. Give that man a drink, and what is its effect? He feels it in every fiber of his system. It weakens the power of his will—slightly. It warps his judgment—slightly. It stimulates his mental powers to undue activity—slightly. That man is a changed man—slightly. As he keeps on drinking, and mingles in the outer circles of the world, every circle becomes narrower, narrower, narrower. He says I will give it up when it is injuring me. It is false! false! When you find it is injuring you, then is the time you do not give it up; you are like the soldier who called out to his comrades within the ramparts: "I've got a prisoner." "Bring him in," said they. "He won't come," said he. "Then come in without him," said they. "He won't let me," said he. You think you know and can guard against all danger. You are like the pilot who said he knew every rock in the channel. He steered clear of them for a while, but finally the ship struck. "That's one of 'em, captain," said he.—John B. Gough.

THE TRAVELER IN THE SNOW.—A traveler was crossing a mountain height alone, over almost untrodden snow. Warning had been given him that if slumber pressed down his weary eyelids they would inevitably be sealed in death. For a time he went bravely along his dreary path; but with the deepening shade and freezing blast at night there fell a weight upon his brain and eyes which seemed to be irresistible. In vain he tried to reason with himself, in vain he strained his utmost energies to shake off that fatal heaviness. At this crisis of his fate his foot struck against a heap that lay across his path. No stone was that, although no stone could be colder or more lifeless. He stooped to touch it, and found a human body, half buried beneath a fresh drift of snow. The next moment the traveler had taken a brother in his arms, and was chafing his hands and chest and brow, breathing upon the stiff, cold lips the warm breath of a living soul; pressing the silent heart to the beating pulse of his own generous bosom.

The effort to save another had brought back to himself life and warmth and energy. He was a man again, instead of a weak creature, succumbing to despairing helplessness, dropping down in dreamless sleep to die. "He saved a brother, and was saved himself."—English Hearts and English Hands.

WHEN WAS THE SINNER?—"I am glad," said a missionary to an Indian chief, "that you do not drink whisky, but it grieves me to find that your people are accustomed to drink so much of it." "Ah, yes!" said the red man, as he fixed an eloquent eye upon the preacher, which communicated the reproof before he uttered it, "we Indians use a great deal of whisky, but we do not make it."

A CLERGYMAN, observing a poor man by the road breaking stones, and kneeling to get at his work better, made this remark: "Ah! John, I wish I could break the stony hearts of my hearers as easily as you are breaking those stones." "Perhaps, master, you do not work on your knees," was the reply.

A UNIQUE recommendation given by a clergyman for a friend who desired a situation is as follows: "He is perfectly human, and has made some of the ablest mistakes that ever were made, showing in their happening and in their correcting a hopeful, conscious and growing manhood."

DO ALL around you get, in your ways, such a reflection of Christ's life that they could not understand you without knowing Christ?

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THE Presbyterian Confession of Faith and Shorter Catechism are being translated into the Siamese language.

THERE is a deep interest among the Jews in Germany in the investigation of the claims of Christianity, and they are attending in crowds the preaching of the gospel in the Christian churches.

LEGACIES.—The will of the late Albert Schumacher, of Baltimore, gives $10,000 to the German Society of that city, $10,000 to the German Lutheran Church there, and $5,000 to the Seeforth at Bremen.

THE Jewish Consistory in Paris have sent an address to the Chapter of the Notre Dame, condoling with them on the murder of the Archbishop. The address is signed by all the rabbis and the Baron Rothschild.

THE Wesleyan Missionary Society received and expended about $750,000; and reports for the past year a total of some 5,500 "paid" laborers of all kinds, 22,410 "unpaid," 779 central stations, and 5,230 chapels and other preaching places.

REQUEST FOR A GERMAN BISHOP.—The recent Iowa Methodist State Convention heartily adopted a resolution, introduced by its German members, asking the next General Conference to elect one Bishop who can talk and preach in the German language.

THE Christian Instructor says that there are 92 theological seminaries in the United States, having about 400 professors and 4,000 students. The Presbyterians, Baptists and Roman Catholics have each 13; the Episcopalians 14, Methodists 7, Lutherans 9, and Congregationalists 5.

THE executive committee of the American Unitarian Association are considering the project of building a Unitarian church in Washington. A petition, asking the committee to take action in the matter, and suggesting the raising of a special fund of $50,000 for the purpose, was presented at the last regular monthly meeting by Dr. Bellows, Mr. Hale and others. The subject was referred for further consideration.

THERE is no doubt of the fact that those universities in Germany at which is taught the old orthodox Lutheran system of theology have more students than those which affect the modern or newer Richtung. This shows the healthy reaction that has occurred, and any university that wishes to maintain its popularity and secure the largest number of students must go back to the theology of the Reformation.

LAST YEAR the English churches of all denominations subscribed $3,296,395 to foreign missions, and about $4,000,000 to other societies represented in the May meetings. A grand sum, and it might seem as if the world were about to be converted immediately. But, on the other hand, Great Britain spends as much in two days on liquor as she does in a year on foreign missions; and the total seems somewhat less considerable with this contrast.

WESLEYANS IN ITALY.—The Wesleyan Missionary Society of London is making special efforts to raise funds to build churches at Rome and Naples. A site has been procured in Naples, on which it is proposed to erect a suitable building at the expense of £5,000. An equal sum is asked for to erect a chapel at Rome, to replace the lowly hired rooms. Disused churches or convent chapels have been rented or purchased in Padua, Parma, Vicenza and Mezzano.

THE Rev. Charles Francis Bonaventura Miel, formerly a Roman Catholic priest, who had been transferred to the diocese of Pennsylvania by the Bishop of Illinois, was afterward formally received into the communion of the Protestant Episcopal Church by Bishop Stevens, in accordance with the provisions of the canon governing such cases. The Abbe Miel is a gentleman who held a distinguished position in Paris, being one of the preachers in the Madeleine.

WORTHY OF RECORD.—It is said that in Rome recently, on occasion of the Roman National Guard swearing allegiance to the crown, the crucifix was dispensed with, and in its place the Bible was used. Eight copies of the Holy Scriptures lay on so many tables in the tent, and to these the men marched up, and on these they were sworn, instead of being sworn on the image of Christ. The Jewish officers and men took the legal oath on a copy of the Old Testament brought from the Ghetto by the chief rabbi.

A LITTLE more than a century ago a Roman Catholic, Junipero Serra, laid the foundation of the old Mission church of San Diego, California. But not until three years ago, when the place increased with American settlers, did the erection of school houses and churches begin. The corner-stone of a new Catholic church was laid in North Diego July 18, 1869, and later in the same year the Baptists dedicated their edifice. Then the Methodists followed at the beginning of the next year, and on the eighteenth of June a Presbyterian house of worship was dedicated.

THE Rev. G. N. Morton, of the Southern Presbyterian mission in Brazil, writes, May 3, of expecting to visit a number of towns in the province of Sao Paulo, in which the gospel had never been preached. He enters on his journey hopefully. He says he "expects much fruit. Our Bibles and tracts, distributed by ourselves and the Northern missionaries, have found their way into almost every village and hamlet of the province; and we can hardly visit a town without finding some soul which is groping for the light, and which is ready to welcome us."

THE Moravian says of the mission in Labrador, that "at present there are thirty-seven brethren (ordained and lay) and sisters employed there. The number of persons under their care is something over one thousand, which is about one hundred less than the number ten years ago. This decrease is the consequence of disease. Heathenism has now entirely disappeared from the Labrador coast, and the natives, with a very few exceptions, are connected with the mission. A comparison with the condition of the scattered heathen who live in the extreme north and in the interior demonstrates how much the mission has accomplished."

THE introduction of Sunday schools, though recent, is already effecting a moral transformation in Holland. In 1864 three earnest Christians, deploring the prevailing tendencies to Rationalism, visited Paris to examine the working of the Sunday schools there. Becoming convinced that this was an excellent system for the religious training of children and youth, and for the promotion of Christian activity, they returned, zealous to implant it on their soil. This was done, and a healthy growth is already the result. Strong and vigorous schools are now in operation, and periodicals, unsurpassed in Europe for their ability and influence, have been established.

REVISION OF THE BIBLE.—This company and that for revising the Old Testament are proceeding with their work. They have had monthly meetings of four or five days each for a year past. They meet in two rooms over the cloisters in Westminster Abbey, called the Jerusalem chamber and the Antioch chamber. The one company has reached the third chapter of Mark, and the other is at the life of Jacob. They first of all consider the original text, and, having agreed on that, they discuss the translation. Their rule is to keep, as much as possible, the style and tone of the present version. Hence they always give the preference to words already used somewhere in the Bible when any clause has to be altered. Those members of the company to whom we have spoken anticipate that their work will be a great success.

LOSS OF THE M. E. CHURCH IN VIRGINIA CITY.—The large and fine new brick Methodist Episcopal church in Virginia City, Nevada, built at a cost of $75,000, is in ruins. On Monday evening, July 17, at five minutes before twelve o'clock, a noise like that of the bursting of a heavy steam boiler was heard all over the city. The great walls of the church had fallen with a tremendous crash, and, with the exception of a portion of one end, the whole lay a mass of ruins. Many persons in the city believe the edifice was blown up, but our latest information leads to the assurance that the fall was caused by injuries from the last severe earthquake. It is said that the walls were cracked at the time, and rendered really insecure. The falling walls destroyed two adjoining buildings, and in one of them several persons were injured, but fortunately no lives were lost.—New York Christian Advocate.

THE Pacific agency of the American Tract Society reports that "only four per cent. of the people of California are in membership with evangelical churches. The Roman Catholics claim control of one-half the population. In all the territory west of the Rocky mountains there are about a million inhabitants, and only about thirty thousand, or three per cent., of these are identified with churches. Nearly all of these are in California and Oregon. In 1859 California had only six thousand three hundred and twelve church members. Now there are about twenty-three thousand—an increase of three hundred and sixty per cent. The increase of population in the meantime has been only fifty-two per cent. West of the Rocky mountains there are about one hundred and eighty thousand children of suitable Sunday school age, only thirty thousand of whom are in Protestant schools. The field of one colporteur extends a hundred miles from the mouth of the Columbia river. In all this field there are but five Sunday schools, and Astoria is the only place enjoying stated preaching on the Sunday.—Independent.

OUR SCHOOLS.

We give considerable space this week to the subject of Catholic schools. To be forewarned is to be forearmed. The Methodists and other Protestant denominations have excellent institutions. In our advertising columns will be found the names of many from which parents can choose. In the selection they will be governed by considerations of convenience, health and other grounds of preference. Our chief concern is that we patronize our own schools. They are every way the best for the moral and intellectual culture of our children. It is hardly needful that we urge parents to give their children the full advantages of a liberal education. Let them count no sacrifice and no cost too great, within the bounds of reason, for this object. A good education is a better inheritance than wealth.

REVIVAL AT STARKVILLE, MISS.

Rev. J. R. Allen, writing July 31, says: "For the encouragement of the church elsewhere, I write to inform you that we have had a gracious time at Starkville recently. Our third Quarterly Conference commenced on the fifteenth of July, and we protracted the meeting through two weeks, closing on last night. During this time we had something near forty conversions, and twenty-seven have been added to the church; while the entire membership have been greatly revived. The presiding elder, Rev. A. C. Allen (my beloved father,) remained with us during the first week. Bros. R. G. Porter and A. J. Foster were with us during almost all the time, proving themselves, by their zealous labors, faithful ministers of Christ. May God revive his work everywhere."

Young Men's Christian Association.

The free reading rooms and headquarters of this association are at No. 82 Camp street. We are glad to see that the association is thoroughly and efficiently organized, and at work in our midst. The regular meeting is held on the second Tuesday of every month, at half-past seven P. M. Weekly prayer meeting every Saturday, at eight P. M. The association issues a monthly paper—Chronicle—a very well edited and useful publication. There is no better resort for young men than the rooms of the organization, 82 Camp street.

INFORMATION is wanted of Mr. Seymour Van Densen, a young gentleman who left his friends in New York nearly two years ago. The father of Mr. Van Densen, a venerable minister of the gospel, will be thankful for any information concerning him. Address Rev. S. Van Deusen, White Plains, New York, or this office.

CATHOLIC SCHOOLS.

The zeal of the Romanists in the cause of education is pretty much confined to Protestant countries. Where they have had sway, as in Italy, Spain and Mexico, the people are not educated, nor have much pains been taken to supply the masses with even primary instruction. In Protestant countries they are compelled to have schools in self-defense. In them everything is made tributary to the one purpose of imbuing the mind with the dogmas of the papal church, and of subduing the understanding to a blind acceptance of its superstitions and unscriptural doctrines. Education, as the development of the mind, and of the power of independent thought, is most carefully avoided. The object is to emasculate the understanding, to subject the reason to ecclesiastical decrees, and to rivet upon the soul the degrading bonds of vassalage to a false and bigoted faith. The great end is to keep the young away from the light and progress of Protestant institutions and ideas, and from that independence of reason and conscience which is at war with the worn-out traditions and fables of the Romish system.

Beyond the purpose of guarding their own youth from liberal and enlightened influences is the ever-present study to pervert and proselyte the children of Protestants. Protestant parents do well to remember this, and to consider that no supposed advantages can compensate for the danger to which their children are exposed by placing them in the hands of the sisters and priests. These Catholic institutions are, of course, ready enough to get all the Protestant money they can; but beyond the lucre is the confident expectation that the majority of their Protestant pupils will turn out zealous perverts to Romanism. They will promise to respect the religion of their patrons, and to use no efforts to change their faith; but yet seven-tenths of those intrusted to their care are led into the Catholic Church. The promise not to meddle with the religion of their Protestant pupils is worth nothing. No educational advantages can offset this religious perversion; but the education itself is a sham of the most superficial character. The government of Italy has recently inaugurated a school reform in Rome. The pupils were to be admitted to the new schools on an examination and proof of fitness. Nearly seven hundred students, mainly young men of an average age of eighteen, presented themselves. An extract from the Western Christian Advocate tells the result and the moral:

> They were carefully examined, and the test exhibited among all of them an incredible amount of ignorance. We can scarcely believe the story of a Roman correspondent regarding this matter, but it runs substantially thus: Many could not define the science of geography, and their native country seemed as strange to them as a Bohemian village. In reply to the questions of the Examining Board, the Adriatic was termed a mountain, Sardinia a city, and Milan the capital of Sicily.
> To one of these youths the teachers expressed their surprise at the absurdity of the answers, when the young men excused themselves by saying that they were Romans, and not Italians, and could not be expected to be familiar with affairs outside of their own country. And thus they went on; declaring Brutus to be a tyrant, Dante a Frenchman, and Petrarch a poetess; some held Columbus to be a saint, and others regarded him as one of the apostles.
> In the matter of arithmetic, none had gone beyond simple addition, and most of them found it a difficult task to write down an orally expressed number of five figures. The question was then naturally put to them: What have you learned? And the reply was: Reading, writing and Latin; but the latter clearly without at all penetrating into the spirit or literature of the language.
> The whole training proved to be a mechanical repetition of words and rules, and nothing else but an effort of memory. The consciousness of self-responsibility in such a system of instruction was totally wanting; and this was just what was aimed at—the priest was responsible, and the pupils owed him simple obedience. The liberty of instruction becomes a ridiculous watchword in view of such fruits.

If this is the state of education among the masses of the great capital of the papacy, we can well imagine what it may be throughout the provincial districts of the Papal States. The truth is, that in southern and central Italy the education of the people, beyond the merest church formulas, has been totally neglected, and about all they know is learned from the story-tellers and ballad-singers. The effort to regain them for civilization and culture must be made in opposition to the priests, who steadily set themselves against any system of popular education that will teach the people to think for or depend on themselves. The country is full of solitary retreats, mountains and valleys, where the priest is sovereign. There the newspaper is unknown, books are under ban, and candles are but appendages to altar service.

So much for Romish schools and education in Rome, under the shadow of St. Peter's and the Vatican. Where Catholicism has had its own way, and where there was no Protestant competition, education has been a matter of small moment. The more ignorant the better for the purposes of priest-craft. In this connection we quote a few apposite paragraphs from the Christian Observer and Commonwealth:

> We have serious doubts whether there is a single good school under Romish influences on this continent. The whole genius of Rome is utterly opposed to education. In Italy her power has had full sway for ages, and there is no country in Europe whose people are so ignorant and degraded as the children of the Romish Church. In this country her schools are mere shams—all is superficial—there is little or no intelligent training given at them. If any proof of this assertion were wanted, it is found in several facts.
> First, in the one alluded to by the writer, that the chief glory of her schools is in the little, unimportant accomplishments, such as needlework and embroidery, rather than solid acquisitions.
> Second, in the testimony of experienced teachers who have had ample opportunity of observing the effects of different systems of education. One who has had in his own school many girls whose education was commenced under Romish auspices, tells us he has never found one who was well drilled in the more solid branches of learning. They learn there to dance, and sketch a little, and get a smattering of Italian or French or music, with which to make a display; but it is a very rare thing to find a girl from a Roman Catholic school who has been taught to study, think and reason.
> Third, in the character of the children of Rome. After they have gone through the forms of education, they are not a reading people; they have not formed habits of study in school, and they do not exhibit literary tastes afterward. The statistics of American journalism show that twenty-five or thirty copies of Presbyterian newspapers are taken by every one hundred members of the Presbyterian Church, but only one or two Roman Catholic papers among every one hundred communicants of the Romish Church.
> Fourth, the whole character and spirit of Romanism is such that the diffusion of popular and liberal education is her death-blow. She knows it; and in all those countries where she has undisputed sway, in Italy, Portugal, Spain, Austria and many parts of southern Europe, the education of the masses is discountenanced, and the people are kept in the grossest ignorance. Public sentiment in this country demands that the children shall be sent to school. To keep them out of Protestant schools, Rome, with Jesuitical cunning, provides schools (?) where the graceful accomplishments, dancing, music, embroidery and some of the fine arts, are made the principal studies, but where the rudiments of education are neglected, the mind—the intellect—is dwarfed, and Jesuitical artifices quietly, gently, pertinaciously applied, especially in cases where the children are likely to inherit wealth, or to exert political influence, to bring them within the folds of the papacy.
> Seven out of every ten Protestant girls that are sent to the Roman Catholic schools are drawn into the Roman Catholic Church. A very small proportion of those who go to them become even respectable scholars. Many of them acquire a superficial polish and address that are agreeable in the hall room and parlor, but of little service in fighting the battles of life. We cannot conceive how any Christian parent can deliberately place in jeopardy the eternal interests of sons or daughters by placing them in Roman Catholic schools. And we do not understand how any worldly parent, who is ambitious to see the minds and characters of his children well developed, will consent to have the rudiments of an education laid in the superficial manner that is characteristic of these schools.

FRENCH AFFAIRS.

The late French elections are significant. Out of the one hundred and seventeen vacancies in the Assembly, to be filled throughout the country, one legitimist and one Bonapartist have been elected, while the clerical candidates all failed. The people are evidently losing their interest in the Romish religion; and Napoleonism, which has done so much to maintain the temporal power of the Pope, seems to be well-nigh extinct. Popery and Cæsarism have gone down together in France, and, it is to be hoped, to rise no more. It is too soon to judge of the republic which is now to be organized. We believe, however, that the French people have no desire to interfere with Italy, and if the disposition exists, it will be many years before the nation will be in a condition to engage in an aggressive war. M. Thiers ventures to assure the Pope that he will be respectfully received in France, but that he would be subject, as other ecclesiastics are, to civil power, and to the laws of the empire. Not much would be gained by exchanging Rome for Paris.

For the present we must rest hopefully in the two important points exhibited in the late elections. Bonapartism and popery are both lost to popular favor, and have ceased to exert a controlling influence in the foreign policy and domestic politics of France. The nation is evidently in sympathy with the advancing public opinion of Europe and of the civilized world in reference to the effete and worn-out pretensions of the Roman Church. The ultimate hope of France lies in the dissemination of Protestant ideas, and the leavening influences of a pure and free gospel.

It is a gratifying fact that in the elections referred to not a Communist was chosen, and only twenty-four radicals of any sort, while the great majority must be classed as moderate republicans. On the whole, the outlook is unusually promising in French affairs. The opportunity has come for a new and better departure, and the circumstances are favorable for the political and religious regeneration of the country. This promise may be blighted, it may be nipped in the bud, but none can doubt that it exists at the present hour. Catholicism, imperialism, communism or radicalism are the rocks upon which the nation is liable to drift, but the promise of the present moment is that these causes of shipwreck may be avoided. That this promise may be realized is surely the wish and prayer of all devout and enlightened minds.

EUROPEAN CORRESPONDENCE.

BADEN, July 17, 1871.

MY DEAR STEWARDS: Since writing you last I have seen the masterpieces of the three great painters of whom Antwerp and Brussels boast themselves—Rubens, Vandyke and Wiertz; but I have also ascended the Rhine, from Cologne to Mayence—a distance, in time, of twelve hours; miles, one hundred and fifty—and I have almost forgotten the paintings. They have come to me only as a convenient beginning for this letter. To use the language of the schools, if the Rhine had been my objective point in coming to Europe, all things being equal, the end would have justified the means. I had read of the Rhine, but had allowed for the word-painting, and, moreover, had learned, in respect of all things, to clip the wings of expectation. You must know also that I had gone further. I remember distinctly that, in my meditatings and ruminatings, the afternoon on which I left New Orleans, as I was borne by a faithful "Creole" across the golden bars, shot by the departing light athwart the placid, glassy bosom of Pass Manchac, charmed into reverie, I thought of the Rhine, and wondered if, for the distance, I should find any surpassing beauty upon its banks and waters. There were vine-clad hills, I knew, and all that; but Pass Manchac was lovely too, and a very scene of enchantment. Approaching twilight, on a sweet afternoon, found me also upon the Rhine; nay, more, the insulted river had prepared for me one of its longest, broadest days, upon its most beautiful section, to vindicate its majesty against the silly insinuations of my incredulity; and right nobly did the noble stream defend itself.

The boat was a fine one, to begin with—built in Holland, but much after the model of our Mississippi steamers. The day was fine; no fog, the plague of rivers; and I turned to take a last look of the immense Cathedral of Cologne, ere losing sight of it, no doubt, forever. A few revolutions of the steamer's paddle-wheels, and it was art no more, but nature, that riveted my attention, and long before the day was done I was soundly reproved for my unworthy thoughts of the first river in Europe in point of varied and beautiful scenery.

Nature is far too rich to acknowledge any indebtedness to art, or we might agree that the ancient cities and towns which, with their quaint structures and historical associations, command our most respectful and interested regards almost as fast as we can turn our faces from one side to the other of the river, contribute greatly to the serene and satisfying pleasure which a day's journey on the Rhine affords. There is Cologne, of Cologne water notoriety, and Bonn, the seat of the university, and Andernach, the eldest town, and Coblentz, with its frowning fortress, Ehrenbreitstein, "the Gibraltar of the Rhine." And then there are the castles, surely, of which everybody has heard—curiosities to the dwellers in an uncastled land—ruined fortresses, blown up, laid in ruins by the French, not in the late war; no, some time ago. Thus things change; and with this sage remark we pass from the moral to the natural again, observing only, as we pass, that those Prussian soldiers are a proud-looking set, almost every one you meet being bedizened with some decoration of distinction.

The vineyards which terrace the hill sides for miles and miles are certainly an element of great beauty in the scenery for which the Rhine is so famous. Here the grape is grown in far too great profusion to be consumed as a fruit. Were I on the temperance question now, I should denounce the other use to which it is appropriated, while I could but admire the vineyards. It is not, however, in my judgment, in any or all of these things combined, which I have mentioned, in which the surpassing grandeur of the Rhine scenery is to be found. They all are as the threshold to the temple—charming to linger in, but not the sacred shrine; they are the frescoing on the walls, but have "no glory, by reason of the glory that excelleth," of the high altar. The Drachenfels, the chief of the Seven Mountains, is the chancel gate, entering which the mind attuned to nature's worship is deeply sensible of the awe that falls with a sweet, oppressive weight upon it—a weight, indeed, which, like the cross that bears him who bears it to the skies, at once burdens the soul and conveys it up to the truer worship of nature's God. For thirty or forty miles you pass between hills or mountains, rich in the greenest foliage, and rising almost perpendicular to the water's edge, from five hundred to one thousand feet high. The river, at its widest in this section, is not half the average width of the Mississippi, and gracefully curves almost every quarter of a mile, so that behind, before and on either side you are shut in by lofty steeps as the steamer finds its channel around some new bend that is hidden utterly until you enter it. You cannot weary of one scene before another bursts upon you. You are fearing continually lest the next curve shall conduct you out on a straight course between level banks; but in this you are agreeably disappointed, until your whole intelligent being is fairly saturated with grandeur. Nature says, "It is enough," and you pass into the open air to breathe more freely. Thus the Rhine, which I traversed, reminded me of the most eloquent and effective sermons that I had heard, beginning with propositions, simply enunciated, that were a calm invitation to the ear to hear, to the heart to feel, proceeding in ever-rising periods, waxing bold in imagination, strong in truth, lofty in diction, and divine in unction, until mind and heart were deluged with the very cataclysm of intellectual and spiritual power, and closing with the brief prayer that is omitted alike the preacher and his hearers, for the rest, to God.

I must close for the mail. Love to you all, brethren, and to my church.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

THE DOMESTIC LIFE OF THOMAS JEFFERSON. Compiled from family letters and reminiscences by his great-granddaughter, Sarah N. Randolph. New York: Harper & Brothers, publishers, 1871.

This work is a most entertaining one, and contains some original letters and documents not accessible to Randall when [illegible] life of the eminent statesman [illegible] published. It is a biography [illegible] condensed than Randall's, especially devoted to the [illegible] home life of "the sage of Monticello." Much of the book is occupied with letters and gives a most satisfactory insight of the deep and refined affection and amiability of the writer. The admirers of this great apostle of liberty and democracy will find a rare treat in perusing "The Domestic Life." The author has performed her task with taste and judgment, and the publishers have expended their utmost skill upon the mechanical finish of the volume. We have received our copy through Ellis & Brother, New Orleans.

CHRISTIANITY AND POSITIVISM. A series of lectures to the times on natural theology and apologetics. By James McCosh, D. D., LL. D. New York: Robert Carter & Brothers, 1871.

These lectures were delivered last winter in New York, on the Ely foundation of the Union Theological Seminary. Dr. McCosh is president of the college of New Jersey, Princeton, and widely known as a theological writer. The author indulges in occasional flings at slavery and the South, and is a good deal of an egotist. To introduce the name of John Brown eulogistically in connection with the Saviour's sublime declaration, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone," sounds almost profane and sacrilegious. We can get over all his other hard speeches better than this. The doctor is also, we think, a little trammeled at times by his Calvinism. The [illegible] we have noticed do not [illegible] appear, however, and the work is, as a whole, a most valuable one, and a staunch and timely vindication of Christianity against the prevalent forms of infidelity. The lectures embrace three series: 1. Christianity and physical science, under which the argument from design is carefully stated and vindicated in connection with a review of the state and conclusions of the science of the day. 2. Christianity and mental science. Under this the proofs of the existence of mind are adduced, the Boston theology is elaborately noticed, and the materialism of Buchner, Mandesley, Bain, Huxley, Tyndall and Spencer is thoroughly exposed and refuted. 3. Christianity and historical investigation. This last series contains an elaborate criticism of Renan's Life of Jesus, and is an important contribution to the apologetic literature of the day. We are indebted to R. J. Harp, of the Methodist Depository, 112 Camp street, for a copy of the work.

A LATIN GRAMMAR FOR BEGINNERS. By William Henry Waddell. New York: Harper & Brothers, publishers, 1871.

The author is professor of ancient languages in the University of Georgia, and has the reputation of being a classical scholar. The present volume is a duodecimo of 85 pages, and is a companion to a Greek grammar by the same author, and already noticed by us. The arrangement appears to be admirable, and we doubt not teachers will find it better for beginners than the larger works of Bullion, Andrews and Stoddard, and others. For sale by Ellis & Brother, New Orleans.

THE NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE has, we hope, got into the hands of most Southern Methodists by this time. It merits a large circulation, and every preacher should charge himself with the duty of securing subscribers to a periodical whose mission it is to elevate and refine, and to promote an intelligent and spiritual Christian experience. The August number, besides selected matter, has the following original articles: Nothing but a Woman; Mrs. Browning's Writings; Celebrities that I have Seen; Woman's Position as Taught in the Bible; Sports of the Olden Time; Historical Sketches; To China and

Back; The Kingdom of the King's English; Separation; The Chinese Question; Folk Lore of many Lands; John Stuart Mill and Liberalism. The Editor's Round Table contains a great many good things. The following plea for free seats is from this department:

It is a great calamity to the church—this removal the greater part of the community beyond the precincts of the sanctuary. True, the gospel must be preached to the rich, as well as to the poor. True it is that the voluntary system calls upon the man of wealth to contribute to the support of the church; but the rich ought not to employ means to discharge their obvious duty which will deprive the poor from participating in the benefits of the gospel. The church that has no poor people in its membership—that holds no communion with want and poverty and suffering—will be spiritually dead and barren, even if St. Paul were its pastor.

But we frequently hear the plea advanced that we are compelled to rent the pews, or we cannot support our minister. This is a great mistake. But let us admit that the statement is true; it is a most humiliating confession. In effect it amounts to this: we are really able to pay the minister, but we will not do so unless he permits us to curtail his influence, and destroy, at least in a great measure, his usefulness. We know that his congregation will be diminished—we know that many worthy persons will be banished from the house of God—we know that his power in the pulpit, and his access to the poor, will be grievously lessened and restricted; but for all that, because it promotes our personal convenience, we are selfish enough to require the general good to yield to our individual preferences. This is the practical turn that events must take in those cases, at least, where a free church abandons free seats and adopts the pew system. We have nothing to say concerning those churches in which pew-renting is the normal practice. If they prefer it, we make no objection, because we have no right to object. We speak only of those cases where the renting of pews is an experiment as a matter of financial provision. We have never known a solitary instance in which the promise held out as an inducement has ever been realized. Heartburnings, jealousies, contentions, strifes, permanent alienations and spiritual death we have seen following in the wake of this movement; and in many instances the sad effects of the disastrous experiment have remained for years after it was abandoned.

The truth is—and we challenge the history of every church that has made the experiment to contradict our statement—although for a year or two it may work well, under the stimulus of the novelty of the system, or the superior talents of a particular minister, yet after a season the old evil appears again. Pew-rent becomes difficult to collect. "Sensations" must be resorted to in order to dispose of the pews; and at last, these failing, an empty treasury, a dissatisfied church, a crippled ministry and a sad catalogue of regrets remain to testify that the movement was a financial failure and a religious disaster.

Let us have free seats in the house of God.

We indorse the statements of an exchange concerning the Illustrated Christian Weekly:

The Illustrated Christian Weekly contains a variety of interesting matter and many fine illustrations. The paper just now enters upon the second quarter of its existence, and the publishers, in order that they may better introduce it to their friends, offer to send it to any new subscriber, from the present date to the first of January, for seventy-five cents—a rate which renders it the cheapest illustrated paper in the country. The paper is enriched by articles from Drs. Adams, Skinner, Schaff, Bodlington, Coyler and Rankin, Prof. Baird, J. S. C. Abbott, Dr. Hall and others. Darling, Hart, Gilford, Rossiter and Chaplain have contributed to the art department. While the paper has never lost sight of its Christian aim, it has illustrated the wealth of the Christian religion by the range of its topics.

The Art Review is a superior journal, devoted to art, music and literature. It is published monthly, in handsome style, richly illustrated, and keeps up with the literature of art. Published by J. J. Orrinod & Co., New York and Chicago. Price, $3 per annum. The August number, now before us, is exceedingly fine, and contains several well-finished engravings. The publishers offer great inducements to subscribers and agents.

Old and New for August has in its table of contents the following among its numerous articles: Sorrento Papers; Art and Nature; Devil Puzzlers; The Lessons of Methodism; Reminiscences of Dr. Dollinger; The Boston Theology; Medical Education. The Examiner, Fine Arts and Record of Progress are able and elaborate, as usual. Published by Roberts Brothers, Boston. Price, $4 per annum.

The Manufacturer and Builder is to hand, and in its best style. The August number is unusually replete with instructive articles and drawings. This is one of the lowest-cost, and at the same time one of the most valuable periodicals of the day. Published by Western & Co., New York. Price, $1 50 per annum.

Essentials of Good Health and Mental Bliss is a monthly periodical, edited by Dr. Thomas Nicholson, of New Orleans. The August number contains an article on Consumption, and a large number of prescriptions and remedies. The editor is encouraged with the prospects of his journal.

Home and Health is a new periodical, published monthly by W. R. Hay & Brother, New York. Price, $1.50 per annum. It will prove a valuable publication for all, especially for heads of families. The August number is filled with useful and instructive articles.

The Southern Farm and Home comes to us this month replete with such matter as becomes the best of agricultural and domestic journals. It is one of our standbys for "The Farm and Garden" of the Advocate. J. W. Burke & Co., publishers, Macon, Georgia.

Good Health for this month is an interesting number. There is much instructive matter on such subjects as: Nursing as a Profession; National Health; Partial Insanity; Cookery, etc. Published by Alexander Moore, Boston. Price, $2 per annum.

The Atlantic Monthly for the current month has: Werewolves and Swan Maidens; My Father's Shipwreck; A Quiet Life; Nicholas Ferrar; Gladiola; Encyclicals of a Traveler; The Singer; Watch and Ward, and other articles.

Appletons' Journal is deservedly popular with those readers who can appreciate the highest qualities of literary excellence. The last number, July 29, is unsurpassed for the finish of its illustrations, and the variety and merit of its contents.

We have received the August number of Peterson's Ladies' National Magazine. It is well supplied with fashion plates. An old and well-established periodical, and prized by the ladies. Published by C. J. Peterson, Philadelphia.

The American Agriculturist for August is beautifully embellished with spirited engravings, and replete with useful matter. Published by Orange Judd & Co., New York. Price, $1.50 per annum.

Littell's Living Age of July 22, be poetry and short articles, has . e Tenure of Land in Europe; Pauper Lords; Festina Lente; Mr. Grote; Lord Aberdeen; War or Peace?

The National Sunday School Teacher, published at Chicago, is one of the best periodicals published in the interest of Sunday schools. We have received the August number.

Every Saturday of the twenty-ninth of July contains: A Bird's Eye View of Berlin; The New York Riot; Scenes in Louisiana, and other well-executed illustrations.

The Southern Magazine for August has been sent us by Eyrich, of Canal street, New Orleans. It has a good table of contents.

Clarksville Female Academy is advertised in this week's paper. The president, Rev. Joseph B. West, D. D., is an eminent minister of our church, and a most capable and successful manager and instructor. Young ladies cannot be intrusted to any one who will be more careful of their welfare. The location of the academy is pleasant and salubrious. See advertisement for particulars.

NOTICE TO AGENTS.

Many of the post offices to which the Advocate is sent are the places of address for subscribers residing in the bounds of several charges—stations, circuits and missions. As we cannot know what names belong to any agent, where several are thus represented, we send a copy to each, the members of whose charge may be supposed to be included in the list. We may send to some who have not secured any subscribers, and may not have any in their charges. If such is the case we trust it will not long remain so.

ATTENTION, AGENTS!

Some of the lists of subscribers recently sent to the agents of this paper were taken from the books as they stood on the fifteenth of May. Other pressing engagements delay us in forwarding them. This will explain how it is that orders and remittances, reaching us after that date, are not entered. Where our agents have the necessary data they can correct their own lists.

ACKNOWLEDGING LETTERS.

Persons inquiring why their letters are not acknowledged are generally too fast. We acknowledge weekly all business letters reaching us up to the Saturday night preceding each issue. Those reaching us later are not heard from till the week following.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICE.

We will supply the Advocate to subscribers hereafter at the following, rates, viz:

One year	$3 00
Six months	1 75
Three months	1 00

This will enable those who wish to subscribe for the paper on trial to do so without paying the yearly subscription. Agents will take due notice thereof and govern themselves accordingly.

ROBT. J. HARP, Publisher.

Mr. Editor: Among your new advertisements I notice one of the "Woman's Friend Washing Machine;" and if you will allow me I will say a word or two in regard to it, for the benefit of any who might like to have an outsider's opinion of it. Walking down Camp street some days since, I noticed one of these machines in front of a store, and, interested as I always am in everything that promises to be labor-saving and useful, I stopped to examine it. My first thought was: Here is the true principle on which to construct a machine for washing clothes. A day or two after, having consulted my good wife, I ordered one sent to my house; and having had it tested most thoroughly, under my own eye, I do not hesitate to say that its performance comes fully up to all that Mr. Thompson, the proprietor and manufacturer of it in this city, claims for it. The machine does its work, and does it well, in the time specified in the advertisement; and if the person managing it is active in handling clothes, and putting them through the "Wringe," it will be found that the job of washing is one that is soon over with.

Obituaries.

John May departed this life, in great peace, on Friday, June 30, in the town of Smamit, Mississippi, in the fifty-ninth year of his age.

Bro. May was a native of Germany. He was born in Great Hoosen, May 1, 1813, and emigrated to the United States in the twenty-sixth year of his age.

He was a devoted member of the Catholic Church until the great revival in the German mission in New Orleans, when he embraced religion and joined the Methodist Church. From that time until the period of his death he was an humble, consistent, devoted man of God, exemplifying in his deportment and conversation the excellency of experimental religion.

Bro. May died as he had lived—full of faith and of the Holy Ghost, and was buoyant with a hope that reached within the vail. His last words were: "I am going home." He leaves a wife and children to mourn their loss. H.

Mrs. Susan C. McCurdy was born April 22, 1847, and died May 17, 1871, near Lowndesboro, Alabama.

Her maiden name was Reece. She was reared in opulence and accustomed to parental indulgence. Her associations were largely of a character to antagonize that sobriety of thought so essential to the effectiveness of the truth and Spirit of God. True to nature, she was subject to the predominant spirit of her associations. Truly hers was a noble nature. While unaccustomed to authoritative discipline, she was respectful, affectionate and obedient to those who had the oversight over her. It was her good fortune to be educated under religious influence. While attending a series of religious services conducted by her preceptor—Rev. B. F. Perry, of precious memory, in Lowndesboro, she was converted to God and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South. From that good hour her life was marked with devotion to the church.

On June 4, 1867, she was married to E. S. McCurdy. Her marriage was in the Lord. A helpmate was she to her husband in the service of the church. How earnestly she plead for the family altar and the duty of praying in the social church meetings. In due season Providence blessed her marriage with promising offspring. She accepted the trust with proper appreciation of the obligation and responsibility. Thence till her death the burden of her heart was the religious training of her child. One of her last requests was to have her child "raised a good Methodist."

Sister McCurdy was quite delicate and frail, and often sought the sanctuary and her sabbath school class at a sacrifice of sickness and suffering. The zeal of God's house consumed her. Her last illness was protracted and excruciatingly severe. Verily her patience was perfected. She was hopeful of her recovery, but ready for the change. On the morning of the fourth of April she calmly and peacefully passed into the spirit land, leaving a disconsolate husband, a little daughter, and a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn their loss. May the good Lord give us some one to take her place in the church. S. A. Pilley.

Southern Christian Advocate please copy.

Mrs. P. E. McCutcheon, widow of the late Rev. Mark McCutcheon, has at last finished her earthly pilgrimage, and has joined her sainted husband in the paradise of our Lord. She was truly one of the excellent of the earth, and was a shining light of scriptural holiness in our church at Shreveport. Few who were present will ever forget her fervid and interesting testimony for Jesus at the Conference love-feast held here during the session of 1870. She lived to be among the people of God. At such times her conversation was the outflowing of a well-cultivated and heavenly mind. She enjoyed the hope of the life to come to a degree that I have never witnessed in any other soul of my acquaintance. Of that love which casteth out all fear, she had a sweet experience. She knew that for her to die was gain; she had a comfortable assurance, even the witness of God's Spirit with her own that for her to be absent from the body was to be present with the Lord. Sister McCutcheon was born in St. Marys, Florida, August 11, 1801, and died in Shreveport, Louisiana, May 10, 1871—the sixty-seventh year of her age. For fifty years she had been a disciple of Jesus and member of the Methodist Church. She was converted while on a visit to some relatives, in her seventeenth year, and upon her return home at once assured her father, who was an avowed infidel up to that time, that there was a reality in religion—that she herself had found in it a peace that passeth all understanding. The unbelieving father was moved at her entreaties; he could not doubt the testimony of his child; he went with her to hear the word preached; was soon converted, joined the church, and henceforth lived and died a faithful and useful member of the same. Nor was this all; she became the instrument of leading every member of her father's family to Christ. So writes her only surviving brother, the Rev. C. A. Brown, of the Arkansas Conference. After her marriage to Rev. M. McCutcheon her field of usefulness was greatly widened, and nobly did she co-labor with him in the work of saving souls. She was blessed with four children during her married life, every one of whom became worthy members of the church. Of these, a son and two daughters survive her; the son is one of the leading merchants of this city and a working steward of our church; one of the daughters is the wife of another of our excellent stewards. See what a reward attended the efforts of this mother in Israel to train up her children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord! When Sister McCutcheon was taken sick, early last spring, she felt that it was unto death, and expressed herself ready for the change, as one that had been born of God. As she drew nigh her last days, great tranquillity of spirit distinguished all her conversation. The last pastoral visit I made her I was satisfied I should see her no more in the flesh, and taking her hand in mine to bid her farewell upon leaving, I told her I expected to see her again no more in this life—that next time we met would, I trusted, be in the shining streets of the New Jerusalem; and I asked her how she felt as she was passing through the dark valley of the shadow of death. With a calm, sweet, saintly expression on her face, she assured me that for the triumph over the fear of death, which she then felt in her soul, she had been living upward of forty years—that she was rather too eager to depart—not sufficiently patient to await the coming of her Lord. She bid me good by as quietly and hopefully as if we were to meet again on the morrow. So passed away our good sister. Verily, her end was peace. Well may we quote, in connection with the death of Sister P. E. McCutcheon: "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord. * * * Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." J. W.

Argyle Bitters—Argyle Bitters.—A FEW WORDS FOR EVERYBODY. These Bitters, so favorably known throughout the country for the last fifteen or sixteen years, have recently been reduced in price, while their purity and efficacy remain the same as in former years. They are manufactured of pure, full-strength Bourbon Whisky, and medicinal agents selected carefully and solely for this purpose. They are warranted pure and unadulterated.

They are anti-periodic in their effects, and are known to have warded off the baneful influences of malarial poison by their timely use.

They are known to have cured intermittent Fever by their use alone, and are safe for any age, and are retained by the most delicate stomachs.

They are anti-bacchanalian, tonic, alterative and invigorating, and a certain preventive against Dyspepsia.

It is the safest, pleasantest and most efficacious family medicine now used. au3 1m

Clarksville Female Academy,

CLARKSVILLE, TENNESSEE.

The FALL SESSION of this school opens SEPTEMBER 4, 1871. The Faculty is able and experienced, and the course of study thorough and practical.

The character of the school may be known by consulting the Bishops and leading men of the Southern Methodist Church.

It is located in an elevated, healthy country, and in the midst of a people of cultivation and refinement. It is the first high ground after passing the miasmatic regions of the South.

The school for years has had an average matriculation largely over two hundred pupils, many of whom were from various Southern States.

The expenses of an entire term, for English tuition, board, lights, fuel, furnished rooms, washing and servants' attention, will not exceed $125. Apply for catalogues.

MARTHA WASHINGTON COLLEGE,

ABINGDON, VIRGINIA.

The College of the Holston Conference.

The TWELFTH ANNUAL SESSION of this well-known institution will begin OCTOBER 4, 1871, and continue forty weeks.

FACULTY.

R. W. Jones, M. A., of the University of Virginia, President.

Rev. W. G. E. Cunnyngham, D. D., professor of Moral Philosophy and Belles Lettres.

Miss Maggie J. Tucker, Preceptress.

Miss Annie M. Rhodes, Drawing and Painting.

F. L. Funk, Professor of Music, with a full corps of assistants in each department.

Board and English tuition, for term of twenty weeks, from $35 to $105.

No extra charge for Latin or Greek. Charges for the other branches moderate. All charges to be paid in advance.

The course of instruction embraces every subject of a solid and finished education.

The system of instruction is that of the University of Virginia, at which the President graduated as Master of Arts.

The college buildings are substantial brick structures, commodious, comfortable and elegant.

The grounds have been laid out with exquisite taste, and present an appearance of surpassing loveliness.

All the associations and surroundings are such as to cultivate the taste and refine the feelings.

Abingdon, situated on the Virginia and Tennessee railroad, eight miles from Emory and Henry College, and fifteen from Bristol, amid the mountains of southwestern Virginia, is noted for the beauty and grandeur of the surrounding scenery, a balmy atmosphere, general healthfulness and refined society. Mineral waters abound in its vicinity.

Parents in the South cannot find a place in the United States where the influences are more favorable for the perfect development of the physical constitution, and where educational advantages of a higher order are afforded.

OAK GROVE ACADEMY.

The EXERCISES of the above institution were opened on Monday, JULY 31, 1871.

Students can at this institution, at comparatively no expense, prepare themselves to enter the senior classes of the best colleges, where they can acquit themselves with as much honor as those who have spent $1,500 to $2,000 in the acquisition of an education.

TUITION PER TERM OF FIVE MONTHS.

First class	$8 25
Second class	10 00
Third class	12 50
Fourth class	15 00

Board and washing can be obtained in good families, at $2 per week. Students wishing to board themselves can have cabins free of charge.

The locality of the institution being in one of the most healthy portions of East Tennessee, certainly recommends itself to the young men of the South, who should always remember that while they are cultivating that higher type of their nature, they should also be preserving or restoring a sound constitution, without which there can be no great enterprises.

Corona strives to justify its name.

THE CROWN OF SCHOOLS

for the higher education of women, by judiciously combining in its scheme the special points of excellence found in all other schools. It aspires to superiority in all departments—literary, scientific, æsthetic, domestic and hygienic. The principal, after spending nearly twenty years in studying educational questions and in the practice of teaching, is devoting his whole mind and heart to the task of maintaining not the largest but the best school in the South. His system of education comprehends such an harmonious development of all the powers of mind, heart and body as will fit the young lady for the faithful discharge of the highest and lowliest duties of life.

The methods of instruction are those approved by the foremost educators of the age. The very best aids are employed for imparting real knowledge, such as maps, charts, globes, specimens and apparatus of all kinds. There is no rote-learning of the mere letter of text-books—no cramming of the mind with disconnected facts.

Assistant teachers of known scholarship and well-tried aptness in teaching are engaged. In physical science and modern languages instruction is given by the eminent professors in these departments of Cumberland University.

The course of study is very extensive. It is arranged into schools after the plan of the best universities, and pupils are graduated in such schools as they or their parents may elect. Music on piano, harp and guitar.

In the boarding department ladies enjoy all the comforts of an elegant home. The rooms are large, well ventilated, neatly furnished and newly carpeted. Fires in rooms whenever wanted. The table is bountifully supplied with wholesome food.

The location is most favorable in point of health, social refinement and religious privileges.

The health and physical development of boarding pupils are promoted by a system of gymnastic exercises, under a competent teacher, with dumb-bells, wands, rings and Indian clubs, without charge.

The expense of boarding and regular tuition is $250 or $260 a year. Extra branches at usual rates. The annual session always begins on the first Monday of September.

The Child's Corner.

DANDELION.

BY CARL SPENCER.

The little common people
Are laughing in the sun,
Just like the poor folks' children,
The world that overrun.
Look up, my baby Goldilocks!
Oh, are you quite aware
That you are but a dandelion,
My little Yellow-Hair?

The Lady Rose was saying,
Up in her garden proud,
"It really was amazing
The way some people crowd!"
We're sorry for my Lady Rose,
That has not got her share;
The world is wide enough for us,
My little Yellow-Hair!

You grow in open weather,
Close to the dear, good earth;
Your eyes are all a-twinkle
To hear her quiet mirth.
The Lady Rose may keep her buds
From too much sun and air;
But fairest is not dearest face,
My little Yellow-Hair!

By highways and by hedges,
Where nature's own are sent,
The like of you are plenty,
As if for good things meant.
And so I think—though Lady Rose
May wonder how I dare—
That Heaven loves the dandelions,
My little Yellow-Hair!

Ay, loves them, I remember,
So well that, swiftly drawn,
They grow up straight and slender,
And suddenly are gone.
Ah, get not yet the aureole
Around your forehead fair;
You are not one too many here,
My little Yellow-Hair!

MARTIN LUTHER.

BY COUSIN MARY.

"Mother," said Lizzie Rogers, "you promised to tell me about the grim old castle in the Thuringian forest, where Luther was a prisoner."

"But first, Lizzie, dear, can you tell me who was Luther?" said Mrs. Rogers.

"I do not know much about him, mother," replied the child, "except that he was a very good man who was once a Catholic monk, but afterward became a Protestant; and that he translated the Bible for the poor people who could only read in German."

"That is right, daughter; I am glad you know so much about the great Reformer, as he is called; but now I want to tell you something about the early life of Luther. His father was a poor peasant who worked in the mines of Mansfeld, while his mother helped to support the family by carrying wood upon her shoulders; and little Martin Luther used to go about from door to door singing hymns, and then begging for a morsel of bread."

"How, then, did he ever become so wise as to translate the Bible?" said Lizzie.

"I will tell you," replied her mother. "Luther, even while a beggar, was ambitious to learn, and persevered in going to school, although he met with rough treatment there, and, it is said, was once whipped fifteen times in one morning. While at school, in Eisenach, he attended church regularly, and sang there; a kind lady, named Ursula Cotta, was so much pleased with his good conduct, and so greatly admired his sweet voice, that she took him to her own home, and supported him until he was eighteen years of age, when he went to the college of Erfurt, and grew to be a learned man."

"Was it afterward that he became a monk?" said Lizzie, who was deeply interested in the account related by her mother.

"Yes," continued Mrs. Rogers; "sickness and trouble made him think that a convent was the happiest home, and he therefore entered the Augustinian Convent of Erfurt; following the example of the monks, who taught that the more humble and painful his life the more pleasing it would be to God, he swept the floors and became a porter, and even a beggar."

"And did Luther become happier then, mother?"

"No, dear; he saw that such menial acts did not make his heart any better, and that he was no holier shut up in a convent, beating and starving himself for his sins, than when usefully employed in the world. Fortunately, in the university library he found a copy of the Bible, which he studied, and there learned that his heart was full of evil, and continually leading him astray; and that it was only through the blood of Jesus Christ that he could hope to have his sins forgiven."

"Then, I suppose, he did not care to live always in the convent?" said Lizzie.

"No; he afterward became a professor in the University of Wittenberg, where he explained the Bible to the students, and taught them that Catholic priests cannot forgive sins, but that God alone can pardon sinners. The priests were very angry with him then, and they made him appear before the Emperor, Charles the Fifth, at a council or large gathering of people, in the city of Worms, and there told him to take back all he had said, and never to preach again as he had done."

"O, mother! I hope he did not mind the wicked people, if he was such a brave, good man!"

"No, indeed," replied Mrs. Rogers; "when his friends were afraid to have him go to the council, he said he would do so, though 'there were as many devils there as there were tiles on the roofs of the houses;' and then, when he had to appear before the Emperor, the rich princes and nobles, the priests and a great crowd of people besides, he was not at all afraid, but stood up boldly and bravely; telling them that he believed in the Bible, which taught that we must pray to God, and not mind popes or councils when they direct us to act contrary to his holy word."

"Did they punish Luther, mother, when he refused to say that he had preached or taught anything wrong?"

"Yes; the Emperor, Charles the Fifth, said that he should no longer be a member of the Catholic Church, that no one should associate with him, and that all his writings should be burned. But poor Luther was brave and patient through all, and went quietly to the Castle of Wartburg when taken prisoner. I once visited the castle, and was much interested in the old building, which has stood for eight hundred years. Luther commenced translating the Bible while there, and the guide showed us the room where he used to write, and also pointed out the black spots on the wall which came from the inkstand he is said to have thrown at the devil when he appeared to him, and tried to tempt him to do wrong."

"You do not think that story is true, do you, mother?"

"No, my child, I do not believe that God ever allows the devil to appear to us; but I suppose that Luther's evil heart tempted him to do wrong sometimes, just as wicked thoughts enter into our minds now, and perhaps he could not help thinking how much he had to suffer for obeying the voice of conscience. I can easily imagine, Lizzie, that, after reading and writing constantly alone in his forest prison, he became nervous, and thus did really think that an evil spirit appeared to tempt him."

"How much I should like to visit the castle, mother!"

"A great many people are interested to go there, and are so fond of carrying away something by which to recollect Luther, that, little by little, they have taken off all the woodwork which formed his bedstead and chair."

"That is too bad," said Lizzie. "I think the room ought to be left just as it was when Luther lived there. But did he stay there all the rest of his life?"

"No," said Mrs. Rogers; "he came out after ten months, and commenced again to preach and to teach, never ceasing his labors for Christ: and his last words were: 'Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit. Thou hast redeemed me, thou faithful God.'"

"Was Luther never married, mother?"

"When he ceased to be a monk he married a lady named Catharina von Bora, and he had three little sons, to one of whom he sent this letter, which I will read you:

"Mercy and peace in Christ, my dear little son. I am glad to hear that you learn your lessons well, and pray diligently. Go on, my child. When I come home I will bring you a pretty fairing. I know a very pretty, delightful garden, and in it there are a great many children, all dressed in little golden coats, picking up nice apples and pears and cherries and plums under the trees. And they sing and jump about, and are very merry; and beside, they have got beautiful little horses, with golden bridles and silver saddles. The gardener told me: 'These are children who love to pray, to learn their lessons and to obey.' Then I said: 'Dear, sir, I have a little son, called Johnny Luther; may he come into this garden too?' And the man said: 'If he loves to pray and learn his lessons, and is good, he may.'"

"That is a very pretty letter, mother," said Lizzie. "How I should like to travel in Germany," she continued, "and see all the interesting places you have visited."

"Perhaps you will do so some day, my dear, and if you should ever be at the city of Worms you will admire the beautiful monument erected in memory of the fearless man who was not afraid to speak the truth in opposition to the whole world. And never forget, dear daughter, that God still needs brave and fearless workers, who prize more than all earthly wealth and distinction the peace of conscience which is sure to be the reward of his service."

"How can children be like Luther, mother?" said Lizzie, as she gazed with a surprised but earnest expression into her mother's face.

"By never being afraid to speak the truth, my child. By earnestly studying the Bible, and obediently following its precepts; thus showing, by their conduct, that they are proud to be ranked as young soldiers in the army of Christ, the Captain of our salvation."—Child at Home.

The Farm and Garden.

FARM WORK FOR THE MONTH.

The labors of making the crop have almost drawn to a close, and those of gathering it will soon begun. Owing to the late spring, wet seasons and backwardness of the cotton generally, the fight with weeds and grass has not been as successful as could be wished, and, therefore, the sweeps and hoes must still be kept moving before we can think of "laying by." If proper care be taken that the work may be shallow, so as to destroy all foreign growth and stir the soil without injury to the roots, and also without damage to the limbs of the plants, their growth will be stimulated, and the shedding of forms will be in a great measure prevented. It is always a bad plan to fix a time for laying by. The later the sweeps pass through, without injury to limbs or fruit, the larger will be the yield at the gin house. And especially is this true of this year.

Before our next issue can reach our subscribers cotton picking will have begun. Make all preparations in time, so that when this important work begins you will be found ready for it. Do not wait to hunt up the cotton baskets and wallets of last year until you are ready to go into the field to pick, but have them all ready and in perfect repair. In this way you can keep up with the cotton as it opens, and never have a large quantity exposed to the rain.

There are various "odd jobs" to be done on every plantation—cleaning up fence corners, repairing roads and bridges, putting the lots in order, hauling leaves and trash to make manure, getting ready the gin house and running gear, fixing the corn cribs, lofts for fodder, etc., all of which can be better done now than at any other time, and being done now will save many an hour which should be spent in gathering the crop and preparing it for market.

FODDER-PULLING.—Where the corn is sufficiently ripe fodder may be pulled this month by those who will depend on fodder for forage, instead of raising grasses and clover for hay. We have no doubt that the value of the injury to the corn from fodder-pulling is greater than that of all the fodder. To delay pulling the fodder until the corn is beyond damage would be to allow the fodder to be as worthless as the same quantity of wood shavings. To pull it while it retains its juices is to lessen the fullness and weight of the grain. Fodder should, if possible, be pulled, cured and stacked or housed without exposure to rain. It is preferable to stack or house it rather green, and risk a little heating, than to allow it to be wet by rain, and then dried up by the sun until all its succulence and nutriment are wasted.

The day is fast approaching, we hope and believe, when the slow and expensive operation of fodder-pulling will be done away altogether, and when the clover, lucerne and drilled corn patches, and the meadows will supply all "the roughness" required for the stock on every plantation.

TURNIPS.—We trust that our readers have heeded our oft-repeated advice to plant largely and carefully of this most important crop. To those who have done so we say, most heartily, "well done," and to those who have not—who have not had the time "to bother with no turnips"—we say, there is still time to mend your evil ways, repair your error, and have plenty of fine stock food for use in winter. During the early part of this month sow the ruta bagas, and later, until the beginning of September, the Norfolk, flat Dutch, globe and yellow Aberdeen may be sown. When the plants are well up remove all grass and weeds with the hoe, and thin to a stand, leaving the plants from eight to twelve inches apart in the drill, according to the size of the variety. After thinning cultivate occasionally with the plow until the leaves cover the ground.

MANGOLD WURZEL.—We wish that some of our friends would make an experiment on a small scale with this valuable root crop, which, in many parts of England, is more highly esteemed than the turnip.

SWEET POTATOES.—Stir the earth round the plants, so as to keep it fresh and loose, and destroy all weeds until the vines assert their supremacy by covering the rows.

DITCHING, DRAINING, ETC.—Now is the time for ditching and draining low lands, "wet spots," cleaning swamps for future cultivation, removing underbrush, hauling leaves to the lots and stables, and laying the broad foundations of a towering compost heap. Now is the time, too, to haul home the wood for fuel, and if timber is to be cut for building use in the workshop, or for fencing, now is the time to cut it. All these jobs can be done to better advantage between laying by and cotton picking time than at any other period.

TRIFOLIUM INCARNATUM.—If our farmers would prepare a little patch in some rich spot, plowing it deeply and closely, and sow at the rate of sixteen pounds of seed to the acre of the scarlet clover (Trifolium Incarnatum,) we believe that they would be so much pleased with the result that they would sow a larger patch next year. It will give fine pasturage as early as February, ahead even of lucerne, and will yield a good crop of hay in the beginning of May.—Southern Farm and Home.

Plum Trees in Peach Orchards.

The curculio is becoming almost as destructive to peaches as to plums. It is almost impossible to find a single peach uninjured by this insect some years. The past season, on account of the incessant heavy rains, they did not injure the crop as much as usual. So much rain thinned out numbers. Many of our most intelligent peach growers are greatly alarmed at the prospects of raising marketable peaches, and are devising means to prevent their destructive ravages. Dr. Hull, of Alton, recommends planting a few rows of plum trees in the peach orchard. The curculio are attracted to the plum trees. They seek the plum in preference to any other fruit, and will leave the peach for the plum tree. Now, with sheets spread under the tree, or with Dr. Hull's inverted umbrella, on wheels rolled under each plum tree, and the tree jarred, the little "Turk" comes tumbling down, and is caught and destroyed. If the plum trees are closely watched and jarred two or three times weekly, and the curculio destroyed, the crop of peaches will be comparatively safe. By having the plum trees in the orchard it saves going over the whole peach orchard and jarring the trees. If the plum trees are not there to draw the curculio, this jarring the peach trees in many localities is indispensable. The largest, finest, soundest fruit brings the best price, and fruit growers will learn, sooner or later, that it will pay not only to destroy the curculio, to prevent it from destroying their peaches, but that it will also pay to thin out fruit, to get the largest and finest specimens, so as to obtain the highest price. A tree will produce a certain number of bushels or pounds of fruit. Now, what it lacks in numbers it will make up in size and quality. If allowed to bear too many, they will be small and of inferior quality, and will command a low price. If just the right number are left by thinning out, they will be large, showy, high-colored and delicious, commanding double the price of inferior ones.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

TO MAKE flat irons smooth, rub them with a little beeswax while hot.

TO CURE CHAPPED HANDS.—Rub them in vinegar after washing, and let them dry without wiping. It will keep the hands soft and white, however hard the water may be.

HOW TO WASH FLANNELS.—Take clean, hot, soft water suds, and wash each article separately, having a second tub with clear water (also soft,) as hot as the suds, rinse each article as fast as washed, and hang out to dry. By using this method it is impossible for flannels to shrink. Wrisely's pulverized soap is the best for washing flannels.

GRAHAM MUFFINS.—Take one quart of Graham flour, one-half cup of brown sugar, one teaspoonful of salt, two tablespoonfuls of yeast, warm water or milk sufficient to stir readily with a spoon. When light stir again, drop in rings, and bake. If made over night it may be necessary to add a little soda before baking. Do not bake too hard. They are excellent.

I SEND you an excellent recipe for making fish chowder for the benefit of those who do not eat pork. Take three pounds of fresh codfish, cut in pieces about three inches square, five or six good-sized potatoes, sliced very thin, half a dozen hard crackers, broken a little, put two-thirds of a cup of butter in the bottom of the kettle, then a layer of fish, then a layer of potatoes and crackers, and so on till all is used. Sprinkle over each layer salt and pepper quite freely, and pour over it boiling water enough to cover it. Cover it closely to keep in the steam. Let it boil twenty minutes, add a pint of new milk, and it is ready for the table. All who have eaten it pronounce it delicious. Try it, and you will say it is far superior to a chowder made with pork. If hard crackers cannot be obtained use common ones, but do not put them in until the chowder is nearly done cooking, as they boil up and make it too thick.—The Household.

CHRIST is my day, and I am my own black night. When I walk in the day (in Christ) I stumble not, but when I walk in the night (in self)—ah! then it is I stumble, then I fall; but where do I fall? Oh, into the arms of my beloved Jesus! When he has taught me my weakness, then he bears me up on his own strong arm; and, ashamed of my folly, I would hide my blushing face and desire never, never to try or trust self again.—G. W. Curtis.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

Dolbear Commercial College

A CARD.

All who wish a cash-paying education for themselves or sons can obtain it in the shortest possible time, and with the least possible expense, at

DOLBEAR COMMERCIAL COLLEGE,
Nos. 164 and 166 Canal St., New Orleans.

This College, founded in 1832, and chartered by the Legislature of Louisiana, has a full and able Faculty, and separate professors for each branch of study, so as to save the time and money of students, and fit them at once for business. They can take the Commercial Course, or the modern or ancient languages or mathematics, Book-keeping or Penmanship alone, or the whole course of the College. They have a LIFE SCHOLARSHIP in all the departments they enter and never pay but once. Persons from twelve to sixty years of age attend.

N. B.—Of all our numerous graduates for the past thirty-nine years, not one is now out of profitable employment, so far as known. Those of last year are now receiving from $1,000 to $3,000 per annum. We have ample arrangements for board, from $25 to $30 a month. When Clubs of three or more enter at the same time ten per cent. deduction is made.

There are no vacations. Students can begin at any time. Those who begin soon will be able to fill good situations in the summer, when Merchants make their changes. Liberal deduction for sons of clergymen and crippled soldiers. For catalogues address

my4 1y RUFUS DOLBEAR, President.

J. W. Blackman's COMMERCIAL COLLEGE,

61 CAMP STREET,
Corner Commercial Place, N. O.

Open day and evening the entire year.

Penmanship, Book-keeping, Mathematics and Languages are practically taught by experienced professors. Persons from fifteen to fifty years of age attend. Instruction given privately to each student, who has a separate desk to himself, and is put through a thorough and systematic course of study to qualify him for the situation he intends to fill. Persons who have neglected their education are here speedily prepared for business. Students from the country may obtain board in the family of the principal.

TERMS—Twenty per cent. less than other Commercial Colleges in this city. Cost of full Commercial Course only $100. Average time, three to four months.

The principal has been a professional teacher in New Orleans since 1851.

EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE,
VIRGINIA.

THIS INSTITUTION, located on the great railroad line from New Orleans to Baltimore, among the mountains of Virginia, is offering peculiar advantages to those who are seeking a thorough collegiate or business education. Two Hundred and Thirty Dollars will cover the expenses for an entire collegiate year of ten months, for Tuition, Board, Fuel, Room-rent, Washing and Contingent Fees. For the character of the school, please consult our own Alumni, or any of the Bishops or of the leading men of the Southern Methodist Church, or the Professors of the University of Virginia, who have authorized this reference. Our Fall Session begins AUGUST 17, 1871. If you desire a catalogue write to

E. E. WILEY, Pres't.,

HIWASSEE COLLEGE.

THE TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL SESSION of this school will begin on the FIRST MONDAY IN AUGUST, 1871. The entire expense for board and tuition, for forty weeks, will be $150. The board is of the best description that the country affords, being furnished by the steward from his own farm and prepared by the hands of his own family. We had boys from five different States last year, and not a word of complaint was ever made on this point, which is often the subject of just complaint at boarding schools. The fare is peculiarly grateful to Southern boys, who require a more generous diet when they change their climate.

The manner of governing the school is paternal, as the entire exemption from temptations in the surrounding country renders the discipline easy. The institution is under the care of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, but under my own control. The young men attending the school last year were, without exception, moral and religious. Young men preparing for the ministry may receive tuition free, and in certain cases can obtain lower rates of board. Regular services are held in the College Chapel.

The location of the school is near Madisonville, Monroe county, East Tennessee, in the midst of a fruitful and beautiful country, and surrounded by a thrifty and intelligent population. No negroes live in the neighborhood, all the laborers in the fields and servants in the families being white. The citizens of Monroe county were true to the South in her late struggle, and have adhered to Southern churches.

Students arriving by the East Tennessee and Virginia Railroad will get off at Sweetwater, forty miles south of Knoxville, whence they will find conveyance to the college, seven miles distant.

Our post office is Madisonville, Tennessee.

F. M. GRACE, President.

P. S.—1. Families from the South will find good board in the neighborhood, and a delightful summer retreat at White Cliff Springs, sixteen miles distant from Madisonville. For information on this point parties may address H. A. McKenzie, steward of the college. The health of the country is proverbial.

P. S.—2. Younger boys may be safely sent to this school, as all are under the immediate oversight of the principal, both when in school and when at the boarding house.

HOMER COLLEGE.

The scholastic exercises of the Fall Session of this College, located at Homer, Louisiana, under the care of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, will begin on the FIRST TUESDAY of September next.

FACULTY.

Rev. J. E. Cobb, President and Professor of Mental and Moral Science, Greek Language and Literature.

J. W. Nicholson, Professor of Pure and Mixed Mathematics, and Natural Science.

——, Professor of Civil Engineering.

A. C. Cathorn, A. B., Adjunct Professor of Languages and English Literature.

The Preparatory Department is under the care of all the Faculty.

TERMS PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS.

Tuition in Collegiate Department.... $25 00
Preparatory studies..... $15 00 and 20 00
Contingent fee..... 1 50

Board in private families, per month, $11. Board with room furnished, $15.

Total expenses for board and tuition will range from $85 to $105 per session, while the course of studies is as full and thorough as that of any college in the land.

Active measures have been taken for a full and permanent endowment.

For health and association it is believed that the location cannot be surpassed.

It is the aim of the Trustees to place Homer College in the front rank.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE,
Staunton, Virginia,

WILL BEGIN the Twenty-second Annual Session SEPTEMBER 21, 1871, and close June 24, 1872. Than this no college for young ladies ranks higher. The President, Rev. WILLIAM A. HARRIS, is aided by an able and accomplished board of eighteen teachers and officers. System of teaching thorough, and based on the plan of the University of Virginia. English Science and Literature are taught by experienced graduates of our first universities and colleges. French is taught by a native master of the language. Music by two able masters, aided, among others, by two of the most distinguished vocalists in the South.

This is one of the healthiest climates in the world, and young ladies who come here from the South with feeble constitutions are entirely restored to health.

Buildings elegant—fanned by the purest breezes, and commanding the most magnificent rural and mountain scenery for thirty miles along the beautiful Valley of Virginia, making it one of the most delightful college homes in the Union. During the last session one hundred young ladies attended this institution from fourteen Southern States.

(From Judge JOHN N. HENDREN, M. A., University of Virginia.)

I regard the Wesleyan Female Institute, under the management of Rev. William A. Harris, as one of the very best and most attractive schools in the State. * * * *

(From Prof. WILLIAM E. PETERS, LL. D., of University of Virginia.)

* * * The sterling worth of Prof. Harris as a man, his Christian character, his devotion to duty and his mature scholarship, as also his successful experience as a teacher, furnish ample assurance that young ladies committed to his charge will enjoy advantages of moral and intellectual training rarely found.

* * * From personal knowledge I believe that, as the president of a female college, Rev. William A. Harris has no superior; indeed, within the purview of my acquaintance he has no equal.

(From Bishop E. M. MARVIN, D. D.)

The Wesleyan Female Institute is an honor to the church. Instruction is thorough. All classes stand high. In Music advantages are offered of a very high order. The most talented professors are employed, and neither pains nor expense are spared to make this department eminent. The school is very prosperous, and deserves to be so.

TERMS FOR THE ENTIRE SCHOLASTIC YEAR. Board and tuition in the Collegiate Course, $235. Music and other extra studies, moderate.

For catalogues address

WHITWORTH FEMALE COLLEGE,
Brookhaven, Mississippi,

ON THE New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad, one hundred and twenty-eight miles from New Orleans, and fifty-seven miles south of Jackson, Mississippi.

The location is healthy. The instruction in all the branches, including French and Music, is thorough. During the past term there were one hundred and eighty-two pupils. The Faculty consists of four gentlemen and six ladies. The total expenses for board, tuition in English, Latin and Greek, English text-books, school-room stationery, medicines and medical attention, for the term of forty weeks, amount to $263. The next session will open on the twentieth of September, 1871.

Catalogues can be obtained from R. J. Harp, 112 Camp street, New Orleans, Louisiana, or from the president.

MEDICAL.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR.

A Purely Vegetable Compound

FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF

RHEUMATISM AND GOUT

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered them made relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, they can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Rowson, Delhi, Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Bradley, Floyd, Louisiana.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to dura tion of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia, from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

No charge made except for medicine. For directions as to use and for further information address

ROBERT J. HARP,

NO. 112 CAMP STREET, NEW ORLEANS,

AGENT FOR THE SOUTHWESTERN STATES FOR THE SALE OF

GEORGE WOODS & CO.'S

PARLOR And CHURCH ORGANS.

To those who are at all acquainted with the trade in musical instruments, or those conversant with the improvements that during the last twenty years have been made in that most popular of instruments, the Reed Organ, it is entirely superfluous to speak of the reputation or ability of the firm of GEO. WOODS & CO. We will, however, mention, for the benefit of any who may be without information on the subject, that he is the inventor of many valuable improvements and ingenious devices, and that his conditors in the business are all men extensively known to the trade as being possessed of uncommon skill, taste and experience in their different branches.

In offering our instruments to the notice of all interested in music, we merely ask a comparison between those of our manufacture and those of others, and briefly mention upon what points in our instruments we base our claims of superiority to the productions of our competitors in business:

QUALITY OF TONE.

Its Purity, Clearness and Brilliancy, Extraordinary Power,

CAPACITY FOR VARIETY, AND BEAUTY OF EFFECT,

Which is owing in a great measure to the excellence of our famous SOLO STOPS,

VOX HUMANA AND VOX CELESTE,

which differ materially in their construction and effects from other Stops of the same or similar name.

Our MANUAL SUB-BASS; smooth as well as effective in quality of tone.
PATENTED INVENTIONS AND INGENIOUS DEVICES.
Our method of employing SOLO SETS in separate WIND CHESTS.
IMPROVED VALVES AND WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.
THOROUGHNESS OF CONSTRUCTION AND ELEGANCE OF DESIGN.

All material used in the construction of our instruments will be found to be strictly of the best quality. Our workmanship will also be found to be of a very high order.

The Cases are constructed with a proper regard to the laws of sound, having acoustic chambers at the ends of the case.

The Fronts of Keys are Ivory, and are not of Rolly wood.

The Cornices are hand-made.

The Stops are of Ebony and Ivory, engraved by hand.

Special attention is called to these Organs. Price lists and Catalogues, containing full particulars of the many numbers, sizes, varieties and prices ranging from $110 to $650—will be mailed to any one on application.

All Instruments will be thoroughly examined and shipped in good order. Therefore parties can safely order without coming to select. Address

LITHO-FRACTEUR is a new explosive material for breaking up stones and blasting. Its principal constituents are nitro-glycerine, gun-cotton, infusorial earth, and a few other secret substances. It is safe, powerful, and will probably be a successful rival to nitro-glycerine and other dangerous explosives used by miners.

INDIA RUBBER INEXHAUSTIBLE.—The belt of land around the globe, five hundred miles north and five hundred miles south of the equator, abounds in trees producing the gum of India rubber. They can be tapped, it is stated, for twenty successive seasons without injury; and the trees stand so close that one can gather the sap of eighty in a day; each tree yielding on an average three tablespoonfuls daily. Forty-three thousand of these trees have been counted in a tract of country thirty miles long by eight wide. There are in America and Europe more than one hundred and fifty manufactories of India rubber articles, employing some five hundred operatives each, and consuming more than ten million pounds of the gum per year, and the business is considered to be still in its infancy. But to whatever extent it may increase, there will be plenty of rubber to supply the demand.

TWO SICK PERSONS should never occupy the same room at the same time. They poison each other, not only in body, but in mind. One reason why hospitals become such post-houses is because of the large number of sick persons brought into near proximity. The greatest possible care should always be given to keep the air of a sick-room pure by frequent changes, and, if needful, by disinfectants. Every person ought to understand the way to use disinfectants, so as to have them produce the best results with the least harm. It is often well to have two rooms for a person who is very sick, and to change from one room to another occasionally. This gives an opportunity to keep the air and bedding pure and sweet. The very walls, floors, carpets, bedding and furniture of a sick-room absorb and retain the effluvia from those who are very sick, and thus contaminate the room permanently, unless great precaution is taken to prevent it.—Herald of Health.

WE NOW HEAR of cloths manufactured out of a mixture of bamboo and wool, cotton or silk. The bamboo is prepared very much in the same way as straw, by boiling for several hours in water probably containing alkali. It is then run through heavy rollers, and subsequently through a picker, which reduces it to a fiber. The fiber is then in a condition for being carded and dyed, ready for mixing with other stock. We have seen specimens of cloth made by adding various proportions of the bamboo.

Cotton warp and cloth containing fifty per cent. of bamboo in filling was strong and capable of taking a fine dye. A silk-mixed cassimere, in which was twenty-five per cent. of bamboo fiber with warp and filling, also looked well. The dyed fiber closely resembled wool to the uninitiated, and the undyed looked as if it could be used for false hair, if it could be made long enough.—Journal of Applied Chemistry.

CAUSES OF SUDDEN DEATH.—Very few of the sudden deaths which are said to arise from "diseases of the heart" do really arise from that cause. To ascertain the real origin of sudden deaths, experiments have been tried in Europe and reported to a scientific congress held at Strasbourg. Sixty-six cases of sudden death were made the subject of a thorough post-mortem examination; in these only two were found who had died from disease of the heart. Nine out of sixty-six had died from apoplexy, while there were forty-six cases of congestion of the lungs—that is, the lungs were so full of blood they could not work, there not being room enough for a sufficient quantity of air to enter to support life. The causes that produce congestion of the lungs are cold feet, tight clothing, costive bowels, sitting still chilled after being warmed with labor or a rapid walk, going too suddenly from close, heated rooms into the cold air, especially after speaking, and sudden and depressing news operating on the blood. The causes of sudden death being known, an avoidance of them may serve to lengthen many valuable lives which would otherwise be lost under the verdict of "heart complaint." That disease is supposed to be inevitable and incurable; hence many may not take the pains they would to avoid sudden death if they knew it lay in their power.

GENEROUS.—The London Methodist Recorder states that a fund was originated some time ago for the extinction of the Wesleyan missionary debt, Mr. Herald, the treasurer of the society, munificently contributing £2,000, and various friends aiding by liberal gifts.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have no improvement to notice in the general market since our last report. Sugar has been in fair request, but with trifling receipts and a light stock the movement has been of limited extent. Very little has been done in molasses. Operations in flour have been on a moderate scale, closing at prices showing a decline of about 12½c. Corn ruled at about previous rates until Tuesday, when it gave way 2½c. ₱ bushel. Pork has continued to favor buyers, showing a further decline of 25c. ₱ barrel. Bacon also has been dull and drooping.

Our accounts from the country are conflicting, and, although generally favorable, are far from supporting the extravagantly cheering statements of the New York press. It can hardly have escaped observation that even the most favorable accounts express no hope of a yield proving more than two-thirds of last year's. Thus the Ouachita Intelligencer of last Saturday, representing a large cotton-growing district, says: "Cotton is growing rapidly, and there is a hope that a two-thirds crop will be made." This corresponds with the general tenor of the last report of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, which gave the spirit of more than two hundred letters from planters and country merchants.

The river is 13 feet 2 inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the fourth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales.. 2,114
Lake	8
Mobile	169
Florida	8
Texas	31
Total	2,330

On Saturday the demand was limited, but factors evinced no disposition to make any concessions, and 675 bales changed hands at about previous rates. On Monday, there being no telegrams from Liverpool, and those from New York being discouraging, the sales were confined to 125 bales, with nothing to indicate any change in prices. On Tuesday the market resumed its movement to a limited extent, the business embracing 400 bales, but under the unfavorable dispatches from New York and Liverpool the prices paid showed an irregular decline of ⅛ to ⅜c.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 1,200 bales.

The receipts at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 1,436,892 bales, against 1,139,059 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 1,092,402 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 873,543 bales to Great Britain, 300,623 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 214,048 to France.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	14½ to 15½
Good ordinary	15½ to 16½
Low middling	17 to 17½

Sugar.—There is little or none coming in from plantations, and the market has been without any movement of importance since our last review. Good common is quoted at 10½c., and fully fair, refilled, 11¾ to 12c. ₱ lb. On Tuesday 35 hogsheads fully fair sold at 11¾ to 12c. ₱ lb. Refinery yellow clarified is quoted at 12¼ to 12¾c., and white at 13 to 13½c. ₱ lb.

Molasses.—There is scarcely any coming in from plantations. The sales were at 32c. for inferior. City refinery reboiled is quoted at 30 to 65c. ₱ gallon; golden syrup 90c. to $1 ₱ gallon.

Pork.—The market has continued extremely dull. There is no demand, and mess is quoted nominally at $14.75 ₱ barrel. It is retailing at $15.25.

Bacon.—On Monday 5 casks clear rib sides sold at 9c., and 10 tierces sugar-cured hams at 16½c. Shoulders are quoted at 7½c., clear rib sides 9c., clear sides 9¼c. Some clear sides sold on Tuesday at 9⅛c. Sugar-cured hams command 10 to 14c. for second pickle, and 15 to 16¾c. ₱ lb for choice.

Dry Salt Meat is very dull, and shoulders have been offering at 6c. ₱ lb, without sales.

Lard.—On Tuesday 30 tierces refined sold at 10½c., 10 and 10 do. at 10¾c., and 25 kegs do. at 11¾c. ₱ lb.

Breakfast Bacon is dull at 10½c. ₱ lb. On Tuesday 30 boxes sold on private terms.

Monetary.—Gold, 112 to 112¼.

American silver half dollars, 107½ to 108½, and Mexican dollars at 2¾ to 3⅛ per cent. premium.

The sales of stocks included 100 and 100 shares Louisiana Levee Company on Saturday at $12, 200 do. at $12.12½, 100, 100 and 200 do. at $12.25, 25 Slaughterhouse at $25, and 50 Germania National Bank at $160; 100 Louisiana Levee Company on Monday at $12.25, and 500 at $12.50, and 200 Pneumatic Propelling Company at $4.75 and $5; and 1,300 Louisiana Levee Company on Tuesday at $12.25, $12.50 and $12.75.

The sales of warrants have been confined to trifling sums by dealers. We quote State unregistered at 57 to 58 for large, and 60 to 65 for medium. No registered warrants are offered for sale.

THE WOMAN'S FRIEND WASHING MACHINE.

IT IS THE INVENTION of a Kentuckian, on the Fulling Mill principle, and is operated by rocking.

Washing of clothes is so simplified by this machine that either a man, woman or child can do the work, and do it well.

It will thoroughly WASH, RINSE and BLUE one hundred (100) ordinary Pieces of Clothing in forty-five (45) minutes, without the LEAST WEAR of the clothing, the breaking of a button or the pulling of a thread.

The most delicate Fabrics can be washed with it without the least injury.

While it washes, it bleaches likewise.

It will wash Blankets, and give them a new appearance and feeling.

Wool may be washed on this machine at the rate of six pieces in two minutes.

No Wash Tubs are needed.

Its construction is so simple it will last for years with care, and cost less than any wash tub in the aggregate. Any one can repair it, as there are no cog-wheels or cranks to replace.

Price, $12; with Wringer, $18.

Attention is also called to the "Little Giant Wringer," that we sell, as being superior to any other Wringer in use, simply for the reason that no adjustment is necessary to wring either a collar or a blanket. Address

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching should not be offensive to thought and feeling of the Southern people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simplicity of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By Charles S. Venable, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

COMPRISES, ALSO,

De Vere's French Grammar, Readers, etc.,

By M. Schele DeVere, LL.D. Professor of Modern Languages in the University of Virginia.

Gildersleeve's Latin Series,

By B. L. Gildersleeve, Ph.D., LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

Carter's Elements of General History,

By Rev. J. P. Carter, A.M., of Baltimore, Maryland.

Holmes' English Grammars,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

LeConte's Scientific Series,

By the Professors LeConte, late of the University of South Carolina.

Johnston's English Classics,

By R. M. Johnston, A.M., late Professor of Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres in the University of Georgia.

To which list other books in other departments will early be added.

Send for our full ILLUSTRATED DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE, which will be mailed free to any teacher or school officer. Liberal terms given for introduction.

NEW YORK, Aug. 15.—It is stated on good authority that contracts have been made with one of the great railroad contractors of the West for the entire construction of the Mobile and Northwestern railroad, to be completed in two years.

The consummation only depends upon the full amount, expected by the company, being voted by the counties in Mississippi.

The elections will soon be held, and from reports received it is believed the vote will be quite unanimous in favor of liberal subscriptions. If this is realized, work will at once be commenced by large gangs at both ends of the line and at intersection with the Central road.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Aug. 8.—At a meeting held at Heidelberg, on Sunday, to take measures for the foundation of the "Church German," forty delegates were present from various parts of Germany, Austria and Switzerland.

A committee was appointed to draw up a constitution for the new church.

Its main points will be the principles of the Council of Constance of 1514; the subordination of the Pope to the Council; the separation of church and state; the participation of laymen in the management of the church; the free election of bishops; communal election of pastors, and modification in the confessional.

The delegates are divided in opinion as to whether the new church should acknowledge the supremacy of the Pope.

The committee were instructed to submit their report for ratification at a meeting to be held at Munich, in September.

EMSBURG, Aug. 9.—Two hundred and fifty thousand strangers attended the Sir Walter Scott centennial.

LONDON, Aug. 9.—Assistant Secretary of the United States Treasury Richardson has completed negotiations for the balance of the five per cent. bonds with the London house of Jay Cooke, McCulloch & Co.

The announcement of this arrangement has occasioned considerable advance in the price of all United States bonds in this market.

LONDON, Aug. 10.—A special from private information says military organization in Russia is being pushed vigorously on the Prussian system, and compulsory service rigorously carried out without exceptions. In consequence of the enormous extent of country, provisional depots are to be established. Officers are examining the frontiers and reporting.

The government is trying the experiment to see how soon a corps d'armee advancing can lay a line of railway for the forwarding of supplies. If such is the case, everything politically promises well for Russia making an alliance with Germany, who is apprehensive of an alliance between France and Russia.

In the House of Lords, after a spirited debate, the ballot bill was defeated by ninety-nine majority against the ministry.

LONDON, Aug. 11.—Russia is rapidly adopting the Prussian military organization.

The Emperors of Germany and Austria meet at Jochal to-morrow, supposed to be for the purpose of consulting over the apprehended alliance of Russia and France.

LONDON, Aug. 12.—It proves to have been the American steam frigate Guerriere, Captain Stevens, which was ashore recently off Leghorn. The British iron-clad Warrior has not been ashore. The Guerriere was rescued from a perilous position several days ago, and towed to Spezzia for repairs.

The Times' money article to-day states the amount of funded United States loan taken by bankers here will be offered to the public next week by Cooke, McCulloch & Co.

The report that Lord Chief Justice Cockburn had been appointed arbitrator for Great Britain, under the treaty of Washington, is confirmed.

The drawing up of the case for British government has been ...ted to the Lord Chancellor, ... Lord Tenterden and Prof. Mon...tague Bernard as assistants, and Sir Roundel Palmer will act as counsel for Great Britain before the board of arbitrators.

BERLIN, Aug. 12.—The imperial government as well as the local authorities have adopted most stringent measures for the prevention and spread of the cholera.

Twenty-three persons were attacked with the disease at Koenigsberg yesterday, thirteen of whom are already dead.

No cases of cholera have appeared in the south of Russia.

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 14.—The most stringent precautionary measures have been forced by the Danish government for the prevention of the introduction of cholera into the country.

LONDON, Aug. 14.—It is reported the Italian government has instructed the Italian minister at Versailles to express thanks to President Thiers for his pacific and conciliatory words, but surprise that Thiers permits speakers to use language injurious to Italy.

The liberal Rome journals express the readiness of Italy to enter into an alliance with France, if France abandons negotiations relative to the Pope.

LONDON, Aug. 15.—The French government, it is reported, has requested the extradition of Communists who have taken refuge on British soil. The reply of the English cabinet is said to be a decided refusal.

The vine disease prevails in Portugal. The wine crop, it is expected, will be short.

MISSIONARY WORK IN BRAZIL.

We were gratified to find in the Nashville Advocate of August 5 an interesting letter from Rev. J. E. Newman, formerly of the Alabama Conference, and now a resident of Brazil. Speaking of missions in that country, he says:

When I consider what is being done in England and the United States for the missionary work—in Asia, Africa, and even in Europe—I am astonished at the perfect indifference with which they look upon this country. Here is a people, perfectly accessible, almost as destitute of the gospel as the Chinese—many of whom are of our own color and lineage, in the main—and yet there are hardly one dozen Protestant ministers in all of Brazil, except Germans, who preach exclusively to their own race; and that, too, when thousands of this people are longing for religious light. They are starving on the husks of Romanism; while ships with missionaries on board sail by our beautiful shores, to distant barbaric nations, and leave this people to perish for want of the bread of life.

Why is this? It can only be because our people know almost nothing concerning this country and its religious wants. Do they think this is already a Christian country? Only let them know the facts in regard to its utter destitution of all substantial religious knowledge—that they have not the Bible; that most of them never heard a sermon. Indeed, they are almost as destitute of the Bible as the Chinese. Ask a Brazilian if he has a Bible, and he will tell you Yes, and hand you a little book with prayers to the saints, especially to the Virgin, a very short catechism, and a very few detached scraps of scripture. This is what they are taught is the Bible, and the majority of them know no better.

They have priests in all their chief towns, who are generally ecretons—many of them rich. They seldom or never visit the people of the country, only when sent for by the rich to baptize their children, "to confess them" before death; and for all such work they charge very dearly, so that the poor have to be carried to them for baptism, and have to die without the last rites of the Roman Church.

In their churches they usually, on Sabbath, recite a few prayers in Latin, sometimes deliver brief lectures, and are careful to encourage the worship of "the Virgin" and other saints. They preside at all the "Festas" observed in this country, and regulate all the ceremonies with great care, while dressed in the most costly and showy attire; but they seldom ever pretend to preach the gospel, even as understood by the Romish Church.

Among the masses of Brazilians the doctrine of spiritual regeneration is quite unknown; indeed, it is difficult to give them any idea of it. Here baptismal regeneration is all they ever heard of.

But while the above is true of the masses in this country, there are many intelligent people who are not so superstitious. This class are generally well informed in regard to current events in the world, and are anxious to see all the improvements and education of the civilized world introduced into Brazil.

So far as I have been able to learn, this class are generally republican in sentiment, and they are favorable to Protestants, because they know Protestantism means freedom in religious matters, and must therefore be favorable to political freedom; and they know well that the reverse is true of Romanism.

Again, this class of Brazilians are partial in their feelings toward the people of the United States, especially those of the Southern States. They admire their free institutions, their general intelligence, boundless energy, and their vast progress in all the elements which make a people great; and they indulge the hope that Brazil, under a republican form of government, may become to South America what the United States are to North America. In a word, many of them look upon that republic with such feelings of respect and hope as they entertain for no other people.

Many of this class are skeptics; some of them can hardly be considered Romanists or skeptics as yet; they hardly know what they are themselves. But some of them are ready for the gospel, and they would welcome its introduction into the country. On this point there is no mistake. I have sought for reliable information on this subject, and my full conviction is that now is the time to preach the gospel to this people, and there is no country in the world from whence missionaries would be so welcome as from the United States.

O that American Christians could know this, and see how great a harvest is here awaiting for laborers! To young men just entering the ministry I would especially appeal. Here, my brethren, here is the field for your labor. Come to this beautiful land—to this kind-hearted but erring people. Come and preach Christ to them. Here

> You cannot toil in vain;
> Cold, heat, and moist, and dry,
> Shall foster and mature the grain
> For garners in the sky.

Are there no such young men in the bounds of the Alabama Conference? Cannot those who were once my fellow-laborers find, among the thousands of Alabama Methodists, at least two or three young men suitable for this work?

As a proof and illustration of what Protestants may accomplish in Brazil, I refer you to the success of the handful of Presbyterians already here. I would like to say something of this, but have not time or space now.

I have already written you a long letter—too long—but the importance of the subject is my excuse. Could our people but know what an opening there is for the gospel in this country, the laborers would come. What though our Southern countrymen are still enduring many of the evils of a conquered country, and they are still poor; and though the great West calls for many ministers—and may that call continue—yet a few young men of the right kind could be spared for Brazil every year. Ye young men of the church, whom "God has called to the office and work of the ministry," when you look over the world for a field of labor, think of this healthful land—think of her millions in semi-pagan darkness—and come hither in the spirit of him who hath called you into his vineyard.

J. E. NEWMAN.

LIMEIRA, Province of San Paulo, Brazil, April 28, 1871.

May 1.—Since writing the above I have seen our Protestant colporteur. He is selling many books, Bibles and tracts—all furnished by Presbyterian agencies—and one hour's conversation with him reveals the fact that we now have in many parts of this province openings for the gospel such as should at once be occupied. There are among this people thousands who are ready to receive the word of God. Our colporteur is a Southern Methodist—a German from Texas. He says we ought to have some German Methodist preachers here, and he is right.

Don't be afraid that I am too sanguine about this country. All I tell you of the openings for the gospel here are far short of the whole truth. What I write is true, and I might have truthfully written in much stronger terms.

This province has a population of six hundred thousand at least, on a tract of country about as large as the State of Alabama, with as pleasant a climate as any in the world, I am sure. There is one great railroad being built across the province, from Santos, and several branches from the main track.

The expense of a missionary to Brazil is not great. From Baltimore or New York, by good sail-vessels, $100 to $150; from Rio de Janeiro to Santos, and thence to Limeira, $35. The trip from Rio to Limeira requires four days; one on steamer to Santos, twelve hours by railroad, and two light days' ride on horseback or back. The railroad is excellent, and the dirt-road as good as any I ever saw of the same distance—sixty-eight miles. Cost of living is very moderate. A man with a small family can live well in Limeira, or the city of Rio Claro, on $1,000 per year—better than he could in the States. The Brazilians are almost universally kind and hospitable. There is no kinder people in any land. Their kindness makes me love them, and feel at home in Brazil.

MRS. PAULINA BURNHAM, a rich English lady, lost by the wreck of the steamship Anglo Saxon, near Newfoundland, in 1861, a valuable and very much cherished ring. The other day it was found in the entrails of a fish by a St. Johns fisherman, who received therefor from the owner $250.

DO WE lack faith? Let the trembling, doubting soul go into the presence of Infinite Love, and rest on his bosom, as the beloved disciple laid his head upon the breast of Jesus, and receive the faith of God.

REV. THOMAS SAMFORD.

MR. EDITOR: This aged patriarch of Methodism closed his earthly pilgrimage in this city on the twenty-eighth of July, it being the eighty-third anniversary of his birth.

He was ordained a deacon by Bishop George, in July, 1821, and by the same Bishop he was set apart to the office of an elder, in February, 1824.

In the days of his strength he was a preacher of great power and influence in [illegible] church. He came within two votes of being elected to the episcopacy at the time of Bishop Andrew's elevation to that office. (So I learn from his family.) He has been within my pastoral charge the last three years; but being unable to attend church or preach, in consequence of his many and increasing infirmities, I have only known him as a meek, patient servant of God, waiting for his release from suffering and for the reward of fidelity meritoriously concentering in the Redeemer of sinners.

He did attempt to preach once last year on the occasion of the weekly prayer meeting. His text was Matthew xxv, 1-13. He spoke about twenty-five minutes, giving a clear exposition of the parable, and with an animation that was unusual for one so aged and enfeebled by disease.

His death was more the result of the cessation of the life-power than the assault of disease. The weary wheels of life showed signs of a loss of momentum on Wednesday afternoon. A profound coma ensued, the respiration was disturbed, but no consciousness of pain. On Thursday he uttered indistinctly a few words indicative of triumph, and on Friday evening the wheels stopped their sluggish motion, the silver cord was loosed, the golden bowl was broken, and all that was spiritual and immortal of this renowned father mounted on high, and gravitated to the center of all good. It reminded one of a restless balloon, heavily charged with gas, struggling against a single cord, that cord untwisting and snapping its fibers until the last is broken, and the beautiful thing mounts among the stars.

His aged companion quietly sits in lonely widowhood and awaits the signal of a similar transit to the better land, where, she fondly believes, her sainted husband awaits her arrival.

As Father Samford was a superannuated member of the Louisiana Conference, that body will doubtless prepare and publish, in due time, an extended notice of his great merits.

DR. TISCHENDORF SAYS: "Providence has ordained for the New Testament more sources of the greatest antiquity than are possessed by all the old Greek literature put together. And of these two manuscripts have for a long time been especially esteemed by Christian scholars, since, in addition to their great antiquity, they contain very nearly the whole of both the Old and New Testaments. Of these two, one is deposited in the Vatican, and the other in the British Museum. Within the last ten years a third has been added to the number, which was found at Mount Sinai, and is now at St. Petersburg." Dr. Tischendorf's New Testament, with various readings from these three manuscripts, is for sale by Robert J. Harp, agent. See advertisement.

LOUIS THE FOURTEENTH was told that Lord Stair was one of the best bred men in Eur[illegible]. "I shall soon put him to the test," said the King; and asking Lord Stair to take an airing with him, as soon as the door of the coach was opened he bade him pass and go in; the other bowed and obeyed. The King said: "The world is in the right in the character it gives; another person would have troubled me with ceremony."

THE SPIRIT'S CALL.

AT DAYBREAK.

"O slumberer, rouse thee! despise not the truth;
Give, give thy Creator the days of thy youth;
Why standest here idle? 'The day breaketh'—see,
The Lord of the vineyard is waiting for thee!"

"Sweetest Spirit, by thy power,
Grant me yet another hour;
Earthly pleasures I would prove,
Earthly joy and earthly love;
Scarcely yet hath dawned the day;
Sweetest Spirit, wait, I pray."

WHEN THE SUN IS HIGH.

"O loiterer, speed thee! The morn wears apace;
Then squander no longer thy remnant of grace,
But haste while there's time! with the Master agree;
The Lord of the vineyard stands waiting for thee!"

"Gentle Spirit, prithee, stay;
Brightly beams the early day;
Let me linger in these bowers;
God shall have my noontide hours.
Chide me not for my delay;
Gentle Spirit, wait, I pray."

WHEN THE SUN DECLINES.

"O slaner, arouse thee! Thy noonday is past,
Already the shadows are lengthening fast;
Escape for thy life! from the dark mountain flee;
The Lord of the vineyard yet waiteth for thee."

"Spirit, cease thy mournful lay;
Leave me to myself, I pray!
Earth hath flung her spell around me,
Pleasure's silken chain hath bound me;
When the sun his path hath trod,
Spirit, then I'll turn to God."

* * * * * * * *

Hark! borne on the wind is the bell's solemn toll;
'Tis mournfully pealing the knell of a soul!
Of a soul that despised the kind teachings of truth,
And gave to the world the best hours of its youth.
The Spirit's sweet pleadings and strivings are o'er;
The Lord of the vineyard stands waiting no more!

FROM CHINA.

[The following communications from our missionaries in China, addressed to W. H. Foster, superintendent of the Felicity Street Sunday School of New Orleans, will be read with interest. Our Sunday schools must not fail to sustain the schools established in China, and furnish the means to extend their operations.]

SHANGHAI, CHINA, June 10, 1871.

HON. W. H. FOSTER—Dear Bro.: Your letter of April 8 came to hand on the third instant, as also one from San Francisco, covering order for $137.50, (Mexican,) being amount realized from your remittance to that point. My family have also arrived. All safe and well, having been much benefited by their visit to America. My school is doing well. Will soon have good and permanent accommodations for it, and every convenience for carrying it to a successful issue, always provided it be sustained as formerly. Your school and that of Moreau are doing nobly, and I think results will justify the interest you have taken in our enterprise. You will not only confer eternal benefits upon the heathen, but the reflex influence on your schools will be inestimable. May God prosper you, and abundantly bless your liberality. You must pardon this brief note. I have not time for a letter. Five thousand thanks to the missionary society and to you.

In haste. Yours in faith,

YOUNG J. ALLEN.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, June 12, 1871.

WM. H. FOSTER, ESQ.—My Dear Brother: The last mail, which arrived on the third instant, brought us another welcome letter from you. It also informed us that you had forwarded another additional sum from the Felicity Street Sunday School and Missionary Society, and also from the Moreau Street Sunday School and Missionary Society, for the use of the schools in Shanghai; also an additional sum from dear Mrs. Thomas for the orphanage. Please return my warmest thanks for their kindness in sending more help for the support of these children. I am sure those dear young Sabbath school children would be greatly pleased to come in and see our Sunday school, and hear how readily they answer Bible questions, though some of them have not been in the school a year. I will send them some of our Sabbath school papers, which will afford them pleasure to look at, though they may not be able to read them. I have just had the girls' orphanage finished, and they have moved into it—on the same lot with our dwelling. There are ten orphan boys who are supported, and eight girls. There are also some day scholars in the boys' school, and five in the girls' school, making in all thirty in those two schools under instruction. This does not include Bro. Allen's school. I will send you a photograph of the girls, two Bible readers and Miss Wong, the teacher in the school. She is also a church member. I will also send you some incense for both Felicity Street Sabbath School and for Moreau Street Sabbath School, and a shell, which is used to put in Chinese windows to give light. I hope they will reach you safely, as I shall wrap them in a new paper. The paper you can hand to the editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, as he might see something he would like to put in his paper from the far East. We are all quiet here. There are rumors at Tientsin of large forces coming in from the interior. We hope, however, they are only reports.

Bro. Allen has not sold the bill which you sent. I will let you know by the next mail what the amount is. Pray for us, and for the work of the Lord among these people. With kindest regards and best love to all, I remain yours in the bonds of Christian love,

J. W. LAMBUTH.

JESUIT PRIESTS VS. THE BIBLE.

A TRUE STORY.

MR. EDITOR: The word of God is certainly the sheet-anchor of the Christian faith. To its precious promises he holds in the day of trouble. The following scene is from life:

In December, 1870, while en route for New Orleans, the seat of the Louisiana Conference, we were detained in the town of N——, where Catholicism is supreme. Calling at the parochial residence, we were kindly received by Father L., indeed the "oracle" among the Catholics of N——. "Sir, I am glad to see you," said he. "What can I do for you?" "Sir, I am traveling, and wish something to read." This was said as a feeler. "Oh yes! happy, sir, to supply you. Just say what you want, and you shall have it." "Can I hope for such goodness anywhere?" said P. "Yes, sir, indeed you shall be served," replied Father L. "Well, sir, I want a few tracts and a book, if I can find one to suit me." "Come to the case, and choose you a book," said Father L. Did so, and, without much hesitation, took down a small Douay version of the Bible, and said: "Here is a book I would like to have." "That one?" taking it and looking at it. "Yes; well, ahem, (considerable coughing, together with vigorous 'nose exercises,') who do you want it for?" "For myself, sir," with some warmth. Father L. gazed about the room as if at his wit's end. At length he replied: "Pardon me, sir, but I thought some one had sent you." "Your candor is astonishing; but, sir, I wish the book for myself alone." "Well, sir, I regret to say I cannot let you have the Bible," said Father L. "Sir, you have opened my eyes to something I strongly suspected. Protestant writers and preachers have charged Romish priests with keeping the Bible from the people, which they strenuously deny. Now, sir, under the fostering care of nearly one hundred millions of Protestants, Bible societies are spreading the Scriptures everywhere. In New Orleans, under the very shadow of St. Patrick's Cathedral, is a Bible House, from which vast multitudes all over the broad Southwest are supplied. It occurred to me that I would like to have one of your Bibles; but as you deny me, I now feel free in saying that the papacy is the enemy of Bible truth; also why fear its dissemination." During this colloquy we slowly left the book case, and drew the center table, upon which lay—will you believe it?—two packs of dirty, greasy cards for playing euchre and seven-up! "What are these?" said P. "Oh! you must not be scandalized (a Douay word for offended) at these. The Savior did not prohibit our amusing ourselves innocently." (?) "I know he did not; but how can I but feel scandalized when I see the only (?) lights of the world engaged in that which looks disgusting even in a lot of street rowdies and grog-shop bullies. Heretical Protestants dare not do such things."

Bishop M. and six priests, who were present, retired immediately. After a little conversation upon common-places Father L. and P. bid each other the time of day. Indulge us in a few remarks. The people in and around N—— are, (Protestants excepted,) for the most part, ignorant, and utterly immoral; thinking but little of a personal salvation. The convent of the Sacred Heart is there, but Catholicism is its curriculum. It is thus wherever Romanism predominates. Methodism in the world is but little older than Catholicism in N——; yet, from smaller beginnings, she has evangelized kingdoms. In N——, as elsewhere, a hungry, starving peasantry deny themselves necessaries of life to embellish a gaudy cathedral and sustain a presumptuous priesthood, not having even the semblance of true piety, who scruple not to hide the key of knowledge from multitudes now seeking the way to everlasting life. These are they whom we are to love and express charity for! We can love them, but, being Protestants, we must forever protest against their deeds.

Yours in Christ, PRAIRIE.

YAZOO DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: The District Conference of the Yazoo district, North Mississippi Conference, convened at Bethel church on Thursday, July 27, at two o'clock P. M., in connection with a camp meeting. Our beloved presiding elder, Bro. Barton, was not permitted to be with us until Saturday evening, on account of sickness in his family. The conference elected Bro. K. A. Jones to the chair, J. T. McGee and J. B. Streater secretaries. The business of the conference was thoroughly and harmoniously transacted, of which the secretaries are instructed to give you a detailed account. It is the camp meeting I wish more particularly to speak of. I will sum up all I have to say in these few words: "It was a great success." But perhaps your readers would like to hear something in detail. The preaching, as should always characterize the ministers of Christ, was plain and demonstrative, practical and powerful, and led to great results. Many were the "slain of the Lord." The communion service, on Sunday night, was the most impressive I have ever witnessed. Bro. Barton did not preach, but gave us an able lecture on the design and power of the holy sacrament. The presence of the Master was with us. It was a sweet communion of the children with the Father. After the communion the altar exercises were solemn, and souls were ushered into the kingdom. We had several conversions and accessions before this, but now the work began in earnest. Souls began to cry aloud: "Men and brethren, what shall we do to be saved?" Soon one was converted, then another and another, until the camp was alive with the shouts of new-born souls, and Christians happy in the love of God. After this we had but little use for pulpit exercises, for nearly all were preachers. Monday was a day of rejoicing, from morning until near midnight, when the camp meeting was solemnly declared closed by Bro. Barton, with the following results: Born, forty; accessions, twenty-eight. The camp meeting was of primitive style. People came in their wagons from ten to twenty-five miles, prepared to take care of themselves. Some had tent clothes, others board shelters with bagging tacked up around. It has been fully demonstrated that we are able to have camp meetings again, and, as an evidence, we are going to have two more in this county this fall. Mr. Editor, we would be glad to have you with us at these meetings. Your brother in Christ,

P. A. JOHNSTON.

KOSCIUSKO, MISS., August 7, 1871.

I SEE there is no such way to have a large harvest as to have a large heart. The free giving of the branches of our present estate to God is the readiest means to have the roots increased for the future.

DEAR LORD, set thy foot on me, if thereby thou mayst be more seen and exalted and enjoyed by any of thy redeemed.

SUMMIT DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Summit District Conference, Mississippi Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church South, met at Magnolia, Mississippi, July 28, 1871. Conference sermon preached at eleven o'clock A. M., by Rev. R. B. Downer. Conference opened at three o'clock P. M., with singing and praying by Rev. J. Nicholson, presiding elder.

The roll being called, all the circuits were represented except three. C. C. Gibson was nominated and elected secretary, and Rev. W. H. Hardy assistant secretary. Reports were heard, from the charges represented, on the several interests of the church. While there has been an improvement, in some charges, in spirituality and finance, they are exceptions to the general state. The missionary and other benevolent enterprises of the church have received but little aid. The Sunday school cause is more prosperous than formerly, and promises much good. There has been some advance in building and repairing churches and parsonages. All the pastors are at their several posts of duty, laboring amid privations, yet hopeful, prayerful—rejoicing that they are permitted to preach the gospel to the poor, oppressed, down-trodden and over-taxed. Rev. R. J. Harp was present, representing the interests of the Book Concern and the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and preaching with acceptability.

The following brethren were elected lay delegates to the Annual Conference to be held at Meridian, Mississippi, in December:

Rev. E. L. Tarver, Felix Martin, Charles W. Reams, M. D., Henry C. Newsom. Alternates: Rev. W. H. Hartley, Robert H. Felder, William D. Warren, William D. Lee.

Tangipahoa, Louisiana, was appointed as the place of the next District Conference.

The following, offered by Rev. William Hoover, was unanimously passed:

1. This conference, believing the press to be one of the greatest agents known for good or evil, rejoice that our beloved church has so many deserving weeklies and other periodicals; and while we recommend them all, and either of them, we pledge ourselves to support our own, the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and the central at Nashville, and will endeavor to increase the circulation of the Southern Review and the New Monthly Magazine.

2. That while there are a number of good schools in our bounds, yet there are no colleges. The nearest Methodist college for young ladies is the Whitworth, at Brookhaven, under the presidency of Rev. H. F. Johnson, who has proved to be the right man in the right place, surrounded by an able faculty, and with complete apparatus. The location is in all respects desirable. The nearest Methodist male college is the Centenary, located at Jackson, Louisiana. It is the joint property of the Louisiana and Mississippi Conferences, and is just being thoroughly repaired. It has now an able faculty, and will be opened on the first of October, prepared to again enter upon her course of former usefulness in the great cause of education; therefore, Resolved, that we will use our best efforts to procure pupils for these colleges.

3. With gratitude to God we recognize an increasing interest in the Sabbath school cause in most of the district; yet, for want of money, there is a scarcity of books and papers; but we highly appreciate the Visitor, Little People's Magazine, and lesson papers, and will use our best efforts to give them a wider circulation.

A resolution on boundaries was passed, asking the authorities to make some slight changes in circuit boundaries; after which the conference, by a rising vote, unanimously resolved that the thanks of this conference be tendered to the citizens of Magnolia and vicinity for their hospitality.

After a harmonious session of two days, the conference adjourned on Saturday evening, July 29. We had preaching at night, love-feast on Sabbath morning, preaching and the sacrament at eleven o'clock A. M., and Sunday school address at half-past three P. M. At all the services the congregations were good, and very attentive to the proceedings of conference and the religious services. We believe these District Conferences will prove a great blessing in an united effort to govern our growing kingdom.

C. C. GIBSON, Secretary.

REV. JOHN P. DICKINSON.

Died, of paralysis, in this city, on the thirtieth of July ultimo, at the residence of Colonel E. B. Wilkerson, the Rev. John P. Dickinson, in the seventieth year of his age.

The memory of a good man deserves to be perpetuated and handed down to posterity. But when the Christian veteran, who has worn out his energies and spent his life in the service of the church, lays aside his armor, and enters upon the bright fields of reward above, no ordinary tribute should be inscribed to his name. We cannot too zealously guard and defend the heritage bequeathed by such a man to the world.

Hence the writer deeply feels his inadequacy to the task of contributing such reflections as the life and character of the deceased demand—especially in the short form of notice proposed—but rests content in the hope that other more worthy pens will be employed in recording the many virtues and excellencies of the lamented father in Israel.

The deceased was born in Moore county, in the State of North Carolina, in the year 1802. In October, 1819, at a very early age, he connected himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he became to be an able and efficient minister, and as such served the church for more than forty years.

It were impracticable to recount the numerous and important fields in which he labored as one of God's messengers. But the best years of his life and service were spent in the State of Georgia, whence he removed to Alabama, having transferred to the Alabama Conference, of which he was a member at the time of his death, and where he continued to fill important circuits and stations until, his health declining by reason of the infirmity of years and former hard service, he was superannuated. In this relation he ever maintained, unblemished, the character of a minister of Jesus.

The writer was frequently with him during his illness, and stood by his bedside in the dying hour. Throughout his sufferings no murmur or word of complaint was heard to escape his lips. His was the patience of the gospel, and his the Christian resignation. By reason of the extent of the disease, the mind being involved, he was for the most part unconscious, and incapable of carrying on a connected discourse; yet no stronger guarantee could be afforded, nor should the bereaved ones seek for higher testimony "that all is well," than is to be found in his uniformly consistent and pious life. Although such was his condition, he almost invariably gave intelligent replies to the questions propounded to him, and recognized many of the numerous friends who gathered around to administer unto him. Though not at his own immediate residence, surrounded by all his family, of whom none were present save his beloved wife and affectionate daughter, he fell not among strangers, but among brethren. That kind Providence that directs our paths, and leads us into ways we know not of, had brought him from his home on the morning of the day of his attack—a distance of about seven miles—to this city, whither he had repaired on business—to the field where, in former years, he had labored with so much efficiency and acceptability, and where he was universally esteemed and beloved.

Of none could it more truly be said: None knew him but to love him. To speak of him were to speak his praise. Never, within the writer's knowledge, was there a man more universally beloved within the sphere of his acquaintance, nor a minister more endeared to the hearts and affections of his people. And well did the people respond this sentiment in their kind e of love and sympathy during his illness; nor was this kindness attention confined to the mem of his own household of faith; brethren generally of other den inations were unremitting in attention, and sought for oppo nity to testify of their appreci and love for the dying Chri father. Surely he was a chosen sel of God—a messenger of heavenly tidings: "Peace on e and good will to man."

He expired about two o'cloc Sunday—the day on which mighty Conqueror himself a and who doubtless stood by side of the life-worn pilgrim a was treading the dark wate death; and who, ere this, has robe upon him not worn by k and given him the "starry cr

CALVINISM AND UNIVERSALISM. writer in the Christian Leader—U versalist—in discussing Univer ism in Scotland, thus speaks of difficulty of making converts f Arminianism, as compared with of expanding Calvinism:

"Universalism is, too, I th more likely to take root amon people accustomed to the theol of Calvinism than among Arminia The Calvinistic system is most l cal and correct, and requires onl be expanded to lead to Universali To make a Scotch Calvinist a U versalist, we have but to prove God wishes the salvation of e soul! The Arminian, on the o hand, while holding to a sys which in its actual results is no whit better than Calvinism, wrought himself into the belief the ultimate salvation of man is dependent on the will of God, the argument used to dislodge from this position, though equ conclusive, is not so simple, therefore not likely to impress popular mind so easily as that ployed against the Calvinist. At present time a revolt is taking pl in the minds of Scotch pe against Calvinism. They are bec ing sensible of the injustice it d to the character of God.

"It is necessary they feel in or to preserve God's attribute of finite goodness to believe that wished or intended the salvation all men; and none, therefore, is time when the Universalist teach are required to enforce the truth this view, but also more particula to give this truth real effective by pointing out the reasonableno justice and Scriptural character that article of this old creed whi teaches them that the will of t Omnipotent God must be done. T change should be from Calvinism Universalism, but if the subject not now brought before the minds the people, they may drift into so form of Arminianism; and it will found much more difficult to co vince them of the truth of Univ salism when they believe that Go will may be eternally thwarted, th when they entertain the sou opinion that God must be triump ant."

DOLCE FAR NIENTE.

In warmth of languid summer noon
I wander forth with rod and book,
And loiter down through shinous paths,
And seek my own familiar nook,
Where willow branches bend to kiss
The dimples of the brook.

The prudent boughs the sunlight hide,
But all unrend is volumed theme,
And rod and reel are all forgot,
Though calmly sleeps the peopled stream,
Or, stirred by trembling breezes, wakes,
And babbles of its dream.

For quivering aspen's leafy tongues
Are fraught with legends, as of yore,
That bend with beat of mimic waves
That murmur on the sedgy shore;
And, dreaming in the moted air,
I listen to their lore;

Or laugh to hear the fickle wind
Prate changeless love to perfumed lips
Of star-eyed flowers, whose gentle life
Too swiftly from their petals slips—
The while the jealous bee bemoans
The fragrance that it sips.

The cricket shrills amid the sedge;
I hear the dry-voiced locust call;
The agile squirrel lightly leaps
Along the crumbling orchard wall,
Where breaks the sunlight into smiles,
And flecks of shadow fall.

Thus, while thus the slumbrous hours,
Sandaled with idle dreams, go by,
The emerald of enameled fields,
The amber of the ripening rye,
The white of tranced summer clouds,
The blue of summer sky,

The flaming oriole's scarlet robe,
The crimson of the robin's breast,
The pointed bluebird's violet hue,
The startled quail in russet dressed,
The dusky arch of swallow's wing,
The blackbird's ebon crest;

And drink the balm that nature pours,
The peace her bounteous hands bestow,
Till sunset shadows tinge the turf,
And sunset sky is all aglow,
And noiselessly the brook begins
Its retrograding flow.

PREPARATION FOR PREACHING.

FROM BISHOP PAINE'S LIFE OF M'KENDREE.

The plan of selecting a text as soon as possible, and always after prayer and proper reflection upon the character and condition of the audience, is certainly judicious; nor should it be changed, after it has been maturely considered, for a mere whim; yet every preacher, except perhaps those who read their sermons or deliver them from memory, (and it is to be hoped their number among us is small,) will occasionally find himself afloat, (boatman's phrase,) and have to fasten to another text. Sometimes the subject is found inappropriate to the audience, but more frequently, as in the case of Mr. McKendree, it becomes tame to the feelings, or partially beclouded. Then another theme presents itself with more vividness to the mind, and the change is effected. But let the young preacher beware lest he fall into Charybdis in avoiding Scylla; for it does not follow, because one thought associated with the new text may strike his fancy, or because it may seem to be a more impressive theme, that he will be more likely to discuss it profitably. Too many choose their texts as silly men do their wives; for subjects have their drapery as well as persons. The first business of the preacher is to give the meaning of God's word. He should therefore seek to find out the import of his text, and then determine whether the lessons he can fairly deduce from it are likely to be appropriate and useful to his audience. In most cases the extemporaneous preacher who has studied and matured his subject, without having memorized it, has a decided advantage.

Let us not, however, be misunderstood on this subject. We hold that every preacher should cultivate his memory and chasten his style; and as nothing contributes to the latter more than the use of the pen, of course he should write sermons. Neither would we object to his memorizing one of his own composing occasionally, or to his reading it on an extraordinary occasion. But such cases should be exceptions—the general rule being "to study the subject thoroughly, and then depend upon his resources for language to express his ideas." In this way he will form the habit of thinking while extemporizing, and at the same time all the mental faculties which oratory requires, having been cultivated by previous study, will be improved and adapted to the occasion. The pompous, the elaborate and the rustic styles of speaking are unfit for the pulpit. The first aims to be impressive—avoids short words as a prudent man does contagion—affects the sublime, but is simply ridiculous, and seeks to carry the citadel by high-sounding nonsense. He attempts to do a large business on a small capital. Words, gestures and voice are his merchandise, while his stock of ideas is very deficient; or if perchance he should be heard to utter some scraps of blank verse, a stanza of sonorous rhyme, or a sentence or two a little less magniloquent than his usual inflated style, it may be taken for granted that he is disingenuously appropriating the product of another's mind to his own benefit—a species of petit larceny not unfrequent with such speakers, and for which they deserve to be impaled by public contempt. The second is too learned and philosophic, too stiff and artistic. This is our amateur preacher. His terms are refined and unusual. He employs, like some young doctors, scientific and technical words, which common people do not understand. He copies "Plato and Epictetus," not St. Paul nor St. Paul's great Master. Such a preacher may be styled a "beautiful speaker," "learned" and "elegant," and some may be the more impressed with his greatness because they cannot understand him, and therefore suppose he must be a very deep man; but his efficiency is about equal to a beautifully-painted and neatly-fashioned wooden gun. "Verily he has his reward" in the admiration of the fashionable and silly, who applaud him as they do their favorite actor at the theater, though far less warmly, and are benefited about as much by the performances of the one as the other, with this marked difference as to immediate results, that the one puts them to laughing and crying on Saturday night, while the other simply puts them to sleep on Sabbath. The third uses puns, wit, anecdotes—confines himself to no rules of rhetoric, logic or grammar—glories in thinking for himself, and has a contempt for the pretensions of the first and the prudery of the second class.

The proper style for the pulpit, and indeed for every kind of public speaking, is such as rises spontaneously from the subject; and it is indispensable that the subject should be clearly conceived and deeply impressed upon the heart. Then, in one of a cultivated mind, emotion will certainly suggest appropriate language. Without passion there is no true eloquence; and passion prompts to natural and simple forms of expression. Sublimity must exist in the ideas, or no language can produce them. The eloquence of our Savior, and of the writers of the sacred volume, gives the noblest specimens. The most sublime and important truths ever conceived are here uttered in the most simple words. And if, at any time, glowing imagery is employed, it results from the fervid condition of the mind under the contemplation of glorious and awful truths which struggle for utterance. Nor is this vehemence of mind incompatible with a certain degree of calmness and self-possession so necessary to instruct and guide an audience. Preaching the gospel is the highest office in which the human faculties can be employed. It is a solemn and holy work. "Woe" to him who trifles with it, as well as to him who "preaches not the gospel of Christ."

The above reflections were suggested in connection with the history of Mr. McKendree's life. He seems to have had constantly before his mind the apostolic admonition: "Study to show thyself approved unto God—a workman that needeth not to be ashamed—rightly dividing the word of truth." We have seen in what way he studied the Bible, how diligent he was in all the duties of a preacher and pastor, and also how he fasted, watched, prayed and struggled in the pursuit of personal holiness; and we confess that we have drawn more largely from his diary, that his successors in the ministry may, for all time to come, have before them his example to incite them to zeal and diligence. His style of preaching was remarkable for clearness and persuasiveness. Few preachers studied the shades of difference in words as he did, and his language was transparent; the idea was distinctly seen, while the words employed in exhibiting it served only as a medium of intellectual vision. He was always in earnest. His soul was pervaded with a sense of God, and his heart yearned for the conversion of his fellowmen. He felt "called of God" to this work, and nothing ever diverted his mind, his heart or his physical energies from it. It was the one great end of his life; and that life, so admirable for its beautiful consistency and moral sublimity of purpose, so pure and useful, so full of labor and moral heroism, was the product of "faith unfeigned," and that faith was of "the operation of God through the Spirit."

What a commentary does such a life afford on the truth and excellency of the Christian religion!

DEATHS FROM INTEMPERANCE.—The statistics of the General Life Insurance Company of London, it is announced, prove that of one hundred thousand intemperate persons, from fifteen to seventy years of age, compared with one hundred thousand persons of regular habits, thirty-two of the former class die as frequently as ten of the latter class. Out of one hundred thousand of each class, sixteen thousand nine hundred and seven of intemperate, it is said, will be dead before the age of fifty, and only four thousand two hundred and sixty-six of the temperate. The proportion of the deaths of intemperate to temperate persons, it is calculated, is, therefore, thirty-two to ten.

He who will pass to the promised land must neither stand upon length of way nor difficulty. Every way has its inconveniences; the nearest has more danger, the farthest has more pain; either, or both, must be overcome, if ever we will enter the rest of God.

THE FAILING OF SIGHT.

The failing of sight is not an insulated phenomenon. The other senses partake of the same change. The same blur pervades them all, and spectacles are as much needed by the other senses as by the sense of sight. At forty-five years of age, or thereabout, people observe that they cannot read, or do any fine or delicate piece of work, as well as formerly. They may also observe that they cannot learn a piece of music, or sing and play a new tune, as well as formerly. The senses of touch and hearing have both failed in as great a degree as the sense of sight. If it were the sight only that had failed, a person could as well learn to sing or to play a new tune in music at forty-five years of age as at the age of twelve or sixteen. The pleasure of sound and of touch are both diminished in a degree very perceptible, though not so fully realized as the change in the sense of seeing. Old people choose the most rapid and stimulating articles of food, as well as of drink. Snuffs and pungent odors are favorite pleasures in old age.

Some have attributed the failing of sight to a mere change in the shape of the eye; but this would only change the point of distinct vision, as in any other lens. We should only have to hold an object at a little farther distance than usual, in order to see as well as ever; but the fact is, we cannot see so well in the same degree of light at any distance as in youth. There is an organic change in the whole substance of the eye. Its transparency and sensibility are both diminished.

All the motions of the body and of the mind are slower at forty-five years of age than at twenty. It is much more difficult to run, or leap, or dance, than at an earlier period of life. The pulse is slower, and the train of ideas is also slower. It takes a longer time not only to see, but to hear, to feel, to taste, to smell and to think. Both the internal and external sensations are slower, and excited with more difficulty. The secretions are also more infrequent. About this time the hair, in both sexes, begins to become gray. These changes are commonly regarded as insulated phenomena, as if a numberless variety of causes were at work in the system to produce them. I think they are all attributable to the same cause, viz., to a diminution in the momentum of the arterial blood. The motion of the blood I take to be an ultimate fact, beyond which our inquiries cannot go. The action of the heart expresses the force of the arterial blood. At that time of life when the sight begins to fail, the arterial blood is not sent into the extremities of the arteries with the same force as in youth. All action of the nervous system, as well as of every other structure, depends upon the frequency of a fresh supply of blood. The arterial blood is the sap of the system, and performs the same office in the human system as the sap does in the tree or vegetable. If the arterial blood does not visit the extreme vessels with its accustomed celerity of motion, the same result must follow under all circumstances, viz., a diminution of activity in the part.

The human system is supposed to have reached its greatest perfection at the age of thirty-five, though in many individuals, probably, at a much earlier period. The heart probably attains to its maximum of force, and the blood circulates with its greatest momentum, about this period.

It is an old saying that gray hairs are a sign of wisdom. If the train of our ideas becomes slower and therefore more distinct, and capable of being more accurately examined, by the same cause which produces gray hairs, there may be a good foundation for the old proverb. To make the proverb, however, scientifically true, its meaning must be restricted to the different periods of the same person's life. In some people the same quickness of sensation and flow of ideas continue into old age, but I believe such people are never remarkable for wisdom. The hurry of their ideas and sensations prevents a proper comparison and selection of them, and the judgment never improves. If the same rapidity in the succession of our sensation and ideas, which exists in youth, should be continued into old age, I imagine the world would never become remarkable for its wisdom; for wisdom evidently depends not less upon a moderation in the succession of our ideas than upon the amount of ideas already acquired.

THOROUGH DOWN.—The fate of religion is easily understood from the parallel fate of a single sermon. Scarcely has its last tone vibrated on the ear when a fresh impression is given by the music which dismisses the congregation. That is succeeded by another impression as your friend puts his arm in yours and talks of some other matter, irrelevant, obliterating any slight seriousness which the sermon produced. Another and another and another, and the word is trodden down.—Robertson.

EXCEEDING ABUNDANTLY.

Rev. Dr. Merle D'Aubigne tells how the riches of divine grace reached his heart:

"We were studying the Epistle to the Ephesians, and had got to the end of the third chapter. When we read the last two verses, 'Now unto him who is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, unto him be glory,' etc., this expression fell upon my soul like a revelation from God. 'He can do by his power,' I said to myself, 'above all we ask, above all even that we think—nay, exceeding abundantly above all!' A full trust in Christ for the work to be done within my poor heart now filled my soul. We all three knelt down; and although I had never fully confided my inward struggles to my friends, the prayer of Rieu was filled with such admirable faith as he would have uttered had he known all my wants. When I arose in that inn-room at Kiel I felt as if my 'wings were renewed as the wings of eagles.' From that time forward I comprehended that my own efforts were of no avail; that Christ is able to do all by his 'power that worketh in us;' and the habitual attitude of my soul was to lie at the foot of the cross, crying to him: 'Here am I, bound hand and foot, unable to move, unable to do the least thing to get away from the enemy who oppresses me. Do all thyself. I know that thou wilt do it. Then wilt even do exceeding abundantly above all that I ask.'

"I was not disappointed; all my doubts were removed, my anguish quelled, and the Lord extended to me 'peace as a river.' Then I could comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge. Then was I able to say: 'Return unto thy rest, O my soul! for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee.'"

SOMETHING ABOUT YOURSELF.—Supposing your age to be fifteen or thereabout, we can figure you up to a dot. You have 160 bones and 500 muscles; your heart is five inches in length and three inches in diameter; it beats 70 times per minute, 4,200 per hour, 100,800 per day, and 36,772,200 per year. At each beat a little over two ounces of blood is thrown out of it; and each day it throws out and discharges about seven tons of that wonderful fluid. Your lungs will contain about a gallon of air, and you inhale 24,000 gallons per day. The aggregate surface of the air cells of your lungs, supposing them to be spread out, exceeds 20,000 square inches. The weight of your brain is three pounds; when you are a man it will be eight ounces more. Your nerves exceed 10,000,000 in number. Your skin is composed of three layers, and varies from one-fourth to one-eighth of an inch in thickness. The area of your skin is about 1,700 square inches, and you are subject to an atmospheric pressure of fifteen pounds to the square inch. Each square inch of your skin contains 3,500 sweating tubes, or perspiratory pores, each of which may be likened to a little drain tile one-fourth of an inch long, making an aggregate length of the entire surface of your body of 201,165 feet, or a little ditch for the drainage of the body almost forty miles long.

A SYRIAN CORRESPONDENT of the Christian says: "Several interesting cases of Mohammedans turning to Christ have occurred lately. Rev. Mr. Fraser reports several in Baghdad, and there have been others in Beirut, etc., for all of whom, with one who has been with us here for the past eight months, I would entreat the special prayers of God's people. Mohammedans turning to Christ have to meet with peculiar difficulties, arising from the social and family customs current among their co-religionists, and in which they have been brought up, as well as the severe persecutions sure to be instigated against them by the government or private individuals. Let special prayer be made for one in Beirut who is at the present moment an object of persecution. I visited his house three days ago, and heard of policemen being sent, time after time, to summon him before the Mohammedan Council, where he has had the grace to confess Christ, declaring that neither their threatenings nor flatteries could turn him away from his faith in him who died for him, and has become his 'all;' and when offered two thousand piasters to turn back, said: 'I have sufficient for the wants of myself and my family, and don't need your money; and, besides, do you really think that the blood of Christ can be sold for piasters?'"

God's Bible is opened to the heart by the Spirit; and Christ is the key that fits every ward, both in the book and in the heart.

IF YOUR MEMORY is but short, be sure you bespeak a good portion of it for God's word.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

EPISCOPAL.—Bishop Gregg's report to the Diocesan Convention of Texas shows two hundred and forty confirmations. The number of communicants is over two thousand.

GREAT SUCCESS.—The English Church Missionary Society established a mission along the Niger in 1865, and now they number in the mission 516 congregations, 92 communicants, and 133 children attending the day schools.

THE work of reform goes steadily on in Rome, accompanied, as all such reactions are, by some excesses, but, considering the past, by very few. The latest movement is the inauguration of the Court of Assizes, and the establishment of trial by jury, in the city which has done so much for the jurisprudence of the world, and suffered so much for the want of it.

THE Roman Catholics of Ireland now scarcely exceed four millions, while the Episcopalians and the Presbyterians reckon a million and a quarter of adherents. Other denominations are quite insignificant. Thus there are but forty-one thousand Methodists of all sorts, and only about four thousand five hundred Independents, with a like number of Baptists, in all Ireland.'

IN BAVARIA there is no indication of a readiness on the part of the Catholic Church to submit to the claims of the Italian faction. At the recent celebration of Corpus Christi the king and court refused to be present at the customary procession, and the government steadily refuses to allow the bishops to interfere with those churches whose pastors decline to assent to the dogma of papal infallibility.

A sad and singular fate is reported to have overtaken the followers of Zoroaster in Persia. An awful famine has visited that country, destroying thousands upon thousands of people. It is stated that the stout Moguls do not hesitate to eat the helpless Jews and Zoroastrians, and it is feared that in this way, and by the famine, the fire-worshipers will be exterminated. So writes a correspondent of the Independent.

"MONS. DUPANLOUP having declined the office of Archbishop of Paris, it has been tendered to and accepted by the Archbishop of Tours. The reason of Mons. Dupanloup's declination is not stated, but it is believed to be because he is not in accord with the Pope on the question of infallibility." The Archbishop of Tours, on the contrary, is said to be an extreme Ultramontane and an earnest advocate of the temporal power of the Pope.

RELIGIOUS PROGRESS IN MEXICO.—The prominent Roman Catholic curate in Mexico, Manuel Agnas, has recently renounced his allegiance to Rome and become a proselyte to Protestantism, which is spreading widely since the promulgation of the doctrine of infallibility. Agnas has become now pastor of the Protestant church at San Jose de Gracia, to the great scandal of the Catholic clergy, of which he was considered a pillar, on account of his piety and erudition.

THE acquisition of Alsace by Germany occasions a nominal loss to Protestantism in France. The Protestants of that province number 250,000 people, 340 pastors, 36 consistories, and one faculty of theology—that of Strasbourg. These churches have, however, petitioned the German authorities not to interfere with them; and the petition will probably be granted, leaving the Protestants of Alsace to work in connection with their friends in France.

ANOTHER SIGNIFICANT ANTI-ROMISH DEMONSTRATION.—A cable telegram brings the announcement that Dr. Dollinger, notwithstanding his excommunication by the Pope, was recently elected rector of the University of Munich. Fifty-four professors out of sixty voted for him. Dr. Dollinger has hitherto occupied the professorship of canon law, and the honor now conferred upon him is of the greatest significance, and shows that he has risen in popularity.

ITALY.—The Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society has a most prosperous mission in Italy. It supports there 17 ministers and evangelists, 15 principal stations, 10 schools, 450 scholars, and 686 communicants. They have entered Rome, and are doing a glorious work there. The Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church will soon have a mission in Rome. A missionary is on his way, and we are looking for glorious things achieved for Christ in the Eternal City. Let the church pray for the success of the gospel in Rome.

WE LEARN from the Central Baptist, says the Methodist, that the Baptist missionary work among the Chorokees was commenced fifty years ago, by the Rev. Eben Jones, under the direction of their Foreign Missionary Society. Mr. Jones' son, the Rev. John B. Jones, is now serving as missionary and United States agent. Over one thousand of the tribe now stand connected with one or another of the eight Baptist churches constituted among them, and a much larger number have, since the commencement of the missionary work, died in the faith.

HARVARD UNIVERSITY.—A canvass has recently been made at Harvard University to ascertain the denominational leanings of the students. The figures, as given in the Boston Transcript, are as follows: Unitarian Congregationalists, 233; Episcopalians, 150; Trinitarian Congregationalists and Presbyterians, 111; Baptists, 35; Methodists, 18; Universalists, 12; New Jerusalem, 10; Roman Catholics, 7; other denominations and unascertained, 31—total, 608. Nearly two-thirds of the student members of the University, therefore, have a Trinitarian bias.

AMONG TURKISH CHRISTIANS.—The latest reform introduced by the Sultan of Turkey is the enrollment of his Christian subjects, as well as the Mohammedans, for military services. Hitherto his armies have been entirely composed of Mohammedans, the Christians being exempted by the annual payment of about $2,500,000. The burden of military duty has fallen severely upon the Mohammedans, who only number about 10,000,000 of the 30,000,000 subjects of the Sultan. The new policy is a hazardous one, and may be productive of important changes in the history of that empire.

FOOCHOW, CHINA.—Here is a paragraph from Dr. Maclay: "The present temper and attitude of the Chinese government with reference to Christian missions seem to indicate that we are approaching troublous times. I still hope, however, that God will direct in the affairs of this nation so that the interest of his kingdom may be promoted, while he maketh the wrath of man to praise him. Meanwhile our work in the Foochow mission goes forward encouragingly, and the Lord is placing before us open doors for the proclamation of the gospel. I trust that 'prayer is made without ceasing of the church unto God' for the people of these Eastern lands."

THE Emancipatore Catholico is the organ of the party calling themselves Proto-Catholics, in opposition to the Neo-Catholics or Infallibilists. This party announces the following programme: 1. Acceptance of the dogmatic doctrines contained in the four creeds; 2. Acceptance de jure divino of the hierarchical constitution—bishops, priests and deacons; 3. Denial of all jurisdiction in the Bishop of Rome, save that of Primate of Italy; 4. Auricular confession is not obligatory, but free; 5. The inforced celibacy of the priests is abolished; 6. Election to all the degrees of the hierarchy depends on the free suffrage of the clergy and people. This party represents the views of men like Hyacinthe, and it has a hopeful future.

RECESSION TO THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.—There is said to be a large recession to the Church of England of those who had gone over to popery. This is in consequence of the new dogma of infallibility, which is too strong meat for the neophytes. The returning perverts are now called "reverts." A remarkable scene was recently witnessed in a London church. The Rev. J. M. Capes, one of the Oxford men who went over to Rome in the disastrous '47,' reappeared as a preacher in the Anglican Church. And what is quite as remarkable as this fact is, that the pulpit he selected was that of the Rev. Stolford Brooke, a broad churchman, if he is to be classed at all. Mr. Gladstone was among those who assembled to welcome the "revert."

THE establishment of even a small measure of civil and religious liberty in Rome has also opened the way to the establishment of free schools. Mrs. Dr. Gould, formerly of New York, impressed with the want of facilities for educating the little girls of Rome, after fruitless attempts to find a suitable teacher for them, decided to open a school herself. With but fifty francs in her pocket, she began the enterprise March 20, and has now over forty poor children, varying from four to eleven years of age, who are instructed in Italian and English. Their ignorance of the simplest secular and religious truths was deplorable. For the next year she needs at least $1,500, and appeals hopefully to all interested in the civilization and Christianization of the destitute children of Rome. Funds may be sent to her, care of William E. Dodge, Jr., New York.

FROZEN TOGETHER.—During a season of great religious declension an aged deacon was asked whether the church to which he belonged were united. "Ah, yes," replied the good man with emotion, "we are all frozen together."

THERE is only one stimulant that never fails and yet never intoxicates—duty. Duty puts a blue sky over every man—up in his heart, maybe—into which the skylark, happiness, always goes singing.

DR. C. G. YOUNG.

According to a telegram from Honston, this gentleman was fatally injured by an accident on the Honston and Great Northern railroad, on the evening of the ninth instant, died at one o'clock A. M. of the tenth, and was huried from the Methodist church in Houston on the same day. We have as yet seen nothing further with reference to the sad ovent, but we suppose that the telegram has given the facts. Dr. Yonng was president of the railroad on which he lost his life, and a most valuable citizen. He was a local preacher, and a prominent and leading member of our chnrch. His character combined the highest qualities of energy and intellect with the greatest benevolence and purity. He was for many years ideutified with Methodism in Lonisiana, and nsually attended the sessions of our Annual Conference as a committeeman. We have not space to say moro at present, but we hope to havo an extended sketch of this good and eminent man in dne time. Dr. Young leaves a large and interesting family. May God sustain them in this great trial!

Rev. Thomas Samford.—The communication from Bro. Finley brings us this week the intelligence of the death of this aged servant of God. He was a man of great strength and power in his day, and his record, especially in Georgia, where the best of his ministry was spent, will not soon be obliterated. At the session of the Georgia Conference, held December, 1847, he was transferred to the Louisiana Conference, in which he sustained a superannuated relation the most of the time until his death. We hope that some competent hand will furnish a suitable biographical sketch of this great and good man.

Colonel Jack Therington died at his residence in Montgomery, Alabama, on Sunday, the sixth instant. From a letter written by his son to a friend in this city, we learn that his last hours were signally peaceful and triumphant. A kinder and nobler spirit was not to be found. The church had no purer character in it. In his death the church and the community have sustained a heavy bereavement. May the Comforter's presence be felt and realized in the stricken and sorrowing home.

Greensboro, Alabama.—The Southern University, located at this point, has a full and able faculty. Rev. A. S. Andrews, D.D., has been elected president, and enters immediately upon the great work to which he has been called. Attention is directed to the advertisement in another column. We shall recur to the subject next week. Meanwhile we assure our readers that the outlook for the Southern University is such as to encourage and cheer the hearts of its friends.

THE DEBT OF GRATITUDE.

It is a gracious and hopeful sign when the soul wakes up to this conviction of indebtedness to God. It is one of the most lamentable facts connected with the dead soul that no adequate sense of the divine benefits is felt. Temporal and spiritual showers fall upon a soil that absorbs without being fertilized. There is no productive response—no verdure answers to the copious and refreshing gifts of heaven. The barren heath and the sandy desert are not more destitute of herbage than is the unconverted soul of gratitude and its fruits. Nor are those who have been spiritually enlightened always adequately grateful to the Giver of all. Along with the idea of the impossibility of creature merit lurks the half-concealed notion that grace demands no return, and but a faint acknowledgment, while the impossibility of payment forestalls the conviction of obligation. They are content to receive and owe all as a matter of freest grace, which does not impoverish the giver, and which admits of nothing more than a common-place confession of the creature's poverty and of the Maker's bounty.

What should be the expression of thankfulness is sometimes wrung from unwilling hands by other force than that of the affections. It is the task of duty, in which the friction of selfishness is overcome with difficulty by considerations of spiritual loss or gain, and is performed under the pressure of a conscience more alive to the terrors of the Lord than to the sweet and melting influences of love. The thing is not done heartily as unto the Lord, but reluctantly as the inexorable condition of life. What might pass for the offspring of better motives is often the mere overflowing of excited benevolent emotions, or the product of social influences, which it is neither convenient nor practicable to withstand. We would lay no restraint upon generous sympathies, nor would we abate any force which, in the limits of honesty, helps forward the cause of truth, and tends to lessen the amount of suffering in the world. But things blessed in themselves, and wholesome for the furtherance of the gospel, may not always spring from truly grateful and loving hearts.

When a man becomes so impressed with God's goodness to him that he knows not how he can do enough for his benefactor, and when he feels that the world is too small a place, and time too short for the exhibition of his thankfulness, then he begins to work from a living principle. He will feel a godly embarrassment for ways and means wherewith to express the fullness of his heart. The psalmist's question marked this wonderful awakening when he exclaimed: "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits?" Such a question is an epoch in the religious history, when the sinner sees his past ingratitude, or when the believer realizes the stupor which has so long closed his eyes to the sublimest principles of Christian experience. Like Abraham's sacrifice, this waking up may come long after the conversion of the soul, and it may have the power of a second regeneration. Under its influence God's amazing goodness and his countless mercies will tower and brighten before him until lost in the utter immensity of the glorious vision. The debt of gratitude will be felt as something overwhelming, the past sloth and negligence will seem like an age of darkness and death, and the future will be explored for opportunities to repair the waste of a life well-nigh spent in vain. Almost nothing has been rendered—some praise, some sacrifice, some activity in the vineyard, but nothing in comparison with the mercies so munificently sent, so stupidly accepted.

Where this debt is truly felt, after all has been laid at Jesus' feet, there will remain the painful consciousness that the offering is mean and unworthy, and there will be the deepest regret that there is no more to give. The grateful heart will never boast of sacrifice, will never exact commendation, but it will count all toil and denial in the cause of Christ as a privilege. No man who begins to apprehend the price paid for his redemption will count his largest gifts or his severest labors as worth the mentioning. He will forget that he has done anything when he thinks of the Savior's travail of soul for him. After he has divided his substance with the poor, and laid soul and body and estate upon the altar, he will "count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ." Paul aimed to bring believers up to the highest mark of a spiritual life when he besought them, by the mercies of God, to present their bodies a living sacrifice. Their devotion was to be incited, and gauged by the divine tenderness and love. A grateful sense of infinite compassion was to arouse in them this conception of a deeper consecration, and the need of a purer and more ardent self-dedication. Without this grateful love there can be no inward spiritual life. There may be a morbidly sensitive conscience, and a scrupulous and exact religious service, but there can be no realization of the comfort and blessedness of the Spirit of adoption.

Where this motive operates the expression of gratitude will be to the uttermost of our capacity. Shame would confound, self-respect would be lost if, with our gaze fixed upon the crucified Savior, we were to offer a partial service. Let a man set before himself the pity of God, the agony of the dying Christ, and let him keep back a part of the price if he can. Let him habitually think of God as the Father of lights, whose rays are streams of mercy to his soul, and whose beams have traveled and struggled through the dark atmosphere of ignorance and guilt, to cheer and comfort his sinful heart, and he will feel that anything short of a living sacrifice would be an insult and a mockery. Temporal benefits should inspire gratitude; but the supreme gift of salvation overshadows all. The pardon of sin is felt to be a higher ground of love than all earthly gifts, and the grace of God inspires a warmer throb of grateful affection than any amount of worldly prosperity. Where much is forgiven there will be much love; where the unspeakable gift of Christ is truly estimated there need be no further appeal. Life, health, sunshine and other goods of the present world will be fully appreciated as from above, where the greater boon of redemption has found its way into the heart; but the spiritual includes and exhausts the ground and measure of obligation.

The unspeakable gift, the tender mercies of God, the price with which we are bought, are the appeals addressed to us to move our gratitude. God's benefits, as specially comprehending his mercy to sinners, call for a return. It is the study and desire of the grateful heart to make it in all possible ways. The expression may take the form of religious activity, of large giving for specific benevolent purposes, of devotion to some particular field of labor in the gospel kingdom; but it is at the same time complete and symmetrical as embracing the whole heart and life. The happiness of the thankful heart will be largely in the consciousness of rendering to God what is possible for his mercies, while there will be habitual and searching self-examination, and the effort to lay something more of time, money, and even suffering at the Savior's feet. The debt of gratitude resting upon us is infinite, but it is acceptably met when we have done what we could. The sinner's tears, the widow's mite, the mind of the gifted, the wealth of the rich, the personal activity of all, the vocal and heartfelt praise, the spiritual worship, the pure heart, are what God requires and accepts.

Verona Female College, located at Verona, Mississippi, is an institution of high character, and has for its president one of the worthiest ministers in our Southern Church. The pupils will receive solid, thorough instruction, and be placed under the best moral and religious influences. For particular information see advertisement, and address the president, Rev. Dr. Wier, Verona, Mississippi.

OUTWARD TO THE PACIFIC.

BY BISHOP KEENER.

Kansas City, August 6, 1871.

From the gulf breezes of Ocean Springs to Kansas City, three hundred miles west of St. Louis, one passes in two days. Aladdin, at his best, could not have accomplished the space in less time. Others may, but I never shall cease to wonder at the locomotive; to stop whenever it passes—respectfully to the man that, with but one hand, controls its maddened force, admiringly for the machine itself. Only think of this trip in August, during low water, on a steamboat, before the time of the steam capstan! Now, without a lunch, sitting on a silver-mounted car, with ample room in the day-time and stretching room at night, distance is annihilated, and man becomes, by mere motion, a citizen of the world.

Reading on a car compensates one poorly; the eye is seriously strained, and the greater book, through which the train moves, is unread. I noticed that all through lower Mississippi the corn crop looks badly. It appears to have been neglected. While the cotton is clean the corn is exceedingly foul. This continues for over two hundred miles; and even in that fine region, west of Columbus and Aberdeen, it appears as if the planter has but one idea—cotton. The folly of raising cotton to exchange for corn may enrich the merchant, but surely no one else. A few fields of corn showed good cultivation, and promised a fair return.

The Mississippi river is passed, via Columbus and the Iron Mountain railroad, by running the cars upon a steam ferry, and presently you are over without knowing it. Thence thundering along by immense mines of iron, granite, lime and sandstone, the train rushes into St. Louis. Here one feels to be at the new starting point of the nineteenth century, and at the heart and center of North America. Since last here, only a month or two, large buildings have gone up in the business parts of the city, which will compare well with the finest of New York or London.

Before leaving New Orleans I took the round of the book stores in search of a map of California and Oregon; but neither map nor guide could be had which might at least prepare me geographically for the great West. It indicated that Southern minds were not much turned that way. Additional evidence of this was found in the fact that of three certain and three probable transfers to the Pacific coast, who were to accompany me out, but one remains, and he is to come on by and by. Various reasons, causes and providences are assigned; no doubt all true and strong enough for this result, but it indicates that the tide does not set from the South to the Pacific. I might, therefore, have been seen moving, satchel in hand, quite alone toward the depot of the Missouri Pacific.

The country from St. Louis west, for hundreds of miles, is alternately prairie and woodland. The soil is dark and rich; the growth, oak and black walnut. There can be no finer farming region on the continent, and already it abounds in corn fields, vineyards, orchards, and in wheat and barley stubble. Many of the farm houses are of brick, and indicate much cold weather—more, probably, than there is. Among the follies extant is that of building a house after a picture in a book, especially as nearly all books are made at the North, where houses are planned to suit its inhospitable climate. With less winter here there should be a marked difference in the style of the farm house of Missouri and that of Massachusetts. Large porches would add vastly to the comfort, and therefore to the beauty of the country house of this latitude. At every stopping place quantities of pears, peaches and grapes were offered for sale, mostly by little girls of from eight to twelve years of age. These children looked as if they might have been imported from the alleys of the Eastern cities. They were about the car houses and depots pretty much as the news and fruit boys are in New Orleans. At the supper house there was further indication that the train had rattled into a new zone. The tables were admirably furnished with the best of meat, bread, butter, fish, fruits and vegetables; and sprucely dressed young women waited on the guests. Not a negro was to be seen—not even a knife-cleaner. The sublime vision of everybody his own servant, and everybody white, presented itself. We were now half way between St. Louis and "bleeding Kansas"—just about where the war was a good while before the war began. Here the great struggle whether white young women or negroes should wait upon the table first started. As the supper was one of the best, the question presented itself very forcibly whether on the whole it was better to have colored legislators and white servants. Might not these young women fill a higher place in society with credit? Was not that a wise and merciful condition of affairs which released them from this servitude? The colored man at heart rejoices to serve, because he is conscious of knowing how; and though he cannot see what is straight and what is clean as exactly as a white man, yet he greatly surpasses him in the pleasant ease of his serving.

Kansas City, five years ago, was a village; now it has forty thousand inhabitants. The growth seems to be substantial, and not an effervescence of speculation. At several different points the city has begun, and is now struggling to determine its true center. It has a railway of three hundred miles on the east, one of three hundred on the north, one of one hundred on the south, and the great Union Pacific on the west, tributary to its growth. Besides a boundless stretch, on all sides, of prairie lands, which produce from sixty to one hundred bushels of corn to the acre, it is situated on the Missouri river, at a point the furthest out in the direction of California. As might be supposed, the population is a mixed multitude gathered from all points of the Union, who scarcely have time to become acquainted with each other, until confused afresh by new crowds of strange comers. Our church here is getting ready to build a fine stone structure, creditable to the enterprise and growth of the city. At present we worship in a small brick house. On yesterday the congregation was all that could be desired in quality, and in quantity too, but for the narrow limits of the building.

At night I preached at a town—Westport—some five or six miles southwest of this, in a first-rate brick country church. It is about two miles from the Shawnee mission school, formerly under the Rev. Thomas Johnson. It was there that Brother and Sister Kinnear first met each other. The superintendent used to say that he despaired of keeping a female teacher, as they married about as soon as they arrived. At last he procured one with but one arm; but, to his surprise, she too married after one year's teaching. The lands connected with this mission might have been so managed as to have alone furnished a foundation for a university suited to our Northwest Conferences; but alas! there looks to have been a fatality about all that appertains to the temporal well-being of our educational enterprises. Providence marked it out as the very spot for the present and the future of a great institution of learning, could we have so seen it. Properties acquired for the church ought not to be at the disposal of the temporary policy of a board of trustees. This Shawnee school did a good work in its day, but the whoop of the red man has passed away before the scream of the locomotive.

I leave for Omaha to-night.

Information is wanted of Mr. Seymour Van Deusen, a young gentleman who left his friends in New York nearly two years ago. The father of Mr. Van Deusen, a venerable minister of the gospel, will be thankful for any information concerning him. Address Rev. S. Van Dousen, White Plains, New York, or this office.

There may b new edition out of the Hand Bo or there will be soon, at all even for Strasbourg belongs to Germ now, until another time and a later edition of the Hand Bo You have heard, perhaps, of wonderful astronomical clock Strasbourg, in the cathedral. Go fortune made the hour of twel noon, one of my three hours in city—the interesting hour with clock. will the performance be repeated; but before twenty-four hours had elapsed from that noon of mine at Strasbourg I had passed through Basle, through Zurich, and was in sight of the snow-clad Alps.

I felt before the Alps as I did in presence of the sea—dwarfed, helpless. The Alps, you know, are higher than the Alleghanies. I could see that it is so, which shows, from the usual inaccuracy of measurement by sight, that the difference is great and appreciable. Great, everlasting hills as they are, how the Almighty shivered things when he caused those immense ridges to bristle on creation's broad back! Huge mastodons of rock they are, with awful jaws yawning wide, and threatening to devour rash intruders into their lair. It was through the Splugen pass, and along the Via Mala, or dangerous road, that I made the crossing. The serpentine, difficult road fears neither heights nor precipices, but, well defended on the threatening side, invites the four-horse coach to a speed that is bewildering, on the very brink of ravines whose depths are dark at noonday. It took the day, from ten A. M. to dusk's latest moment, to make the summit, and a safe place on the descent, where, after innumerable short turns by acute angles on a precipitous declivity, the coach finally draws up at the Italian enstomhouse, on a platform approaching some comparison with the level of the sea, and you draw a long breath and thank God that horse and harness and running gear failed not, in pin or buckle or step, as your weight was helplessly trusted, almost for life and death, to their strength and soundness. On certain summits of the Alps the German and Italian governments have planted military stations, for the purpose of observing an enemy's movements at a distance. But in my transit of the Alps I saw summits and peaks surely inaccessible to human foot, except, perhaps, of some crazy adventurer; and what are they? thought I. They are the Almighty's watch-towers, shall I say? At any rate it is true:

"Thine all-surrounding sight surveys
My rising and my rest,
My public walks, my private ways,
The secrets of my breast."

The night closed in upon me, hushed anew into awe before the great God; and the morning broke upon me afloat upon the bosom of Lake Como, whose placid waters, so gentle after the wild mountain whirl of the preceding day, seemed to murmur:

"And so he giveth his beloved sleep."

Lake Como is a failure. How it ever gained such a reputation for extraordinary beauty is a marvel to me. I saw it under the most favorable circumstances, day breaking and the sun rising upon it. Everybody said before I left America: "You must see Lake Como." I would not give a fig to see it again. Therefore, accordingly, I dismiss the subject.

But the cathedral at Milan is not a failure. It is the most wonderful piece of architecture and masonry I have ever seen. I will describe it. No; I cannot draw a horse, and I should look well to attempt the description of an edifice which its architect was thirty-six years in designing. I will bring you, in God's providence, a splendid picture of it.

Venice is almost a failure. I smiled inwardly as I wrote at the first of this:

"Beautiful Venice, the bride of the sea."

It is the bride of the Adriatic, the marriage ceremony having been performed once with great pomp and circumstance, and its gondolas are a curiosity; but it is not such a beauty at last. I have, however, scon its redeeming feature to-day—Titinn's great painting, the Assumption of the Virgin.

I must close for the mail, and will add that I am making all my calculations to be with you again, God willing, by the first Sunday in October. W. V. TUDOR.

BE not stingy of kind words and pleasing acts, for such are fragrant gifts, whose perfume will gladden the heart and sweeten the life of all who hear or receive them.

A BOSTON PAPER, writing of a recent address delivered there, says: "The discourse was an hour in length, and was listened to with ability."

CENTENARY COLLEGE.—Rev. C. G. Andrews, the recently elected president of Centenary College, gave us a call this week. We were glad to learn from him that he has yielded to the wishes of his brethren, and will enter upon the duties of his position at once. Centenary is now fully officered, and has the promise of a bright and prosperous future. Let all Mississippi and Louisiana rally to the support of President Andrews and his co-laborers.

PERIODICALS.

THE August number of the Practical Planter, published at Memphis, Tennessee, has been received. It is an excellent agricultural journal.

THE catalogue of Randolph Macon College, for 1870–71, has been received; also the catalogue of Central College, Missouri, for 1870–71.

THE SOUTHERN FARMER, also published at Memphis, Tennessee, is a large and well-conducted periodical, devoted to the agricultural and domestic interests of the South. The August number has reached us.

AS OLD ROGER ASCHAM hath it, "to omitte studye some tyme of the daye, and some tyme of the yeare, maketh as much for the encrease of learninge as to let the land lye sometyme falloe, maketh for the better encrease of corne."

THE chief secret of comfort lies in not suffering trifles to vex one, and in prudently cultivating an undergrowth of small pleasures, since very few great ones are let on long leases.

TRIALS are of three-fold benefit to true religion. Hereby the truth of it is manifested; also its beauty and amiableness; and thus, too, it is purified and increased.

TO-MORROW may be eternity with you; therefore live as on the margin of eternity, as next door to heaven.

Obituaries.

MISS KATE ERSELY JONES departed this life July 8, 1871, aged eighteen years.

Miss Kate was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sterling Jones, who came to Caddo parish, about the commencement of the late war, from the southern portion of Georgia, and soon thereafter died, leaving her an orphan in a strange land. The parentless child, however, found a father and mother in Mr. Zachariah Howell and wife, of Greenwood, who took her, and did for her, in a very eminent degree, all that her own parents could have done. Notwithstanding she had never connected herself with the church formally, yet she seemed to love the church, and as often as opportunity offered she was seen in her place in the sanctuary.

She was unusually amiable, modest, unassuming, and the "law of kindness was in her heart." O how suddenly she left us! A rosy picture of health in the morning, and in the evening of the same day a pulseless corpse! Such, however, is the uncertainty of life. We interred her body in the family grave yard, comforted with the thought of seeing her lovely traits of character, that were so early nipped in their first unfoldings, glittering in immortal youth beyond the stars. A. W. WILLIAMS, Pastor.

Southern Christian Advocate please copy.

DR. O. L. CREWS was born November 7, 1837, in Lauderdale county, Mississippi, and died July 5, 1871, in Sumter county, Alabama. He was the son of Thomas R. and C. C. Crews. In 1859 he graduated in medicine at Philadelphia and immediately commenced the practice of his profession. In this he successfully engaged until the declaration of hostilities between the States. This event called him to the theater of war, where for four years, by sufferings and courage upon the field of action and in prisons, he evinced his patriotism and his devotion to the Confederate cause. The termination of hostilities gave another opportunity for the duties of his avocation, which he at once accepted. A short but useful career of professional life was soon ended by the uninterrupted advance of that disease which in less than eighteen months terminated his life.

He was a man of clear, quick perception, and decidedly above mediocre in his medical skill. His attachment for his friends, of whom he had many, was strong and decided; while his devotion to their interests was only surpassed by his faith in God. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and demonstrated his confidence in Christ, at the close of life, by such remarks and resignation as only a genuine love of God can inspire. He leaves a devoted wife and infant daughter, with a bereaved mother, and many affectionate relatives. M.

Died, on the first of May, 1871, at the residence of her son-in-law, Bro. James Cole, in the town of Greensburg, Louisiana, Mrs. ELIZABETH, wife of the late Rev. John Mathews, in her seventy-fourth year.

We have no means of knowing anything of her early life, only that the oldest people in the parish, both of the church and of the world, speak of her, from girlhood even to her death, as a consistent Christian. The writer was sent to that circuit twenty years ago, and found Brother and Sister Mathews' home the welcome home of the weary Itinerant, and from that time to the present, in passing, has visited it with pleasure.

Sister Mathews delighted to converse of experimental, personal conversion from sin. She loved the class room—the Eucharistic feast. She had for some time lost her sight, and she made her home with her only son. O how she prayed for his conversion—for he only, of all her children, was unconverted. O may a mother's prayer yet be answered, and her happy life and death be sanctified to his good. The writer, in passing, saw her on Monday before her death. She had come in, a few days before, to attend church and to visit her daughter. She said: "This will be my last visit to Greensburg. I am expecting my son to be here, and then I will go home to die." But being prevented by unforeseen circumstances—though only a few hours later in coming—she could not be moved. She bade her children and all about her to meet her in heaven. We have lost a sister and her children a loving mother. But our loss is her eternal gain. May we be also ready. J. NICHOLSON.

REBECCA DUKE was born December 10, 1876, in Alabama. She married Mr. Joseph Hickey August 19, 1858, with whom she lived until her death, which occurred at Holmes' Mill, De Soto parish, Louisiana, July 4, 1871.

In 1847 she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at a camp meeting near Salem, Russell county, Alabama, during the pastorate of Rev. Benj. Blount. For twenty-four years she has found that in the religion of Jesus there is a glorious reality. She was converted at home, and was evident y a home Christian. Though her lot in life was humble and often crowded with sufferings, yet she never compromised, but rightly adhered to her religious principles. The cross was her delight, and she rejoiced in bearing it. She was a kind friend, a trusting wife and a devoted mother. Her influence upon her children was such that they will "rise up and call her blessed." Her husband, himself a sinner, acknowledged that he felt the force of her pure life and character. "If she was not a Christian," said he, "I do not believe there is such a character on earth." It was her delight to go to the house of God, and to class and prayer meeting. Though often doubting and in temptation, she was oftener in the land of Beulah, with her "continuing city" almost in sight. Two Sabbaths before her death she said: "Bro. A., it cannot be long with me. I want you to meet me in heaven." The next news of her was: "She is gone!" Husband and children of this departed saint, her memory is your rich heritage. Her prayers and tears for you, though hushed forever, cannot be lost. May her death be "unto the Lord" for her church and family. We are reconciled in believing our loss to be her eternal gain.

R. H. ADAIR.

Died, of pulmonary consumption, on the tenth of July, 1871, at the residence of Mr. W. I Allen, in Choctaw county, Alabama, the Rev. NOAH P. MITCHELL, who was born in Franklin county, Alabama, May 8, 1838.

He embraced religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1857, and served as class-leader and Sabbath school superintendent about a year, during which time he was recommended and regularly licensed to preach the gospel. He joined the itinerant ministry at the close of the year 1858, and loented in the Mobile Conference held at Enterprise, Mississippi, in 1867.

His funeral was preached by the writer, at Cedar Creek church, Mississippi, on the twelfth of July, from the text: "He, being dead, yet speaketh." A large concourse of people had assembled. His body was interred with Masonic honors by the brethren of Delta Lodge, No. 189, of which he was a member.

Bro. Mitchell leaves a wife and a promising little boy about two years old, together with a large circle of friends, to mourn his death. But we mourn not as those who have no hope; for when we review his Christian life, and see the almost matchless outline of Christian virtue, and the humble, patient and meek manner in which he endured his last lingering illness, together with the bright and unmistakable evidences which he gave us, from time to time, of his divine acceptance with God, we are assured that his spirit is at rest in heaven. By his death the ministry has lost one of her most efficient soldiers, the church one of her devoted members, the Masonic fraternity one of its bright jewels, and his family a devoted husband and a kind and affectionate father.

"Servant of God, well done!
Rest from thy loved employ;
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy."

BAD PAPER.

The mills from which we have received our paper have been compelled to suspend in consequence of the failure of their supply of water, and an order sent, several weeks since, to another company, has been delayed, (the paper not being on hand to fill it,) and reached us too late for this issue; in consequence of which we have been forced to use an article for which we feel compelled to apologize—being the best and all that we could get, and for which we have had to pay higher rates than for the article which we promise you next issue, which is not inferior to the best we have ever used.

Argyle Bitters—Argyle Bitters.—A FEW WORDS FOR EVERYBODY. These Bitters, so favorably known throughout the country for the last fifteen or sixteen years, have recently been reduced in price, while their purity and efficacy remain the same as in former years. They are manufactured of pure, full-strength Bourbon Whisky, and medicinal agents selected carefully and solely for this purpose. They are warranted pure and unadulterated.

They are anti-periodic in their effects, and are known to have warned off the baneful influences of malarial poison by their timely use.

They are known to have cured intermittent Fever by their use alone, and are safe for any age, and are retained by the most delicate stomachs.

They are anti-bacchanalian, tonic, alterative and invigorating, and a certain preventive against Dyspepsia.

It is the safest, pleasantest and most efficacious family medicine now used. au3 1m

IT IS THE INVENTION of a Kentuckian, on the Fulling Mill principle, and is operated by rocking.

Washing of clothes is so simplified by this machine that either a man, woman or child can do the work, and do it well.

It will thoroughly WASH, RINSE and BLUE one hundred (100) ordinary Pieces of Clothing in forty-five (45) minutes, without the LEAST WEAR of the clothing, the breaking of a button or the pulling of a thread.

The most delicate Fabrics can be washed with it without the least injury.

While it washes, it bleaches likewise.

It will wash Blankets, and give them a new appearance and feeling.

Its construction is so simple it will last for years with care, and cost less than wash tubs in the aggregate. Any one can repair it, as there are no cog-wheels or cranks to replace.

Price, $12; with Little Giant Wringer, $18.

The LITTLE GIANT WRINGER requires no adjustment to wring either a collar or a blanket. It can be used independent of the machine, if desired. Price, $4.

I would ask attention to the following note of the Rev. P. M. Goodwyn, of the Louisiana Conference, addressed to the editor of this paper:

"MR. EDITOR: Among your new advertisements I noticed one of the 'Woman's Friend Washing Machine;' and if you will allow me I will say a word or two in regard to it, for the benefit of any who might like to have an outsider's opinion of it. Walking down Camp street some days since, I noticed one of these machines in front of a store, and, interested as I always am in everything that promises to be labor-saving and useful, I stopped to examine it. My first thought was: Here is the true principle on which to construct a machine for washing clothes. A day or two after, having consulted my good wife, I ordered one sent to my house; and having had it tested most thoroughly, under my own eye, I do not hesitate to say that its performance comes fully up to all that Mr. Thompson, the proprietor and manufacturer of it in this city, claims for it. The machine does its work, and does it well, in the time specified in the advertisement; and if the person managing it is active in handling clothes, and putting them through the 'Wringer,' it will be found that the job of washing is one that is soon over with.

DRILL OF THE MILITARY SCHOOL.

Located in a quiet, healthy country, so far distant from town as to place the young men beyond the manifold temptations which ordinarily attend college life.

The students all board in the Barracks, and are kept under rigid military discipline. There are no temptations to extravagance or dissipation.

This school has combined the discipline of the camp with the comforts and pleasures of home life, which can hardly be found elsewhere.

MONTGOMERY FEMALE COLLEGE,
Christiansburg, Virginia.

THE EXERCISES of this institution will be resumed on the eighteenth of SEPTEMBER next, under the presidency of Rev. Samuel K. Cox, D. D., assisted by an able faculty.

The course of instruction is exact, thorough and progressive; the situation unsurpassed for healthfulness and accessibility. The college building, which is one of the finest school edifices in the State, is located on the very summit of the Alleghany mountains, two thousand one hundred feet above tide-water, near the Atlantic, Mississippi and Ohio railroad, the great thoroughfare of travel between the North and the South.

Pupils from a distance board in the President's family, and receive parental attention and oversight. Those from the malarious districts of the South can remain at the Institute during the summer vacation at the same rate for board as during the session.

CHARGES.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT.

Sects and Creeds Differ, but there are no dissenters from the general principle that a great medicine is a great blessing. We have many of these blessings, but among them all, in the province to which it belongs, no greater than

Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient.

A column would not suffice to enumerate the ailments for which it is prescribed by physicians of the highest standing. It does not belong to the class derisively termed patent medicines, but it is an article based on scientific analysis, and will stand the test of the sharpest and most rigid medical criticism as a cathartic, a stomachic, an anti-febrile preparation, and an admirable remedy for all bilious complaints. Let there be no mistake. LUCY'S VICTORY.

"Lucy, my child, what was it I heard you, just a moment ago, say to your brother Sammy?"

"I don't care; I do hate him," said Lucy, hanging her head and pouting. "I wish he would go away and never come back."

"Perhaps he may, dear. Many little brothers have gone away from their sisters, and have never come back. I have seen little sisters weeping bitterly, because their brothers were gone from them forever."

Lucy still pouted and sulked, and muttered something which her aunt could not understand. She appeared to be very angry, and looked, oh, so disagreeable. Her aunt took a Bible from the stand near by, and opened to the fifth chapter of Matthew.

"Come here, Lucy, and read the twenty-first and twenty-second verses of this chapter, please," she said kindly.

Lucy obeyed, but she read in a cross tone, and with an ugly scowl on her face:

"Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not kill, and whosoever shall kill shall be in danger of the judgment; but I say unto you that whosoever is angry with his brother, without a cause, shall be in danger of the judgment."

"Does that mean that there is just as great danger in being angry, without cause, as there is in killing?" asked Lucy's aunt.

"I suppose so," said Lucy; "but I had plenty of cause. He mocked me when I was speaking my piece; and he teases, and says 'Ya! ya! ya!' every time I talk."

"Then, indeed, you have cause to be patient with him, and to pray for him, but not to feel revengeful or full of hatred."

"He does many hateful things to me," said Lucy, with tears on her eye-lashes.

"Has Sammy sinned against you as deeply or as often as you have sinned against the Lord Jesus?"

The scowl was gone from Lucy's face, and her voice was low and tremulous as she answered: "No, aunty."

"How do you hope Jesus will treat you, dear?"

The tears dropped from Lucy's eyes as she answered sorrowfully: "I hope he will forgive me, aunty."

"As you forgive those who trespass against you, Lucy?"

"O, aunty, I am sorry," sobbed poor, passionate little Lucy. "What must I do?"

"'First be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift,'" said her aunt, repeating the words of Jesus.

Lucy sought Sammy, and with tears confessed her sin and begged him to forgive her.

"O pshaw! go 'way—that's all right. I—I—why, yes, of course—there, don't boohoo any more. I was only in fun, anyhow; girls are so touchy. I'll make a prime little boat for you to sail in the creek."

That was Sammy's way. Not at all the way of the model brothers of some story books under similar circumstances; but Lucy understood it perfectly, and she gave Sammy her new pencil with the rubber tip, that he had so often teased her for in vain, in token of her appreciation of his willingness to be reconciled; and then she returned to her aunty's room, leaving Sammy to think over his own shortcomings and transgressions against the law of kindness.

Lucy was truly sorry for her fault, and, as her aunty knelt and prayed to the dear Savior to forgive and keep from temptation and sin this poor little sister, who had so deeply grieved him by her wicked anger, she resolved to struggle earnestly against the temptations of her passionate temper.

Do you wish to know how she succeeded in this? By repeating to herself that word of Jesus: "But I say unto you—resist not evil."

A Boy with a Conscience.—A boy with a conscience! Don't all boys have consciences? Certainly they do. But some boys act as if they had none. They do not heed what their consciences say. I will now tell you of a boy who proved he had a conscience by what he did.

His name was James. Playing with his sister one day, he asked her to do some little favor for him, and added: "If you will do it I will give you a thousand dollars."

Of course this was a thoughtless speech; and most boys would have neither thought nor said any more about it. But this boy's conscience whispered: "You have made a promise you cannot keep."

With tears in his eyes, James then ran to his mother and said: "O mother! I told Frankie I would give her a thousand dollars, and I haven't a thousand dollars to give!"

This speech showed that James listened to his conscience about little things. This was as it should be; and if James had lived to manhood he would have made a good man. As it was, God took him when he was fifteen years old, and he is now a saint in glory.

Children, mind what the good little voice in your heart says to you. God speaks through that voice. Heed it well. Obey it and God's other voice, which speaks in the Bible, and you will become noble here and glorious hereafter.—Sunday School Advocate.

Little Alice.—Little Alice was one of my Sabbath school scholars—a fair-haired, blue-eyed little girl, whose beautiful face and sweet, winning ways made her a favorite with all. Methinks I can see now the soft, tender look of her mild eyes, fixed so earnestly upon me, as I endeavored to impress upon her opening mind the gospel plan of salvation.

One day I said to her: "Alice, what will you do when you die, and are called upon to stand before the judgment-seat of God to answer for all the sins done here upon earth?"

Her face glowed with emotion as she answered: "Christ died for sinners; I will hide behind him. God will not look at me; he will look at Christ."

Beautiful thought, to hide behind Christ, to lose ourselves in him, and, casting aside our own impure works, to rest solely and entirely upon his finished work for salvation!—Young Reader.

The Farm and Garden.

HILL-SIDE DITCHES.

Years ago the theory that hilly land could be saved from washing by proper ditching was reduced to practice, and the result led many of our practical farmers to discredit the theory, and even to abandon the ditches as worthless. More recently, however, the custom of ditching has been revived, and it is now thought that almost any hill-side can be prevented from washing by the proper construction of ditches in connection with the proper construction of the row. It has been found in practice that quite as much depends upon the latter as the former operation. No amount of ditching will save the field from washing unless the rows are properly constructed. Formerly, after the field had been ditched, the plowman would begin to run his rows on the lower side of a ditch, parallel with the ditch, until the space between this and the next ditch was filled up, throwing in short rows immediately above the second ditch, if the ditches were not parallel, and then passing over the second ditch and repeating the same operation until the third and all the ditches had been passed over. The difficulty, as will appear on a moment's reflection, was that each row, having the same inclination as the ditch, must carry its own water, or, if from the amount of water it failed, it would, of course, break over to the next row, and the sudden influx of water upon the next would cause that to break also, and hence a gully was formed to the nearest ditch, which being unable to hold the accumulated flood of water, away would go rows, ditches and all. The simple question to be answered is this: If the rows running with, and having the same inclination as the ditches, could carry off the water which accumulated in them, what purpose could the ditches subserve? or if they could not, then no ditch, unless it had the dimensions of a gully itself, (which the farmer was trying to avoid,) could possibly carry off the vast amount of water which a number of broken rows suddenly poured into it. The following is the plan usually pursued by those who have succeeded with hill-side ditches: 1. Let the ditches be laid off so that they shall have an inclination of one inch in twelve or fifteen feet. Scrape in the ditches broad on the bottom. 2. Again apply the level to the land for the rows, giving each row at least twice the inclination or fall of the ditches, but in the opposite direction, so that the rows shall cross the ditches. Crossing in the opposite direction the part of any row contained between two ditches will, of course, be short, and each row, if properly constructed, will carry the water which gathers in it to the ditch, and thus the water is prevented from accumulating, and time given to the ditches to pass it off. Of course the plowman must raise his plow in passing over ditches, and the hoer must clean out the loose dirt. In the course of a few years it will be found that the embankment is sufficiently high to hold the water, and the crop may be planted nearly or quite up to it, and also on the top of it, and thus the broad, vacant space, which was frequently wide enough for a wagon track, is, under the new system, almost entirely occupied by the growing crop. Again, the inclination of the ditch being so slight, the sand, which is washed in from the row, is deposited in the bottom of the ditch, instead of being carried as by a torrent into the creeks and rivers. The deposit of earth being toward the ditch, the tendency is to reduce the space between any two ditches to a horizontal plain.—The Southern Farmer.

DEPREDATIONS OF INSECTS.

The present season bids fair to be one of the worst insect years ever experienced. The Hessian fly has committed extensive depredations on wheat in Tennessee, Kentucky and southern Indiana; scores of complaints of chinch bugs come from Illinois and Iowa, and some from other sections; in still other places immense swarms of black caterpillars and army worms (the true army worm, that lives on grass and other vegetation on the ground) are doing great damage. But the worst of all is the Rocky mountain potato bug. This last, it appears, prevails much more extensively than ever before, at least so in the early season. They are also fast pushing their way East, having entered Ohio on the south line of march, and crossing the Detroit river in swarms on the north.

The Detroit Free Press says: "Every chip, plank, stave, bark, board and floating thing, large or small, in shore or channel, in stream or eddy, was filled with a crew of potato bugs, calm, contented, and as much at home as if feasting on the potato." Most of them were taken by the wind across to the Canada shore; others "struck boldly and rapidly down the rapid current, still eastward bound, via Lake Erie to Buffalo." And it is said they will either disembark at Buffalo or continue their course down the Erie canal. Now, leaving all pleasantries out of the question, it will not be at all strange if the potato bugs should make their appearance in the vicinity of Buffalo in the course of the season. Indeed it would rather be surprising if they did not secure transportation on some of the passing propellors, and finally reach the potato fields of western New York. "Meantime," says the Free Press, "the potato bug possesses the land. Farmers do not hope to save the crop at all. From all parts of the State of Michigan the same cry comes up, and potatoes have greatly risen in price. Let the citizens of New York pray shipwreck of the fleet on Lake Erie."

There seem to be but two remedies for this pest—one is picking off the bugs, which, when they get so numerous, is impracticable; and the other is Paris green. The Free Press says: "All sorts of remedies have been tried. Paris green seems to have the most reliance placed upon it. The druggists of Detroit have had their stock exhausted. One firm disposed of a ton in three days. Telegraph orders have been transmitted to New York to forward with all speed a new supply."

Thus it is seen that the present season, from some cause—as a very early, and in many sections, dry spring, or perhaps some other phase or phases in the weather—is very favorable for insect depredators, and that if no heavy storms, friendly insects or other preventives come to the farmer's relief, they are likely to do immense damage during the season.—Country Gentleman.

Sunflowers as Disinfectants.—Experiments in France and Holland have shown that sunflowers, when planted on an extensive scale, will neutralize the pernicious effects of exhalations from marshes. This plan has been tried with great success in the fenny districts near Rochefort, France; and the authorities of Holland assert that intermittent fever has wholly disappeared from districts where the sunflowers have been planted. It is not yet determined what effect the flower produces on the atmosphere—whether it generates oxygen, like other plants of rapid growth, or whether, like the conifera, it emits ozone, and thus destroys the organic germs of miasms that produce fever.

If you have an enemy, act kindly toward him, and make him your friend. You may not win him over at once; but try again. Let one kindness be followed by another, until you have accomplished your object.

There are three things which can in no wise be used for good—malice, envy and folly; and there are three things that can by no means be employed for evil—humility, contentment and liberality.

You never can find the Lord too much engaged to attend to you; wait always on him.

Judge Story was a profound admirer of Chief Justice Marshall, and could rarely hear his name mentioned without digressing to panegyrize his learning and intellectual power. "Marshall's favorite expression," said he, "was, 'It is admitted.' So resistless was his logic that it was a common remark of the bar, if you once admitted his premises it was all over with you. You were forced to his conclusions, and the only safety, therefore, was in denying everything that he asserted. Daniel Webster once said to me: 'When Judge Marshall says, "It is admitted, sir," I am preparing for a bomb to burst over my head and demolish all my points.'"—Western Monthly.

A little girl, delighted at the singing of the bobolink, earnestly asked her mother: "What makes him sing so sweetly? Does he eat flowers?"

The Lord's love is free as the air, full as the ocean, boundless as eternity, immutable as his throne, and unchangeable as his nature.

MARTHA WASHINGTON COLLEGE,
ABINGDON, VIRGINIA.

The College of the Holston Conference.

THE TWELFTH ANNUAL SESSION of this well-known Institution will begin OCTOBER 4, 1871, and continue forty weeks.

FACULTY.

R. W. Jones, M. A., of the University of Virginia, President.
Rev. W. G. E. Cunnyngham, D. D., Professor of Moral Philosophy and Belles Lettres.
Miss Maggie J. Tucker, Preceptress.
Miss Annie M. Rhodes, Drawing and Painting.
F. L. Funk, Professor of Music, with a full corps of assistants in each department.

Board and English tuition, for term of twenty weeks, from $95 to $105.

No extra charge for Latin or Greek. Charges for the other branches moderate. All charges to be paid in advance.

The course of instruction embraces every subject of a solid and finished education.

The system of instruction is that of the University of Virginia, at which the President graduated as Master of Arts.

The college buildings are substantial brick structures, commodious, comfortable and elegant.

The grounds have been laid out with exquisite taste, and present an appearance of surpassing loveliness.

All the associations and surroundings are such as to cultivate the taste and refine the feelings.

Abingdon, situated on the Virginia and Tennessee railroad, eight miles from Emory and Henry College, and fifteen from Bristol, amid the mountains of southwestern Virginia, is noted for the beauty and grandeur of the surrounding scenery, a balmy atmosphere, general healthfulness and refined society. Mineral waters abound in its vicinity.

Parents in the South cannot find a place in the United States where the influences are more favorable for the perfect development of the physical constitution, and where educational advantages of a higher order are afforded.

CORONA.

CORONA STRIVES TO JUSTIFY ITS name,

THE CROWN OF SCHOOLS

for the higher education of women, by judiciously combining in its scheme the special points of excellence found in all other schools. It aspires to superiority in all departments—literary, scientific, æsthetic, domestic and hygienic. The principal, after spending nearly twenty years in studying educational questions and in the practice of teaching, is devoting his whole mind and heart to the task of maintaining not the largest but the best school in the South. His system of education comprehends such an harmonious development of all the powers of mind, heart and body as will fit the young lady for the faithful discharge of the highest and lowliest duties of life.

The methods of instruction are those approved by the foremost educators of the age. The very best aids are employed for imparting real knowledge, such as maps, charts, globes, specimens and apparatus of all kinds. There is no rote—learning of the mere letter of text-books—no cramming of the mind with disconnected facts.

Assistant teachers of known scholarship and well-tried aptness in teaching are engaged. In physical science and modern languages instruction is given by the eminent professors in these departments of Cumberland University.

The course of study is very extensive. It is arranged into schools after the plan of the best universities, and pupils are graduated in such schools as they or their parents may elect. Music on piano, harp and guitar.

In the boarding department young ladies enjoy all the comforts of an elegant home. The rooms are large, well ventilated, neatly furnished and newly carpeted. Fires in rooms whenever wanted. The table is bountifully supplied with wholesome food.

The location is most favorable in point of health, social refinement and religious privileges.

The health and physical development of boarding pupils are promoted by a system of gymnastic exercises, under a competent teacher, with dumb-bells, wands, rings and Indian clubs, without charge.

The expense of boarding and regular tuition is $250 or $230 a year. Extra branches at usual rates. The annual session always begins on the first Monday of September.

OAK GROVE ACADEMY.

THE EXERCISES of the above institution were opened on Monday, JULY 31, 1871.

Students can at this institution, at comparatively no expense, prepare themselves to enter the senior classes of the best colleges, where they can acquit themselves with as much honor as those who have spent $1,500 to $2,000 in the acquisition of an education.

TUITION PER TERM OF FIVE MONTHS.

First class	$6 25
Second class	10 00
Third class	12 50
Fourth class	15 00

Board and washing can be obtained, in good families, at $2 per week. Students wishing to board themselves can have cabins free of charge.

The locality of the institution being in one of the most healthy portions of East Tennessee, certainly recommends itself to the young men of the South, who should always remember that while they are cultivating that higher type of their nature, they should also be preserving or restoring a sound constitution, without which there can be no great enterprises.

A CARD.

All who wish a cash-paying education for themselves or sons can obtain it in the shortest possible time, and with the least possible expense, at

DOLBEAR COMMERCIAL COLLEGE,
Nos. 164 and 166 Canal St., New Orleans.

This College, founded in 1832, and chartered by the Legislature of Louisiana, has a full and able Faculty, and separate professors for each branch of study, so as to save the time and money of students, and fit them at once for business. They can take the Commercial Course, or the modern or ancient languages or mathematics, Book-keeping or Penmanship alone, or the whole course of the College. They have a Life Scholarship in all the departments they enter and never pay but once. Persons from twelve to sixty years of age attend.

N. B.—Of all our numerous graduates for the past thirty-nine years, not one is now out of profitable employment, so far as known. Those of last year are now receiving from $1,000 to $3,000 per annum. We have ample arrangements for board, from $25 to $30 a month. When Clubs of three or more enter at the same time ten per cent. deduction is made.

There are no vacations. Students can begin at any time. Those who begin soon will be able to fill good situations in the summer, when Merchants make their changes. Liberal deduction for sons of clergymen and crippled soldiers. For catalogues address

COMMERCIAL COLLEGE,
61 CAMP STREET,
Corner Commercial Place, N. O.

Open day and evening the entire year.

Penmanship, Book-keeping, Mathematics and Languages are practically taught by experienced professors. Persons from fifteen to fifty years of age attend. Instruction given privately to each student, who has a separate desk to himself, and is put through a thorough and systematic course of study to qualify him for the situation he intends to fill. Persons who have neglected their education are here speedily prepared for business. Students from the country may obtain board in the family of the principal.

Terms—Twenty per cent. less than other Commercial Colleges in this city. Cost of full Commercial Course only $100. Average time, three to four months.

The principal has been a professional teacher in New Orleans since 1851.

EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE,
VIRGINIA.

THIS INSTITUTION, located on the great railroad line from New Orleans to Baltimore, among the mountains of Virginia, is offering peculiar advantages to those who are seeking a thorough collegiate or business education. Two Hundred and Thirty Dollars will cover the expenses for an entire collegiate year of ten months, for Tuition, Board, Fuel, Room-rent, Washing and Contingent Fees. For the character of the school, please consult our own Alumni, or any of the Bishops or of the leading men of the Southern Methodist Church, or the Professors of the University of Virginia, who have authorized this reference. HIWASSEE COLLEGE.

THE TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL SESSION of this school will begin on the First Monday in August, 1871. The entire expense for board and tuition, for forty weeks, will be $150. The board is of the best description that the country affords, being furnished by the steward from his own farm and prepared by the hands of his own family. We had boys from five different States last year, and not a word of complaint was ever made on this point, which is often the subject of just complaint at boarding schools. The fare is peculiarly grateful to Southern boys, who require a more generous diet when they change their climate.

The manner of governing the school is paternal, as the entire exemption from temptations in the surrounding country renders the discipline easy. The institution is under the care of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, but under my own control. The young men attending the school last year were, without exception, moral and religious. Young men preparing for the ministry may receive tuition free, and in certain cases can obtain lower rates of board. Regular services are held in the College Chapel.

The location of the school is near Madisonville, Monroe county, East Tennessee, in the midst of a fruitful and beautiful country, and surrounded by a thrifty and intelligent population. No negroes live in the neighborhood, all the laborers in the fields and servants in the families being white. The citizens of Monroe county were true to the South in her late struggle, and have adhered to Southern churches.

Students arriving by the East Tennessee and Virginia Railroad will get off at Sweetwater, forty miles south of Knoxville, whence they will find conveyance to the college, seven miles distant.

Our post office is Madisonville, Tennessee.

F. M. GRACE, President.

P. S.—1. Families from the South will find good board in the neighborhood, and a delightful summer retreat at White Cliff Springs, sixteen miles distant from Madisonville. For information on this point parties may address D. A. McKenzie, steward of the college. The health of the country is proverbial.

P. S.—2. Younger boys may be safely sent to this school, as all are under the immediate oversight of the principal, both when in school and when at the boarding-house.

TERMS PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS.

Tuition in Collegiate Department.... $25 00
Preparatory studies..... $15 00 and 20 00
Contingent fee..... 1 50

Board in private families, per month, $14. Board with room furnished, $15.

Total expenses for board and tuition will range from $85 to $105 per session, while the course of studies is as full and thorough as that of any college in the land.

Active measures have been taken for a full and permanent endowment.

For health and association it is believed that the location cannot be surpassed.

It is the aim of the Trustees to place Homer College in the front rank.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE
Staunton, Virginia,

WILL BEGIN the Twenty-second Annual Session SEPTEMBER 21, 1871, and close June 24, 1872. Than this no college for young ladies ranks higher. The President, Rev. William A. Harris, is aided by an able and accomplished board of eighteen teachers and officers. System of teaching thorough, and based on the plan of the University of Virginia. English Science and Literature taught by experienced graduates of our first universities and colleges. French is taught by a native master of the language. Music by two able masters, aided, among others, by two of the most distinguished vocalists of the South.

This is one of the healthiest climates in the world; and young ladies who come here from the South with feeble constitutions are entirely restored to health.

Buildings elegant—fanned by the pure breezes, and commanding the most magnificent rural and mountain scenery for the miles along the beautiful Valley of Virginia, making it one of the most delightful college homes in the Union. During the last session one hundred young ladies attended this institution from fourteen Southern States.

(From Judge John N. Hendren, M. A., University of Virginia.)

* * * The sterling worth of Prof. H. as a man, his Christian character, his devotion to duty and his mature scholarship, also his successful experience as a teacher, furnish ample assurance that young ladies committed to his charge will enjoy advantages of moral and intellectual training not to be found.

* * * From personal knowledge I believe that, as the president of a female college, Rev. William A. Harris has no superior, indeed, within the purview of my acquaintance he has no equal.

(From Bishop E. M. Marvin, D. D.)

The Wesleyan Female Institute is an honor to the church. Instruction is thorough. The classes stand high. In Music, advantages are offered of a very high order. The most talented professors are employed, and neither pains nor expense are spared to make the department eminent. The school is now prosperous, and deserves to be so.

Terms for the Entire Scholastic Year—Board and tuition in the Collegiate Course, $235. Music and other extra studies, moderate.

WHITWORTH FEMALE COLLEGE
Brookhaven, Mississippi,

ON THE New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad, one hundred and twenty-eight miles from New Orleans, fifty-seven miles south of Jackson, Mississippi.

The location is healthy. The instruction in all the branches, including French and Music, is thorough. During the past term there were one hundred and eighty-two pupils. The Faculty consists of four gentlemen and six ladies. The total expenses for board, tuition in English, Latin and Greek, English text-books, school-room stationery, medicines and medical attention, for the term of forty weeks, amount to $263. The next session will open on the twentieth of September, 1871.

Catalogues can be obtained from R. S. Harp, 112 Camp street, New Orleans, Louisiana, or from the president.

MEDICAL.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR
A Purely Vegetable Compound
FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF
RHEUMATISM AND GOUT

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered temporary relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Rawson, De Soto, Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Hurley, Floyd, Louisiana.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure promptly any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to duration of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia. From the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

No charge made except for medicine. Full directions as to use and for further information address

ROBERT J. HARP,

NO. 112 CAMP STREET, NEW ORLEANS,

AGENT FOR THE SOUTHWESTERN STATES FOR THE SALE OF

GEORGE WOODS & CO.'S

PARLOR And CHURCH ORGANS.

To those who are at all acquainted with the trade in musical instruments, or those conversant with the improvements that during the last twenty years have been made in that most popular of instruments, the Reed Organ, it is entirely superfluous to speak of the reputation or ability of the firm of GEO. WOODS & CO. We will, however, mention, for the benefit of any who may be without information on the subject, that the senior partner, Mr. Geo. Woods, has been engaged in the manufacture of Organs for many years, that he is the inventor of many valuable improvements and ingenious devices, and that his coadjutors in the business are all men extensively known to the trade as being possessed of uncommon skill, taste and experience in their different branches.

In offering our Instruments to the notice of all interested in music, we merely ask a comparison between those of our manufacture and those of others, and briefly mention upon what points in our Instruments we base our claims of superiority to the productions of our competitors in business:

QUALITY OF TONE.

Its Purity, Clearness and Brilliancy, Extraordinary Power,

CAPACITY FOR VARIETY, AND BEAUTY OF EFFECT,

Which is owing in a great measure to the excellence of our famous SOLO STOPS,

VOX HUMANA AND VOX CELESTE,

which differ materially in their construction and effects from other Stops of the same or similar name.

Our MANUAL SUB-BASS; smooth as well as effective in quality of tone.
PATENTED INVENTIONS AND INGENIOUS DEVICES.
Our method of employing SOLO SETS in separate WIND CHESTS.
IMPROVED VALVES AND WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.
THOROUGHNESS OF CONSTRUCTION AND ELEGANCE OF DESIGN.

All material used in the construction of our Instruments will be found to be strictly of the best quality. Our workmanship will also be found to be of a very high order.

The Cases are constructed with a proper regard to the laws of sound, having acoustic chambers at the ends of the case.

The Fronts of Keys are Ivory, and are not of Holly wood.

The Carvings are hand-made.

The Stops are of Ebony and Ivory, engraved by hand.

Special attention is called to these Organs. Price Lists and Catalogues, containing full particulars of the many numbers, sizes, varieties and prices—ranging from $110 to $650—will be mailed to any one on application.

☞ All Instruments will be thoroughly examined and shipped in good order. Therefore parties can safely order without coming to select. Address

THESE are not the best the world ever saw, nor do I pretend to say that they will last for ages and generations to come; neither will they bake bread or warm rooms without some little wood or coal, and just the least bit of fire, judiciously applied. Scientific.

SOMETHING new in microscopy is that when you pour milk into tea, the albumen of the milk and the tannin of the tea unite and form tiny flakes of leather, so that in a year a good tea drinker consumes as much leather as would make a pair of slippers, and in five years he has gone through enough material for a long pair of riding boots. This eating or drinking of tannin reminds us that during the siege of Paris a correspondent in the Daily News wrote that he had been seriously warned against drinking white claret or white Burgundy wines. Frenchmen assured him that white wine was a criminal wine, giving bad tempers and wicked irritation to its bibbers. The scientific reason they assigned was that white wine had no tannin, but red wine had, and the tannin acted as an astringent on the minute ducts of the stomach. By its action the alcohol mounted but slowly to the brain. So it seems that our proverb makers of the old time were wise, and that there is "nothing like leather," whether as a solid for the feet, or diluted in wine or in tea. Interior.

THE CHEMISTRY OF PAPER-MAKING. In the manufacture of paper, as well as in all other mechanical industries, great progress has been made in the last half century. Chemistry and mechanics have each contributed its part. The former have afforded us improved methods of washing, bleaching and coloring the paper stocks, which must yield a different product from what was made in former times. The use of ultramarine, which was at one time almost as valuable as gold dust, has been so extended and cheapened by the discoveries of chemistry that its artificial manufacture must be regarded as one of the triumphs of modern science. Chemistry has also taught us that the cellulose of all plants is the same as that contained in rags. Not all plants, however, are adapted to the making of paper. Much depends upon the bark, membrane and fiber, and there is a difference in the purity of the cellulose in various plants. Chemical tests also show a modification in the fiber of plants. The cellulose of cotton yields a blue color immediately with tincture of iodine; that of flax does not turn blue until an acid has been added, and hemp requires both acid and considerable time before the blue color makes its appearance. These reactions point to the presence and absence of starch and glucose in different species of plants.

WATER-PIPES.—The second annual report of the Massachusetts Board of Health gives some interesting details relating to the use of lead water-pipes, an abstract of which we find in the American Chemist. The chief impression made is that the whole subject is involved in difficulties, which may well make doctors differ. The action of the various chemical impurities in water on lead are not easily determined. And as water is almost as variable in its constitution as are springs or reservoirs, no rule can be given which will have general application. Pure water carries off unhealthy quantities of lead, but fortunately pure water is rare. Certain salts, which are very common, form crusty linings which are protective, and when once these are set the pipes become harmless, practically, in their effect on drinking water. The Cochituate water, which supplies Boston, is never absolutely free from lead. When detained in tanks lead is more seriously corroded, than in pipes, both on account of the solder, which induces galvanic action, and on account of the sides at the surface of the water. There are very many causes which have to be noted in the action of lead pipes, such as the presence of other metals at stop-cocks, joints, etc., and the flow of water previously through iron mains, which brings a certain percentage of iron salts in solution. Laboratory experiments are said to be of little account, as the conditions are so different. Waters which, in the chemist's hands, act but slightly, are quite violent on the pipes through which they are conveyed. The action of hot water on lead is much more energetic than cold. Such water has been found to give, in Boston, as much as 0.112 grains of lead per gallon, the circuit being through one hundred feet of tin-lined pipe, and fifty feet of lead. The water-pipe question is becoming a very interesting one, and at present there would seem to be nothing which is fully reliable and practicable. Galvanized iron is proving itself worst of all; iron is safe enough, but not altogether agreeable; tin-lined lead has its objections, and is not as fully to be trusted as represented by dealers; lead still holds sway, and is safe enough in many places, but quite otherwise in others.

Love is indefatigable; it never wearies. Love is inexhaustible; it blooms and buds again; and the more it is diffused the more it abounds.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have no improvement to notice in the general market. The movement in sugar has been of limited extent. Very little has been done in molasses. Operations in flour have been to a fair extent, at prices showing no decline. Corn has not maintained its previous position, Tuesday's sales showing a falling off of about 2½c. ₱ bushel. Pork has sold at a further decline of 25c. ₱ barrel, but there has been some speculative demand. Bacon was neglected until Tuesday, when the market showed more firmness.

The accounts from the country are quite as discouraging as last week, and reports of worms continue to come in from various quarters. There is no little uneasiness felt on the subject. On Tuesday, in particular, the worm stories were more numerous and threatening. The sugar prospect is much more cheering. There was more cane planted, and the crop is now estimated at 175,000 hogsheads.

The river is 13 feet 5 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the eleventh instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales..	1,668
Lake		14
Mobile		449
Texas		103
Total		2,324

On Saturday there was more inquiry, and although the news was unfavorable, 1,000 bales changed hands at about previous rates. On Monday, with discouraging dispatches from New York, factors were compelled to make some further concessions, ordinary and low ordinary selling at ¼c. and in some cases ½c. cheaper. The sales embraced 1,000 bales. On Tuesday the tenor of the Liverpool and New York dispatches was discouraging, but without any further decline until toward the close, when the latter was reported ¼c. lower. There was, however, a fair inquiry, but partly from buyers who claimed concessions which factors would not admit, and the business was consequently confined to 650 bales. Operations were also restricted by light offerings.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 2,650 bales.

The receipts at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 1,439,666 bales, against 1,139,936 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 1,094,950 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 876,330 bales to Great Britain, 299,723 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 211,623 to France.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	13¾ to 14¼
Good ordinary	15¼ to 16

SUGAR.—The season is over, and only small lots of odds and ends are coming in from plantations. About 100 hogsheads were sold at 9⅛ to 10⅜c. for common, 12c. for fully fair, and 12⅛ to 12½c. for yellow clarified, and 30 hogsheads Porto Rico at 11⅜c. ₱ lb. Refinery yellow clarified is quoted at 12¼ to 12¾c., and white at 13 to 13½c. ₱ lb.

MOLASSES.—There is little or none coming in from plantations, and there has not been any movement since our last review. The last sales were at 42½c. for good plantation fermenting. City refinery reboiled is quoted at 30 to 65c. ₱ gallon; golden syrup 90c. to $1 ₱ gallon.

BRAN is in light supply, and prices have advanced since our last review. On Saturday 200 sacks sold at $1.05 ₱ 100 lbs. On Monday 100 sacks sold at $1.10 ₱ 100 lbs. On Tuesday 500 sacks sold at $1.05 to $1.10 ₱ 100 lbs.

PORK.—There has been some speculative demand since our last review, and a party came forward on Saturday and purchased 1,400 barrels mess, in four lots, at $14 to $14.25 ₱ barrel. On Monday the market was inactive again, when only a lot of 100 barrels mess sold at $14.25 ₱ barrel. On Tuesday there was no movement. Mess is retailing at $14.75 ₱ barrel.

BACON.—On Saturday 10 casks shoulders sold at 7c., and 15 tierces sugar-cured hams at 15½c. On Monday 15 casks clear rib sides sold at 8¼c., 45 do. clear sides, in four lots, at 8¾c., and 10 tierces sugar-cured hams at 16c. On Tuesday the market was firmer, and shoulders were held at 7⅞ to 7¼c., clear rib sides 9c., with retail sales at these prices; 10 casks clear sides sold at 8⅞c., and 5 tierces sugar-cured hams at 16½c. Sugar-cured hams command 10 to 14c. for ordinary, and 15 to 16½c. ₱ lb for choice.

DRY SALT MEAT is very dull, and shoulders are quoted at 5½c. ₱ lb. On Saturday 6 casks shoulders sold at 5½c.

LARD.—There have not been any sales worthy of note, excepting on Tuesday, when 100 kegs refined sold at 11½c., and 85 do. at 11⅝c. ₱ lb.

BREAKFAST BACON is dull at 10 to 10½c. ₱ lb.

MONETARY.—Gold, 111⅞ to 112¼.

American silver half dollars, 107 to 107½, and Mexican dollars at 2½ to 3 per cent. premium in gold.

City Treasury notes are quoted at 30 to 35 ₱ cent. discount.

Clarksville Female Academy,

CLARKSVILLE, TENNESSEE.

THE FALL SESSION of this school opens SEPTEMBER 4, 1871. The Faculty is able and experienced, and the course of study thorough and practical.

The character of the school may be known by consulting the Bishops and leading men of the Southern Methodist Church.

It is located in an elevated, healthy country, and in the midst of a people of cultivation and refinement. It is the first high ground after passing the miasmatic regions of the South.

The school for years has had an average matriculation largely over two hundred pupils, many of whom were from various Southern States.

The expenses of an entire term, for English tuition, board, lights, fuel, furnished rooms, washing and servants' attention, will not exceed $125. Apply for catalogues.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of School Books which should be entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching thought and feeling of the Southern people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. MAURY, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simplicity of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, men, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. [illegible] enough to say of this admirable work, that it is the only History of the United States which [illegible] Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

COMPRISES, ALSO,

De Vere's French Grammar, Readers, etc.,

By M. SCHELE DEVERE, LL.D., Professor of Modern Languages in University of Va.

Gildersleeve's Latin Series,

By B. L. GILDERSLEEVE, Ph.D., LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

Carter's Elements of General History,

By Rev. J. P. CARTER, A.M., of Baltimore, Maryland.

Holmes' English Grammars,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

LeConte's Scientific Series,

By the Professors LECONTE, late of the University of South Carolina.

Johnston's English Classics,

By R. M. JOHNSTON, A.M., late Professor of Rhetoric and Belles Lettres in the University of Georgia.

To which list other books in other departments will early be added.

Send for our full ILLUSTRATED DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE, which will be mailed free to any teacher or school officer. Liberal terms given for introduction.

"THE SONG KING,"

For Singing Classes and Conventions.

BY H. R. PALMER,

the talented and rising Composer and Conductor, author of the SONG QUEEN: NORMAL COLLECTIONS, etc.

The SONG KING contains one hundred and ninety-two pages of the same size as the Triumph, Palm, etc., etc., and although it is eighty pages larger than its popular predecessor, the SONG QUEEN, it is sold at the same price, $7.50 per dozen, 75 cents single. Bound only in board covers.

The popularity of the SONG QUEEN is shown by the fact that it has reached an issue of over 75,000 copies, and the SONG KING is the result of nearly five years' additional experience.

Mr. Palmer has the rare gift of condensing and compacting, and the SONG KING is filled with gems of musical thought, in a practical and admirable form for Singing Classes, Conventions and Musical Associations.

VOL. XVII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, AUGUST 24, 1871. NO. 32.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Aug. 16.—The coroner's verdict is that the deceased, Andrew Coyle, and others died through a rupture or explosion of the boiler of the ferryboat Westfield, July 30; that said explosion or rupture was caused by a flaw in the iron, and by the negligence of the engineer, Robinson, in carrying an over-pressure of steam; that the company are responsible for the disaster, as the defect could have been detected if the Staten Island Ferry Company had a competent superintendent, engineer and mechanic in their employ; and are, therefore, criminally negligent. We recommend the district attorney to take prompt action in the matter.

We also think the government inspection very imperfect as now conducted.

There was one dissentient, Mr. Kertland, who believed that the flaw could not be discovered by the ordinary mode of inspection.

Ogdensburg, N. Y., Aug. 16.—Baron de Caman, who claims to be an ex-Catholic priest, lectured offensively to the Catholics. The lecture was broken up. De Caman, protected by the police, advertises to lecture again.

Jackson, Miss., Aug. 17.—A few nights past an armed mob of negroes, to the number of forty or fifty, at Holly Springs, took a negro named Horace Washington from his dwelling and murdered him. The jury of the inquest charged one George Jackson as being the leader of the mob. Most of the parties have been arrested.

St. Louis, Aug. 17.—Senator Morton addressed an immense audience. He thought General Grant's chance a little the best at present. He opposed State sovereignty as taught by Democrats, and said there was no safety for the people without centralization. The greatest idea of the Republican party was national unity; if we abandon that we are not a nation, but simply an aggregation of independent States, which at some time or other will go to pieces.

Savannah, Aug. 20.—On Friday and Saturday we had a terrific gale. Our railroads are washed up, and the mails have to be brought by pole cars. We have no communication south of Number Seven on the Atlantic and Gulf railroads. On the Central railroad there are two washes—one near the city and the other six miles out. No regular trains have arrived since Friday night. Many buildings have been damaged, and great damage has been done to the rice crop.

Virginia City, Nevada, Aug. 21. Fifty buildings were burned here. Loss, $150,000. Fire was the work of incendiaries.

St. Louis, August 21.—Colonel Downing has been elected chief of the Cherokee nation by two hundred majority.

San Francisco, Aug. 21.—A sergeant major and a private of the Third Cavalry were killed by the Apaches, near Camp Verde, Arizona. They were horribly mangled.

New York, Aug. 21.—The Fenians will join the proposed Italian procession if other nationalities are allowed to participate.

A family of six persons were poisoned from eating fish caught near a wreck. It is supposed the fish were impregnated with copper. The symptoms are similar to poisoning from strychnine.

The Ward Hospital, Center street, Newark, burned. Loss, $80,000.

The owner, captain and engineer of the exploded tug Starbuck have disappeared. The boiler contains fifteen large patches and a seven-inch crack on the inside.

Williamsport, Pa., Aug. 21.—The Waverley House and thirty buildings burned. Loss, $8,000,000.

Montgomery, Aug. 22.—Reports from the richest cotton fields of Alabama and Mississippi say the army worm has appeared in larger numbers than ever before. The boll worm is also reported in many counties.

Washington, Aug. 22.—It is announced at the treasury that no new five per cents will be on the market after this week.

Advices from the South Atlantic fleet report all well.

The ship Enterpo, from New York, foundered at sea. A part of the crew arrived at Bahia. A small boat containing seven has not been heard of since they left the wreck.

FOREIGN.

Yokohama, Japan, July 22.—A heavy typhoon at Kaba, on the fourth, caused a loss of four hundred lives. Several vessels were also wrecked, including the Pride of the Thames. The captain, two mates and steward were drowned.

London, Aug. 16.—In Koenigsberg, Prussia, on the fourteenth, sixty-two persons were attacked by cholera. There were twenty-two deaths.

The meeting of the Emperors and their advisers at Gastein is generally regarded as a pledge of peace. The French pretend to be indifferent to the meeting, and prognosticate an alliance between France and Russia.

A deputation of French citizens, appointed to visit Ireland to thank the people for the aid given for the relief of the wounded during the war with Prussia, has arrived.

The people of Dublin were wild with excitement, and the roads leading to the stopping places of the Frenchmen became impassable because of the crowds.

On Wednesday night the city band performers, dressed in green, marched to the hotel where the Frenchmen were stopping, and played American, Irish and French national airs, also some Fenian tunes. There was no interference by the police. The deputation reached Shelbourne Hotel at three o'clock, and in response to calls came out on the balcony. Martin, a member of Parliament, made an address to the crowd.

A son of Marshal McMahon also arrived with the deputation, and was loudly cheered by the thousands of people assembled. His reception was worthy of a king. Many houses are illuminated to-night, and the enthusiasm of the people continues.

St. Petersburg, Aug. 16.—The Czar informed General Lello, the French embassador, that no treaty of alliance of any description between Russia and Germany was in existence.

London, Aug. 18.—One franc per ton will be exacted from foreign vessels entering French ports.

Bullion in the Bank of France at Paris increased eleven million five hundred thousand francs.

The Emperor Napoleon gave a fete at Chiselhurst, at which telegrams were received from the Czar of Russia, King of Swoden, Emperor of Austria, King of Portugal, King of Holland, Prince of Wales and others.

The Pope's new encyclical has been published at Rome. It thanks the bishops and Catholics of the entire world for their demonstrations of attachment made on the occasion of the pontifical jubilee, when from all parts of the globe, and defying every danger and threatened outrage, they repaired to the Eternal City to offer their congratulations.

Berlin, Aug. 18.—The cholera has appeared in the neighborhood of Stettin. The disease continues its ravages at Koenigsberg, where on Tuesday there were 70 new cases and 34 deaths, and on Wednesday 80 new cases and 27 deaths.

Paris, August 19.—The German forces are withdrawing from the neighborhood of the fortifications north and east of Paris.

It is reported it has been decided by the Assembly to remain at Versailles. Certain of the government offices, however, will be removed to Paris.

London, Aug. 19.—The Persian famine is more terrible than reported. Twenty-seven thousand died in Ispahan. The condition of the province of Mazarderan is still worse. The rice crop is a complete failure. The cattle plague, small-pox, typhus fever and cholera prevail.

The report that a conference of German Catholic bishops was held at Fulda on the third instant proves incorrect. The meeting will be held in September.

In the House of Commons, Enfield, under secretary of foreign affairs, in reply to a question, says Mexico had repudiated the treaty of 1862, but the government of Great Britain had insisted the treaty was still in effect, and of a binding and obligatory force.

London, Aug. 21.—It is feared the potato blight will almost destroy the Irish crop.

John Bright is much better.

Queen Victoria is ill at Balmoral.

The Russian fleet, with Grand Duke Alexis, left Cronstadt yesterday for New York.

Parliament has been prorogued to November 7 by royal commission. Relations with foreign powers are friendly, and hope is expressed for continued tranquillity in the East.

The speech is mostly devoted to local affairs, and dwells satisfactorily upon the treaty of Washington.

Berlin, Aug. 22.—The cholera is steadily increasing at Koenigsberg. It has appeared at Dantzig. No cases in Stettin or south Prussia.

Dublin, Aug. 22.—The people and police at Limerick fought to-day. Several were injured.

Versailles, Aug. 22.—It is reported a compromise has been made regarding Thiers' term of office. He receives the title of president, and holds office during the existence of the present Assembly.

In the court-martial to-day members of the Paris fire department deposed positively that the Commune ordered the firing of public and private buildings, and forbade their extinguishing the flames in the Palais Royal.

The press hotly discuss the proposed disbandment of the national guard. The conservative journals advocate, and the radical papers oppose the step. Fears are expressed that its enforcement will meet with opposition in Lyons and elsewhere.

A bill providing for the dissolution of the present Assembly will soon be brought forward.

The deputies of the left are preparing a manifesto demanding the restoration of the constitution of 1848.

Rome, Aug. 22.—The government is taking stringent measures against the cholera.

Munich, Aug. 22.—A committee of conservative Catholics have invited the Catholics of Germany, Austria and Switzerland to the congress at Munich, September 22.

London, Aug. 22.—Thornton, recently minister at Washington, has gone to Balmoral to take the oath as a member of the Queen's Privy Council.

The Prince of Wales, from Hong Kong for Siam, foundered at sea. Fifty lives were lost.

Paris, Aug. 22.—The Budget Committee fix President Thiers' salary at five hundred thousand francs, exclusive of ordinary expenses.

National Sunday School Convention.

To the Sunday School Workers of the United States:

Fellow-Laborers—The next National Sunday School Convention will be held at Indianapolis, Indiana, April 17, 18 and 19, 1872.

The Executive Committee desire that it may truly be of a national character, and therefore they have appointed the undersigned a Committee on Delegations, whose special duty it is to secure the attendance of delegates from every State and Territory in our land.

The basis of representation has been fixed at twice the Congressional delegation of each State. Where State Sunday school organizations exist, credentials to delegates will be issued by their Executive Committees. Where no State organizations exist, the undersigned will appoint State Delegation Committees, who will fill up the quota of their respective States and issue the requisite credentials.

To promote this aim, the undersigned desire information as follows, namely:

1. Is your State organized for Sunday school work? If so, please send us the names, with the address in full, of the officers of your organization. We shall be glad to hear from every official member of the organization, that we may secure as full information as possible.

2. If your State is not organized for Sunday school work, who in it would most likely meet the demand in selecting and securing representative men as delegates?

In this case, let all who have an opinion write it, nominating men for the State committee or for delegates. Please give name, post office address, and denominational connection.

Responses to this call are earnestly invited and should be sent at once. In this way a truly representative and national convention will be secured.

Communications may be addressed to the chairman, or to any member of the committee.

COLORADO.

Rev. Dr. A. A. Morrison, presiding elder of the Colorado district, Western Conference, writes to Bishop McTyeire a letter of great interest, which we find in the Nashville Advocate. We make some extracts, as follows:

You were pleased to express your approval of my intended visit to Colorado, and also to give me full authority to take charge of the interests of Southern Methodism in Denver City. I now report that, so far as health and circumstances have allowed, I have attended to your instructions. I find in and around the city between twenty-five and thirty persons who have formerly been members of our church in the States. Various of the Southern States are represented, but the majority are Missourians; and though few in number, they are excellent as to quality. All hailed our advent with joy and welcome, a Southern Methodist preacher being a rara avis in this region. They tell me that only one sermon has been preached in Denver by a Southern minister since the war. Owing to the state of my health I have attempted to preach but once—hope to be able to do full work in a few weeks. I have, however, attended to our interests in other regards.

We recently held a Church Conference, at which we regularly organized the church, with all the necessary officers, as class-leader, stewards, trustees, building committee, etc., and are now prepared to work in earnest for the erection of a house of worship. But right here I wish frankly, through you, to state to the church, particularly in Tennessee and Kentucky, that we cannot succeed in our enterprise without aid from abroad. Our people here are exceedingly anxious on this subject, and will give to the extent of their means; but their financial ability is small, every one of them having been ruined by the war, and are now only just beginning to recover from the disaster. A few hundred dollars have been subscribed, and more will be, as I am assured that this is a liberal community; but we cannot hope to secure the amount necessary unless our friends in the States come to our help. We need, for present use, at least $3,500. Who will help us? O ye who have the ability, let conscience answer the question. I have appealed to our brethren and friends in Missouri, through the St. Louis Advocate—by private letter to personal friends in Louisville—and now through the Nashville Advocate we appeal to the church in Tennessee and Kentucky. Brethren, as you love our Southern Methodism, help us.

Outside of our communion there is in Denver a large Southern element. We have their sympathies, and to a limited extent will receive their financial aid; but, like our own people, nearly all have lost by the war and are not prepared to assist us very bountifully, however much inclined to do so. There has never been in the past, and, in my opinion, will never again be in the future, so favorable an opportunity for the permanent establishing of Southern Methodism in Colorado as the present. Besides having the good will of all who have Southern proclivities, and the sympathies of a large Northern element, we will meet with no opposition of consequence from any source. The pastors of all the orthodox churches have kindly welcomed me among them, and I as kindly reciprocate their good feeling and courtesy.

Denver is a city of eight or ten thousand inhabitants—is situated in full view of the foot-hills and magnificent snowy range of the Rocky mountains. It is the most beautiful location for a city I ever saw, and is perhaps the most healthy place on the American continent. Hence it is that scores of invalids—many of them from the South—arrive here weekly in search of health. For liver, lung and throat diseases, if not too long delayed, this climate is an almost certain cure. In cases of asthma, however inveterate, the atmosphere of Colorado is an absolute specific. I have seen and heard of scores of instances in which persons afflicted with that most distressing malady—I speak from experience also—have resorted to this climate for relief, and in no single instance has a restoration to health failed as the result. Hence we may expect, when the sanative properties of this delightful atmosphere shall become more generally known, that scores of invalids from the South will come to enjoy its benefits, many of whom will find permanent homes amid the beautiful valleys and splendid mountain scenery of Colorado. It is, therefore, indispensable that such should find here a church with which they can affiliate. It is also proper to state that there are very many of our people scattered over other portions of the Territory who are without church privileges, and who, unless measures are shortly taken to supply them with their own ministry, will be lost to our communion—if not finally lost.

My dear Bishop, be it known to you, and the church, that I feel importunately anxious on this subject, and I offer no apology. Denver is, and is to be in all time, the great center, for more than six hundred miles, not only of numbers of converging railroads, but of commercial, moral, intellectual and every other sort of influence; and, so far as Southern Methodism is concerned, a failure at this point will issue in its failure all over this Territory. But we do not intend to fail. Relying upon God, and trusting the generosity of the friends of the church, we can scarcely fail of success. It is very desirable that our church should be ready for occupancy by the first of October. Those who may feel disposed to send us donations will please do so at once, to my address. All contributions will be duly acknowledged through the Advocate. Yours very truly, A. A. Morrison.

Denver City, Colorado, July 20, 1871.

P. S.—As an item of news, I state that the Colorado Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North) commenced its session here this morning, Bishop Janes presiding. I learn that they have eighteen preachers; also that the missionary appropriation to this Conference is $9,000. A. A. M.

Getting what is Sought.—When a man can say, "I am going to the house of God this morning, and O, may God meet with me there!" he will not long go there in vain. When a hearer can declare, "As soon as I take my seat in the congregation my one thought is, 'Lord, bless my soul this day,'" he cannot long be disappointed. Usually, in going up to God's house, we get what we go for. Some come because it is the custom, some to meet a friend, some they scarcely know why; but when you know what you come for, the Lord, who gave you the desire, will gratify it. I was pleased with the word of a dear sister this morning, when I came in at the back gate. She said to me: "My dear sir, my soul is very hungry this morning. May the Lord give you bread for me." I believe that food convenient will be given. When a sinner is very hungry after Christ, Christ is very near to him. The worst of it is, many of you do not come to find Jesus; it is not he you are seeking for; if you were seeking him he would soon appear to you. A young woman was asked during a revival: "How is it you have not found Christ?" "Sir," said she, "I think it is because I have not sought him." It is so. None shall be able to say at the last: "I sought him, but I found him not." In all cases at the last, if Jesus be not found, it must be because he has not been devoutly, earnestly, importunately sought, for his promise is: "Seek, and ye shall find."—Spurgeon.

When in Aberdeen, Dr. Johnson dined with a clergyman, the soup being hotch-potch. The lady of the house, after having served him once, asked if he would take some more. The gruff and stern moralist and outspoken social bear replied: "It is a dish fit for hogs, madam." "Take a little more, then," was the immediate and appropriate reply.

Japanese Prayer.—They tell us that the Japanese, instead of spending their time in listening to a long sermon, march decorously to the temple wherein their priests are performing service, throw in a printed prayer and a little money, and go about their business with a satisfied conscience.

The savage knows little of the keen anguish to which the cultured mind and sensitive heart are liable; and the more debased the moral character, the more benumbed are the stings of conscience, which give to the pure-minded such exquisite pain.

The Hollow of His Hand.—A Christian sailor, when asked why he remained so calm in a fearful storm, said: "Though I sink, I shall only drop into the hollow of my Father's hand; for he holds all these waters there."

Demopolis District Conference, Alabama.

Mr. Editor: I was requested by the members of the Demopolis District Conference to prepare a synopsis of its proceedings for publication in the New Orleans Christian Advocate. I shall be brief, for I know that both you and your readers object to very lengthy articles on matters of local interest.

The conference met at Livingston, Alabama, July 28, Rev. S. H. Cox, presiding elder, in the chair, and was organized by the election of S. S. Mellen secretary, and J. M. Mason assistant secretary.

The conference was largely attended, every charge in the district but one being represented. The morning of the first day was taken up in hearing reports from the preachers in charge. At three P. M. Rev. W. S. Turner delivered an address on The Best Mode of Preparation for the Pulpit. The remainder of the evening was consumed in discussing some of the propositions set forth in the address. Both the address and discussion were very interesting, and were highly enjoyed by the members of the District Conference and the visitors present. On the morning of the second day addresses were delivered on the following subjects: Pastoral Visiting a Condition of Pastoral Success, by Rev. A. Hood; The Duty and Necessity of Administering Discipline, by Rev. S. M. Thames; Parsonages, by Rev. W. Ira Powers.

On motion of Bro. Powers a committee was appointed to consider the practicability of securing a permanent parsonage for the presiding elder of this district. This committee recommended that $2,500 be raised for the purchase of a parsonage, to be situated in the town of Livingston. Of this amount the church at Livingston very generously agreed to raise $800, and the remaining $1,700 was divided by assessment to the different charges in the district. A committee was appointed to superintend the purchase and furnishing of the parsonage, and we hope in a few months to have a permanent home secured for our presiding elder within the bounds of the district.

The Committee on the State of the Church reported at a late hour in the evening. Their report was very encouraging. The church is prospering in all her interests, both material and spiritual.

During the session of the conference special attention was given to the evils of dram-driuking and liquor dealing by members of the church, and it was expressed as the sense of this conference that any member of the church who persists in either of these sins, all milder means proving ineffectual, should be excluded.

It is worthy of remark that the most decided expressions on this subject came from the laymen, who demand the exercise of discipline in all refractory cases.

The following are the members elect to the Annual Conference: S. S. Mellen, Henry Ware, A. K. Ramsey, A. W. Cockrell. Alternates: D. H. Smith, J. L. Terrell.

A resolution of thanks to the citizens of Livingston was adopted.

Bladon Springs was chosen as the place for holding the next District Conference.

James M. Mason,
Assistant Secretary.

The New Planet.—Prof. C. H. T. Peters, of the Litchfield Observatory, Hamilton College, announces the discovery of a small planet, the one hundred and fourteenth in the group of asteroids, at three o'clock on the morning of the twenty-fifth ultimo. It was observed in 21 hours, 43 minutes, right ascension, and 10 degrees, 12 minutes, south declination, having moved in 24 hours, 45 seconds in the former co-ordinate, and 4 minutes and 20 seconds toward the south. Its magnitude is estimated between 12 and 13.

AUGUST.

BY CARL SPENCER.

Like a full river's flow,
That moveth onward with majestic line,
The life that leaped with sudden warmth and glow
Into the light of June,
Grown deep and calm, now moves with broader sweep
Through sunny lands of sleep.

Calm, over vale and hill,
The sunshine sleeps, and silence overbroods;
Too bright, too calm, too ominously still—
Presaging fiercer floods,
When earth, o'erwearied, calls for storms to clear
Her burning atmosphere.

Heavily droop the flowers
Beneath the fiery kisses of the sun,
Till the night-watchers from their starry towers
Proclaim, The day is done;
And she comes forth, jeweled, and calm, and bright—
The glorious August night!

Lay thy bright scepter down,
And fold away thy dazzling robe, O Day;
Come Night, with twilight robe and starry crown,
And gentle spells to lay—
As softly as the dew upon the flowers—
On these tired hearts of ours.

REMARKABLE CONVERSION.

CORPUS CHRISTI, NUECES CO., TEXAS, August 6, 1871.

MR. EDITOR: Some short time ago I received by hand the Spanish letter which I herewith inclose—its date will give the exact time—accompanied by a very skillfully-arranged and very attractive little present. You will note that it is addressed to me as a "minister of God." The writer supposed I was such on account of seeing me act as Sunday school superintendent, and because my position was not clearly interpreted to him.

The writer of the above-mentioned letter, Alejo Hernandez, was born in Aguas Calientes, in Mexico. He is now twenty-eight years of age, and in appearance is fine-looking—good size and robust. His face beams with intelligence and good nature, and is stamped with God's own impress of honesty. He is thoroughly and patriotically a Mexican, and his ambition and enthusiasm are joined in a burning desire to do good to his people by carrying to them the word of God, a preached gospel and a religious literature.

His education is good. He is well grounded in the elementary branches, has made some considerable progress in arithmetic, algebra, trigonometry, etc.; has also studied rhetoric, logic, ethics and metaphysics, but did not fully complete his college course. His letter speaks his ability as a writer and shows his attainments in the niceties of grammar.

His own desire was to be a priest. Revolution in Mexico broke up the college where he studied, and drew him into military service. He was captured by the French at Puebla, and afterward escaped and made his way to Matamoras, near our frontier. While in Matamoras he purchased a book—"Nights with the Romanists"—and began to read it in order to kill time. He was much alarmed by the preface, and threw it aside as a heretical work. Again he picked it up after an interval of two days, and in much fear, and with many doubts as to the religious propriety of so doing, read it through. He became interested. That book referred to the Bible, and made several quotations from it. He therefore bought a Bible, and "searched the Scripture to see if these things were so." He now was fully aroused, and bought "Kirnan's Letters," "The Religion of Money," "History of the Reformation in the Sixteenth Century," etc. The first conclusion he came to was that Romanism is a delusion, and tore from his neck the emblems of his faith, which he cherished the more because the hands of a fond mother had tied the relic by a ribbon, fastened with her own hands, around his neck.

After this his great wonder was how so many of the gifted, the noble—men in position and men of intelligence—could be held by the fetters of such a fanaticism. While alive to the errors of Rome, his heart was not changed. On the contrary, he was in much gloom and perplexity. He still read his Bible, and bought and read many Protestant books and tracts. Gradually, slowly and almost imperceptibly he felt a softening influence in his heart. He began to lean on Christ as the only hope of sinners—as "the life, the truth and the way." He took a loathing to forms and ceremonious observances, and in the early stages of his "awakening" used to amuse himself by observing the puppet-show exhibitions of his church and the credulity of the worshipers.

During all this time—some months—he had not conversed with a Protestant; he knew none. Finally, being in Brownsville, he visited a Protestant church, and took a back seat, near or rather behind a door. He was but an humble worshiper. He understood nothing, but the simplicity of the service pleased him, and occasionally during the sermon and during the singing he felt his heart strangely warmed, and his affection seemed to go out toward the strange people whose language he could not understand, yet with whom he worshiped God in spirit.

After this he went about from place to place in Mexico, teaching school for a support, and spreading the knowledge he had received as far as he could. He believes he has been the means of doing much good, and is confident that God has called him to preach the gospel. His schools were, one by one, broken up by the priests.

Since writing me the above-mentioned letter he has been distributing Bibles, Testaments and tracts in Spanish in this vicinity. To-day, during our Quarterly Meeting, he joined our church, and knelt with me at the table of our Lord. Our Quarterly Conference, which convenes to-morrow, will license him to preach, and our good presiding elder, Rev. J. W. DeVilbiss, will take him up and give him active work as a missionary. At Conference, next December, we hope Bishop Marvin will ordain him in view of the mission work, and stamp him with the authority and protection of our church. Meantime, look how the stone has been cut out of the mountain. The work is God's, without man's aid. Let the church now make good use of the prophet which the Lord had provided, and we shall see that day has dawned for the darkness of Mexico.

Respectfully yours,

WILLIAM HEADEN.

The Advocate as an Advertising Medium

THE EAST ALABAMA MALE COLLEGE, AUBURN, ALABAMA.

MR. EDITOR: Though the circulation of your paper may not be as great in this extreme portion of the State as some other of our church papers, yet I am gratified to know you have a respectable number of subscribers at this time, which bids fair to be largely increased as our mail facilities improve. The Montgomery and Eufaula railroad will soon be completed, giving us direct connection by rail with the Crescent City. Then we expect to be as familiar with New Orleans periodicals as with our own News and Times. However, the advantages of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE are very great. It is the organ of the Alabama Conference. Its circulation is general throughout the State. Mr. Editor, you ought to do a large business in advertising. Just think of it! A sheet that makes its weekly visits to every station and circuit in the Alabama Conference, read and disseminated by its ministers, whose track is found on every mountain-top and down in every valley as they go forward to "spread Scripture holiness all over these lands." It is certainly a grand medium through which to reach the people of Alabama, and therefore I beg a little corner to call attention to the East Alabama Male College, located at Auburn, Alabama, on the Montgomery and West Point railroad. It is a Methodist institution—the property of the Alabama Conference. Here we have a magnificent building, and all necessary fixtures, located in one of the healthiest towns in the State, whose population has all the social, intellectual and moral qualities that could be desired, with a faculty whose scholarly attainments, energy and experience as educators are equal to any in the land. In fact nothing is wanting in this institution to furnish a full and thorough course of instruction. This college has had a hard struggle to live, but its friends have been faithful, and brought it safely through the trials of the past; and though rocked severely by the storm of war, they have the honor to see it now on a firm basis and "on rising ground." It has a live faculty. The society halls are beautifully adorned. The patronage at the last session was equal to if not larger than any in the State.

And now will not the Methodists of Alabama, and especially those in the east, rally for the advancement of its honor, prosperity and reputation? Come, brethren, let us stand by our denominational schools and colleges. We see other denominations moving in this direction. Then let it be our care and constant study to preserve and improve the institutions handed down to us, to develop the resources of Methodism, call forth its powers, wake up its sleeping energies, build up and extend its institutions and promote its interests, and we will do a work for which in after years, while our bodies are slumbering in the tomb, the children of the church will "rise up and call us blessed."

Why should Alabama patronize foreign institutions when so well supplied at home? The Southern University in the west and the East Alabama Male College stand erect among the best institutions of the South, and offer the treasures of knowledge to all her sons. Let the twenty-three thousand Methodists, with their twelve thousand children, within the limits of the Alabama Conference, ponder this question, while the three hundred and fifty traveling and local preachers of the Conference exert themselves for patronage. The call is not for money, but for young men.

The commencement exercises of the last session were exceedingly gratifying to all its patrons and friends, and highly creditable to both professors and students. The next session opens on the second Wednesday in September. They want two hundred young men. Come, brethren, equip your sons and send them to Auburn.

CAMDEN DISTRICT CONFERENCE, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: This conference met at Pineville, Monroe county, Alabama, on Thursday, July 27, and adjourned on the twenty-ninth. The opening sermon was delivered the night previous to the sitting of the conference, to a respectable audience.

Bishop Pierce had been solicited by the presiding elder of the district to be present; but the Bishop, who has ever been abundant in labors, has, through the necessity of the case, become more so. This is the reason, we presume, why he was not with us.

Although we were deprived of the pleasure of seeing a Bishop, and of enjoying his wholesome counsel, the presiding elder, Rev. D. M. Hudson, was present and presided with great efficiency and dignity.

The conference was organized by electing W. W. Drane secretary, and T. K. Armstrong assistant. There was a large lay representation present, and all of the pastors except one, who was prevented by serious affliction in his family.

We were glad to see Father Pilley, and other aged members of this conference, with sufficient strength and health to meet with us again. These men, by their mature piety and sound judgment, wonderfully facilitate the business of such a body.

The preaching on this occasion was good, and the word preached was accompanied with the energy of the Holy Spirit. The church was greatly blessed, and many renewed their consecration to the service of God. The influence of the religious services of the conference permeated the whole community, and many were found who were seriously considering their ways. The preacher in charge, Rev. Neil Gillis, continued the services for several days after the adjournment of the conference. Fifteen were added to the church.

All the interests of the church were carefully looked after; but we regret that the pressure of business forbade a more mature investigation of some things.

The reports of committees exhibited more thought in the preparation of them than usual. The subjects had been thoroughly considered.

The following resolutions, offered by the several committees, were passed:

ON EDUCATION.

Resolved, That we, as preachers and laymen, pledge ourselves to more earnest effort in sustaining our denominational schools.

Resolved, That the pastors cooperate with the presiding elder of the district in raising funds to assist a young man, looking to the ministry, in pursuing his studies at one of our colleges.

ON BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

The conference concurred in a resolution passed by the Clarksville (Tenn.) District Conference, viz:

WHEREAS, The exigencies of the times and the wants of the church imperatively demand a new book on modern infidelity; AND WHEREAS, We recognize in Dr. A. T. Bledsoe, editor of our Quarterly Review, all the qualifications for this great work; therefore,

Resolved, That he be earnestly requested to write a book on this subject as soon as possible.

Resolved, That the preachers in charge of circuits and stations be requested to procure from the Publishing House the best tracts on the subjects and mode of baptism, for general distribution among our people.

Resolved, That the presiding elder and the preachers in charge be required to make every possible effort and to use all legitimate means to have the churches supplied with our hymn books and Discipline, and that the Discipline be placed in the hands of every Methodist family.

Resolved, That each preacher in charge be required to report, at the next meeting of this District Conference, the number of such books in each charge, and the cause of any deficiency in the supply.

Resolved, That every charge be requested to secure by public collection a fund, to be known as "the book fund," and that this fund be kept in constant operation for the purchase and sale of books.

ON SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

Resolved, That we recommend to all the pastors of circuits and stations within the bounds of the district to organize a Sunday school at every appointment where ten children can be enrolled.

Resolved, That we recommend the use of the lesson system and the circulation of our own Sunday school literature, under all circumstances.

ON MISSIONS.

Resolved, That a missionary society, auxiliary to the Missionary Society of the Alabama Conference, be organized before the adjournment of this conference.

This society was organized with the presiding elder for the president, Rev. S. F. Pilley vice president, John Sampey treasurer, and one from each pastoral charge as the board of managers.

ON THE STATE OF THE CHURCH.

Resolved, That every family whose head is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South be earnestly exhorted, through the preacher in charge and the Quarterly Conference, to erect a family altar and cultivate family piety.

Resolved, That the pastors be especially impleaded to remember their vows and obligations, and to be diligent in their pastoral ministrations, and more frequent and faithful in the administration of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and as pastors; that we direct our charges to higher attainments in holiness, and to lead the way.

We hope the preachers on the district will remember the following resolution:

Resolved, That the preachers in charge within the district be and are hereby instructed to prepare all their reports, and to have them ready on the morning of the first day of the next conference; and that they prepare these reports, with regard to the several subjects for committees, on separate slips of paper, to facilitate the working of committees.

Resolved, That a condensed report of this District Conference be published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

The following are the delegates elected to the Annual Conference: William C. Farish, Rev. A. R. A. Purifoy, John Sampey, Samuel Tisdale. Alternates: Dr. J. M. Herrington, Rev. M. Padgett, Dr. H. B. Smith, Samuel Bradley.

The next conference is to be held at Georgiana.

THOS. K. ARMSTRONG.

VICKSBURG DIST. CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: This body convened in the town of Utica on Thursday, July 27, and continued in session three days. Rev. John A. B. Jones, presiding elder, conducted the opening services and presided over the conference during its sessions. W. E. Holloman was elected secretary.

Present: ministers, thirteen; laymen, twelve.

Special committees were appointed upon education and Sunday schools.

Verbal reports were received from the several charges in the district, showing, according to the disciplinary requirement:

1. That the spiritual state of the church is much improved; attendance upon the ordinances good; social meetings neglected.

2. That a mission at Vicksburg, in the opinion of Rev. J. T. Heard, the pastor, would result in the establishment of another church as strong as that already there.

3. That there is increased interest in the Sunday school work; but great difficulty is encountered in establishing Sunday schools at many of the churches for want of superintendents; that there is great diversity in the manner of conducting them; that the uniform lessons are not in general use, and our Sunday school literature not adequately circulated.

4. That the envelope and assessment systems are most generally in use for raising money, but some charges have no system at all. Contributions to church purposes are small, but, for the most part, liberal under the circumstances. In this connection some of the preachers spoke of the members of their charges in terms of high consideration and esteem; others complained of inefficient stewards, sparse membership, etc. Houses of worship and parsonages are not in a desirable condition.

The Committee on Sunday Schools, in their report, urge "the universal adoption of the uniform lessons prepared by our church, both on account of their cheapness and their admirable adaptability to the wants of the church," and "earnestly call upon all our superintendents and teachers to remember that the prime object of all Sunday school instruction is the salvation of the souls committed to their charge and instruction." The entire report was unanimously adopted.

The Committee on Education submitted with their report the following resolutions, which, together with the report, were adopted:

Resolved, 1. That it is best, and the duty of Methodist people to educate their children in their own schools.

2. That as the Port Gibson Collegiate Academy is worthy of the highest confidence of the public as an institution of learning, we will give it our liberal support.

As the result of a communication from Thomas Reed, president of the Ministerial Educational Association of the Mississippi Conference, twenty persons became life members of the association, on the plan laid down in article 4 of its constitution.

A resolution of thanks was voted to the citizens of Utica and vicinity, who so kindly opened their hospitable homes for our entertainment.

The president and secretary were instructed to furnish a synopsis of the doings of this conference for publication in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

The conference closed its labors, late on Saturday afternoon, with the benediction by Rev. Thomas Nixon.

W. E. HOLLOMAN, Sec'y.

CHINA MISSION.

MR. EDITOR: In a recent num of the ADVOCATE I noticed an ar from the pen of H. H. Mont ery, concerning our mission China. In this article Bro. M gomery presents some thou which are worthy of our se consideration.

In some respects, doubtless all agree with Bro. Montgo We all feel a deep interest i China mission. We feel an int in those dear brethren who left home and country, to s their days in a heathen land the sake of preaching the gosp the benighted millions of C We feel a deep interest in the fare of their wives and little But I, for one, beg leave to di from some of the opinions adva by Bro. Montgomery.

He thinks our Bishops have manifested a due degree of int in the affairs of our China missi thinks they ought to visit that tant field in person. He s further, that some of our n preachers have gone to churches because they could receive ordination in ours. T certainly unfortunate. But ca not find "a more excellent than that of requiring some Bishops to almost circumnav the globe to visit a people whom they could not convers to whom they could not p their native tongue?

We hold that elders and h are the same in order. The our brethren in China ordai native preachers, as Mr. Wes elder in the Church of Englan dained elders for the Methodis America. Let us not be Pres rian in theory and high-ch Episcopal in practice.

If it be contended that our ops, by visiting that distant could understand better the condition of the work, and di renewed interest in that throughout the entire church, swer, no one else can repo true condition of that missi well as the brethren laboring i particular field, and through instrumentality the church in has been organized. ADVANTAGE OF CRYING.—A Fr physician is out in a long sertation on the advantages of cr ing and crying in general, and cially during surgical operati He contends that groaning and ing are two grand operations which nature allays anguish; those patients who give way to natural feelings more speedily cover from accidents and operati than those who suppose it unm thy a man to betray such symp of cowardice as either to groa ery. He tells of a man who red his pulse from one hundred twenty-six to sixty, in the cour a few hours, by giving full ve his emotions. If people are a unhappy about anything let t go into their rooms and com themselves with a loud boo-hoo, they will feel a hundred per c better afterward.

In accordance with the above erying of children should not be greatly discouraged. If it is tematically repressed the result be St. Vitus' dance, epileptic fit some other disease of the ner system. What is natural is ne always useful; and nothing ca more natural than the crying children when anything occurs give them either physical or me pain.—Good Health.

NO FEAR FOR THE BIBLE.

BY REV. JOHN HALL, D. D.

...smart man supposed that he

...for the man to get there, so
...w is the throat." Passing over
...circumstance that power equal
...e part of the work would suffice

... contrary to previously enter-
...d ideas, that the temperature
...s in some places as much as fif-
...degrees in a space of as many
...s; and that under a surface tem-
...ture all over of about fifty-two
...ees.

...has been assumed by geologists
...chalk formation is altogether a thing of the past, and necessarily implies a time as well as a temperature widely remote from those of the sandstone formation. Put two surfaces—sandstone and chalk—together, and your geologist will tell you that they were both under the sea, and that they were formed at periods enormously remote. But these gentlemen tell us that the formation of both is going on at the present time, side by side, in spots of ten miles width, and that, could we lift into upper air a section of such sea-bottom to-day, geologists would be found, on all the principles they have counted settled, to pronounce one part immensely older than the other, though they were both in course of formation, side by side, yesterday. Accordingly it is reported to the Royal Society within the last month, "wherever similar conditions are found upon the dry land of the present day, it had been supposed that the high and the low temperature, the formation of chalk and the formation of sandstone, must have been separated from each other by long periods, and the discovery that they may actually coexist upon adjacent surfaces has done no less than strike at the very root of many of the customary assumptions with regard to geological time." Just so. Lyell's Uniformitarian theory has been consigned to the receptacle of dishonest weights and measures, if there be, as there ought to be, a Limbus for such. And now another accepted standard is branded as worthless or worse. Let us hope the modesty of all true science will be promoted by these discoveries.

Again, it used to be accepted as settled that animal life in the sea ceased at a depth of three hundred fathoms. Mr. James Forbes, indeed, counted upon finding it lower, on a scale proportioned in some degree to the decrease of life with the increasing height on land. But last summer H. M. ship Porcupine carried out a series of investigations with dredging apparatus never before equaled, and which searched the sea-bottom surface five hundred fathoms deeper than that from which the first Atlantic cable was fished up. The dredge, weighing nine or ten hundred pounds, was worked to the depth of two thousand four hundred and thirty-five fathoms, to find "extraordinary abundance of animal life at even the deepest ocean abysses." "Creatures of high organization, with perfect eyes," mollusca of over a hundred species, silicious sponges, annilids and crustaceans are there, and endless "animal life actively engaged in chalk formation," not having the fear of the geologists before their eyes!

If Mr. Barnum offered to the American public a living mammoth, or if a plesios-aurus appeared in Broadway, there are many persons competent to show on scientific grounds that neither had any business to be there, the last of the race having died and been buried in glacial deposits, or otherwise, many millenniums ago. So it had been established regarding a pretty little Crinoid ("stone-lily") of which you may see engravings in books on Paleontology, and of which the last representative, called by the name Bourgueticrinus, disappeared among the chalk masses, in the days when oolite was being made. But behold! M. Stars, a Swedish explorer, brings up a living specimen of this class from near Loffoden Islands, where no doubt it had been pursuing its submarine and useful avocations without knowing what an anachronism it was! Many thanks to the little chalkmaker! It led to further searching, to deeper dredging, and let us hope also to deeper thinking. It shows that there are more things in the sea, at least, than geology has dreamed of; it shows that science may be all wrong, when it thinks itself most right; and that it is no wisdom, but consummate folly, to bate one jot of our confidence in inspired writ because scientific men insinuate its unreliableness, and suggest, with a pile of ill-classified fossils before them, that the tables of stone in the heart of the earth contradict the record that claims the inspiration of God.

The announcement of these late gains we do not take from any half-educated and "fanatical" print, but from a report to the Royal Society, given in the Times (London,) Sir C. Lyell expressing the thanks of the society for the information conveyed.

And this suggests to us that wherever the relations of physical science and revealed religion are not included in the education of the ministry of the future, it would be well to include them. Who is looking out for a chair to be endowed by him in one of our institutions? Here is an investment for his money. The time will come when lectureships will be more common than now. Here is a subject on which an adequate course might be provided for, the lectures to be afterward printed with advantage to the cause at once of scientific truth and of true religion. A man may be well read in his Bible, the fathers of the early, and the far more valuable fathers of the later centuries, and yet he may be at a momentary loss if met by a disciple of Comte, or his great English interpreter, Mr. George H. Lewes. We have no fear for the word as far as the members of our churches are concerned. They read it, and have that kind of evidence of its truth which the woman of Samaria had of the Messiahship of Christ: "He told me all things that ever I did." But we must not be content to hold our own. We owe a duty to the world. We must carry the war into the enemy's camp. We lament that scientific men are not always devout, and do not always know their Bibles. The temptation has come among them to assert their claim to advanced thinking by rejection or contempt of the old truths, as ill-conditioned youths vindicate their manliness by impertinence to their mothers. There are, indeed, men at once scholarly and devout—like Faraday; or among ourselves, Henry and Alexander and Guyot—but they do not represent the class, many who are rash, and yet eager for positive knowledge. For the benefit of such inquirers, for the protection of those to whom they often too hastily offer their conclusions, for the discharge of our consciences, we must cultivate this field, and spread the intelligent conviction that there is no fear for the Bible.

A MEMORY OF SMITHFIELD.—A short time before the demise of Queen Anne, as Bishop Burnet was riding slowly in his coach round that part of Smithfield from whence so many blessed martyrs ascended to heaven, he observed a gentleman standing on the distinguished spot, in a musing, pensive attitude, and seemingly quite absorbed in thought. His lordship ordered the carriage to stop, and sent his servant to the person with a request that he would come to his coach-side. He did so, and proved to be Dr. Evans, a very eminent dissenting minister, of whom the bishop had some knowledge. "Bro. Evans," said the prelate, "give me your hand, and come up hither; I want to ask you a question." The doctor being seated, and the coachman ordered to continue driving round as before, the bishop asked the doctor "what it was that directed his steps to Smithfield, and what he was thinking of while standing there?" "I was thinking," answered the other, "of the many servants of Christ who sealed the truth of their lives in this place. I came purposely to feast my eyes once more with a view of that precious spot of ground. And as public matters have a very threatening aspect, I was examining myself whether I had grace and strength enough to suffer for the gospel, if I should be called to it, and was praying to God that he would make me faithful even to death, if it should be his pleasure to let the old times come over again." "I myself came hither," replied the prelate, "on the same business. I am persuaded that, if God's providence does not interpose very speedily, and almost miraculously, these times will, and must, shortly return; in which case you and I shall probably be two of the first victims that are to suffer death at that place," pointing to the paved center. But it pleased God to disappoint their fears by giving a sudden turn to national affairs; within a few weeks Queen Anne was gathered to her fathers, and King George the First was proclaimed.

A SKULL THAT HAD A TONGUE.—When Dr. Donne, the famous poet and divine of the reign of James the First, attained possession of his first living, he took a walk into the church-yard, where the sexton was at the time digging a grave, and in the course of his labor threw up a skull. This skull the doctor took in his hands, and found a rusty, headless nail sticking in the temple of it, which he drew out secretly, and wrapped in the corner of his handkerchief. He then demanded of the grave-digger whether he knew whose skull that was. He said 't was a man's who kept a brandy shop—an honest, drunken fellow, who, one night, having taken two quarts, was found dead in his bed next morning. "Had he a wife?" "Yes." "What character does she bear?" "A very good one; only the neighbors reflect on her because she married the day after her husband was buried." This was enough for the doctor, who, under the pretense of visiting his parishioners, called on the woman; he asked her several questions, and, among others, what sickness her husband died of. She gave him the same account he had before received, whereupon he suddenly opened the handkerchief, and cried, in an authoritative voice: "Woman, do you know this nail?" She was struck with horror at the unexpected demand, instantly owned the fact, and was brought to trial and executed. Truly might one say, with even more point than Hamlet, that the skull had a tongue in it.

THE pious man and the atheist always talk of religion; the one of what he loves, and the other of what he fears.

ANOTHER VERSION.

The Independent thus corrects a very pleasant mistake in reference to the deputation of the Evangelical Alliance:

The reports of the cordial reception of the deputation sent by the Evangelical Alliance to the Russian court seem to have been wholly unfounded. Instead of conceding the truth of their complaints, and promising redress, Prince Gortschakoff rather testily disputed their facts, and gave no positive assurance of any change of policy. A letter from Canon Battersby, who was a member of the deputation, gives some particulars of the interview with the prince. The deputation consisted of 36 members—9 from the United States, 4 from Sweden, 2 from Denmark, 4 from Germany, 5 from Switzerland, 10 from Great Britain, 1 each from Denmark and Belgium. Our own Dr. Schaff was the first speaker, and his address is said to have made a favorable impression upon the prince. After him came Dr. Coulin, of Geneva, and Mr. Dodge, of New York. To these gentlemen the prince replied that religious tolerance had always been the peculiar attribute of the Russian empire, and appealed in proof of it to the churches and chapels of different creeds which were to be found side by side on the streets of St. Petersburg.

"He admitted, however, that in the cases of those who were already or might become members of the 'Orthodox Church' it was an essential law of the empire that they should continue so. He seemed to think, however, that this was no infringement in any way of religious liberty, and asserted again and again that no charge of intolerance could be maintained against the Russian government. If, however, any alteration was necessary in the law, this, he pointed out with much emphasis, must be left to the judgment and discretion of the Emperor, who would choose his own time and method of doing it."

After this statement Rev. Dr. Steane, one of the members of the English deputation, spoke his piece. It was rather less diplomatic in its tone than those of the gentlemen who had preceded him, and seems to have marred the good effect produced by the other speakers. The doctor insisted that "the right of propagating the creed which we profess, and publicly maintaining it by voice and pen, by preaching, by the circulation of the Scriptures, and by tracts, was an integral part of religious liberty." This theory of religious liberty the prince repudiated with considerable warmth, and he appealed to the multitude of sects in America as a proof that there might be too much religious toleration. The policy of the Russian government had been to put down those sects which inculcated immoral tenets, and as for the rest, (putting his hand before his eyes and looking through his fingers,) he said, "we deal thus with them." At this stage of the proceedings it was evident that Prince Gortschakoff was becoming somewhat impatient; and, after short speeches by Dr. Adams, of this city, and Prof. Von Oosterzee, of Holland, the memorials were handed him. To the one proposed by the European branch of the Alliance he strongly objected, contending that it was not true that the Lutherans of the Baltic provinces were being persecuted by the Greek Church, and refusing to present such a document to the Emperor. The American memorial pleased him better; but it was deemed best to withdraw both documents, and leave it to the prince to make his own statement of what had been said at the interview. This he promised to do; and the deputation retired. The only encouragement given them was an expression of the prince that the Emperor intended, "if he could see his way into it," to establish the liberties of his subjects of different communions on a secure basis.

DR. CHALMERS was wont to say, a house-going minister makes a church-going people; as they are sure to show the courtesy of returning the minister's week-day visits by their Sabbath-day attendance.

GOOD.—A long-winded Scotch clergyman had discoursed at great length, when one of his weary but witty hearers whispered to a friend: "His tow's dune, lang syne, but he's spinnin' awa yet!"

DR. WATTS' CHURCH.—A church has recently been erected in Walthamston, England, on the site of the old meeting house built in 1695, of which Dr. Watts was one of the trustees.

IT IS a fearful thing to see how some men are made worse by trial. It is terrible to watch sorrow as it sours the temper, and works out into malevolence and misanthropy.

THE man who is venial himself believes that everybody has his price.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

A RUSSIAN PAPER states that Barbara Ubryk, the victim of the Cracow convent affair, has died in a lunatic asylum.

THE American Baptist mission in Sweden baptized 831 converts in 1870. They have 216 churches, with 42 pastors and 36 houses of worship. Also a theological seminary at Stockholm, with 14 students.

QUEEN VICTORIA does not enjoy long sermons. She has ordered that the pulpit sand-glass, which indicates the length of time allowed for the sermon in the Royal Chapel, shall be measured for twenty minutes only, instead of an hour, as formerly.

THE Jews of Turin are building a synagogue, which will, it is said, be the finest building of its kind in the world. It resembles in form a Greek temple; and, though the massive tower is rather bizarre, it is an elegant structure, and recalls visions of Nineveh and Thebes.

TWO BRONZE Himyaritic tablets from Aden, sent by Lieutenant Prideaux, have reached the British Museum. They have been translated by the Baron de Maltzan. They record a war carried on by Hanbaz, King of Arabia, against the town of Kaduramelek, and the offering of sacrifices to Athtor and other deities.

THE Presbyterian church in St. Louis of which Dr. Brooks is pastor pays a lady $1,000 a year for her services as city missionary, and finds the expenditure profitable, even in a pecuniary point of view, the labors of the lady having greatly strengthened the church. That is, however, the least valuable result of her labors.

SIX NEW CHURCHES have been organized in the northwestern part of the Presbytery of Texas within the last fifteen months. That at Paris, a town of two thousand five hundred inhabitants, was organized with twenty-five members, three months ago, and greatly needs a minister. That at Winchester, a still younger organization, will probably commence building a house of worship this fall.

THE Welsh Calvinistic Methodists, who form a branch of the Presbyterian family, have held their Annual Conference this year in Liverpool. It was stated, in the course of the proceedings, that the number of chapels is about 1,100: of ordained ministers, nearly 2,000; of communicants, about 100,000; and of adherents, nearly 250,000, or about half of the Welsh-speaking population of Wales.

THE entire body of churches in the United States bearing the name of Lutherans, comprises a little over 2,200 ministers, 3,537 churches, and nearly 400,000 communicants. Of these people the General Synod comprises, according to the latest authentic statistics, 98,077. A body more numerous than this in the membership represented, is known as the General Council in America. The communicants number 124,819, the ministers 692, and the churches 544.

AMHERST COLLEGE, during the fifty years of its existence, which have just closed, has sent forth two thousand graduates. Of these, seven hundred and fifty-one, or more than one-third of the whole number, have become ministers of the gospel; seventy-five have gone as missionaries to the heathen. Probably no other college in the land can show so large a proportion of ministers of the gospel and missionaries of the cross among its graduates.—New York Observer.

THE Rev. J. G. Oncken, of the Baptist Church, undertook, in the year 1833, to enter Germany with the principles and usages of his denomination. At the beginning he encountered great difficulties, his first sermon being preached to an audience of ten persons and in a room with the door locked. But the work thus begun has been carried on with constantly increasing prosperity, until more than fifty thousand persons have been gathered into the church of that denomination.

SIAM.—Good news comes from this distant field. Dr. Dean, a veteran of the Baptist mission, is abundant in labors. Rev. Mr. Partridge, of the same mission, says, speaking of the baptism of two Chinese at Bangkok, and of their examination: "I have never listened to so satisfactory an examination among the Chinese." He adds: "For some weeks past an unusually earnest Christian feeling has been manifested by many of the brethren, and I have felt that we are to receive an outpouring of the Holy Spirit."

M. EDMOND DE PRESSENSE, the well-known minister and writer of the Evangelical Church of France, has been elected to the National Assembly at Versailles. His election is a recognition of the claims of evangelical Protestantism, and a reward for the manly course which he followed during the reign of the Commune. The name of Dr. Pressense stands almost at the head of the poll, while that of a Catholic bishop on the same ticket is at the bottom.

MISSION COLLEGES.—Ceylon, India, with its twelve millions, is soon to have a Christian college, provided some $20,000 more can be raised in this country to endow it. Rev. T. S. Burnell, long time missionary in India, is gleaning here and there among the Congregational churches. A gentleman in Philadelphia has offered to give $10,000 to the Baptist Missionary Society toward the establishment of a school for higher education among the Karens of Farther India. Another in Washington offers $6,000, and one in New York $10,000, provided $100,000 are raised.

CONGREGATIONAL.—At the General Association of Oregon, at Astoria, there were present ten ministers and ten lay delegates. Resolutions, wise and earnest, were passed on the subject of temperance and education. On the Indian question it was voted that our government ought "to treat the Indian like a man; give him his right in fee simple to a farm, if he would take it up and carry it on, as you would any other man." In respect to the management of the church business, "free seats were recommended, and the bringing of free-will offerings to the Lord's house on the Lord's day, as the Lord prospers, and as a good way of raising money for religious purposes."

PRIMITIVE METHODISTS.—From the reports given in at the recent New South Wales district meeting, it appears that the Primitive Methodists in that colony possess 37 connectional churches, and 39 other preaching places; that the church property had cost over £15,000, and that over £10,000 had been collected. The number of ministers in the district was 14; members, 815; Sabbath school teachers, 217; Sabbath scholars, 4,797, and local preachers, 81. In South Australia church accommodation is provided for 12,267 persons, the value of the property being £35,663. Members, 2,187; traveling preachers, 22; local preachers, 191; chapels, 99; other preaching places, 31; Sabbath schools, 99; teachers, 773, and scholars, 4,312.

MORAVIAN MONUMENT.—The Moravians have recently erected a monument at Wyalusing, Pennsylvania, commemorative of the effort made by the Moravian Church one hundred years since, to ameliorate the condition of the aborigines of this country. It appears that from 1765 until 1772 a tribe of Indians at this place were brought under the power of Christianity by Moravian missionaries, and lived in the midst of the wilderness, like a God-fearing people. They subsequently disappeared before the march of hostile white civilization. But the story of their life at Wyalusing is so touching that the Moravian Historical Society resolved to perpetuate their memory with a suitable monument. The exercises at its dedication lasted two days, and were exceedingly interesting and impressive.

THE Irish Presbyterian General Assembly has just been held at Dublin. According to the statement of the new moderator, it represented 680 ordained ministers and licentiates, 554 home congregations, 2,274 elders, 6,053 deacons or members of committees, and more than half a million of adherents, or nearly half the Protestants of Ireland. The Irish Presbyterians stand up stoutly for the system of national education. The congregational receipts for the last twelve months were £113 5*s.*, or £19,616 13*s.*, more than those of the preceding year. The national schools under Presbyterian management numbered 716, and the Sunday schools 1,104. For the sustentation fund, in lieu of the Regium donum, have been contributed, £25,262 17*s.* 17*d.* The contributions are expected to produce £30,000 in future years. The Assembly have sent out two missionaries to labor in Spain.

THE English High Church newspapers are again crying out against the offense of the Queen in worshiping with the Presbyterians while in Scotland. This is the way a writer in the Church Review feels: "It is absurd for us Churchmen to protest against Nonconformity or heresy inside or outside the Establishment—it is worse than absurd, it is cowardly—so long as we have not the courage to open our lips with regard to the greatest offender in this respect. I mean, not to mince matters, the Queen herself. Her majesty spends half her time in Scotland. When there she attends the Presbyterian church at Crathie—that is, for six months in England she is an Episcopalian; for six months the other side of the Tweed she is, so far as our church is in question, a Calvinistic Dissenter. This Calvinistic Dissenter is by our present constitution the supreme governor of our church. The 'Protestant supremacy' is abolished in Ireland. Is it not high time that, for very shame's sake, such 'Protestant supremacy' as this should be abolished also in England?"

Good News.—We learn from Bro. Ahrens, just returned from East Pascagoula circuit, Mississippi Conference, that Zion church, of said circuit, is being blessed with a deep and widespread revival of religion. At the time of his departure there had been already twenty-two conversions and as many accessions to the church. Bro. Philips, preacher in charge, is sanguine of still greater success.

It is with deepest sorrow that we learn of the death of Mrs. Dorliska Powers, wife of Rev. R. M. Powers, of the Alabama Conference. The death of this estimable and devoted Christian lady is a loss to society and the world. Her obituary, which we publish this week, is a fitting tribute to her memory.

East Alabama Male College.—Let not our readers pass by the communication, on our second page, giving an account of this institution. Auburn is becoming more and more eligible as a location, and the East Alabama Male College merits a wide patronage.

Do You Want a Teacher?—The young lady who advertises for a situation as teacher, to be addressed to glass box 2311, and refers to the publisher of the Advocate, we have no hesitation in recommending. In addition to branches named, she also teaches French.

A note from Rev. J. H. Harrison, Kaufman, Texas, states that a revival near that place, just concluded, resulted in the conversion of fifty souls.

Legacy to a Bishop.—The Northwestern Christian Advocate gives the following account of the legacy recently left to Bishop Simpson:

A personal matter which ought not to have gone into the papers until finally determined, is, after all, misstated. T. G. Duncan, lately deceased, left an estate of about $300,000, mostly in bonds and cash Of this, $40,000 are by will left to Bishop Simpson. The family are satisfied with this bequest, but threaten to contest the will on account of some other of its contents. When Mr. Duncan was a poor boy he received attentions and guidance from Bishop Simpson, and the boy's gratitude took substantial form when he grew to manhood and acquired sudden wealth. The will was made in Ireland, where the testator recently died. The papers are stating the amount at $60,000: but our figures are the proper ones. The will, which provides that the residue shall be applied to Methodist benevolent objects, had its hearing in Probate Court at Battle Creek, Michigan, on Friday, August 4.

Prayer.—A little deaf and dumb girl was once asked by a lady, who wrote the question on a slate: "What is prayer?" The little girl took the pencil and wrote the reply: "Prayer is the wish of the heart." So it is. Fine words and beautiful verses said to God do not make real prayer without the sincere wish of the heart.

GOSPEL PROSPECTS.

It is a matter of prophecy that "the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." Before the end comes "this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations." Eighteen hundred years have passed since the Savior commissioned his disciples to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, and yet much of the world is without the knowledge of Christ. God has not held back the promised Spirit, and in his providence he has supplied the means for the widest diffusion of his truth. The people of God have been at fault. They have not done, by any means, what they could; and the slow progress of Christianity is to be set down to this fact, rather than to any want of power in the system itself. While the gospel is the power of God, it must be propagated by the agency of converted men, under the divine guidance and aid of the Holy Ghost.

A great deal, however, has been done toward the salvation of the world; so much, indeed, as to stamp the gospel with the seal of its divine authority. Its triumphs have been so wonderful, in comparison with the means used, that none can reasonably doubt its capacity to speedily embrace the whole earth, if the church were fully alive to her duty. Modern missions are scarcely more than sixty years old, and in this brief period the results are truly surprising. In heathen countries there are to-day about two millions of native Christians, nearly three thousand church buildings, and an army of preachers and teachers numbering many thousands. There are over five thousand preachers, counting native and foreign missionaries. The conquests of a little more than a half century of missionary effort embrace some entire nations, as the Polynesia Islands and Madagascar. Their religious history is one of the most remarkable and encouraging to be found in the annals of Christian enterprise since the days of the apostles. India, China and Japan are opening as never before for the reception of the glad tidings, and the strongholds of pagan superstition are giving way.

One of the most hopeful indications of the times is the spiritual awakening in Roman Catholic countries. The eloquent Gavazzi is thundering at the very gates of the Vatican, the Bible is in Rome, and Protestant evangelists are preaching there to serious and inquiring multitudes. Spain, since the revolution, has become a promising field for evangelical enterprise. The Bible is being distributed throughout the kingdom for centuries shut against it, and the gospel is now preached there without serious obstruction. The South American States are earnestly inviting the missionary to their shores, and the latest reports from those countries indicate a mighty field not only open to the gospel, but "white already to harvest." The revival in Mexico is wonderful in its depth and power, and because it has broken out in the country without the aid of any foreign missionary incitement. The fire, kindled by the Holy Spirit, seems to have burst out spontaneously, and promises to run swiftly until it reaches all classes of the people. It is stated that there are more than twenty thousand Christians in southern Africa; the Christian republic of Liberia is on the western coast of that great continent, and Christian missions are slowly but surely penetrating its vast centers of degradation and barbarism.

With these facts before us—with the additional fact that the Bible is now translated into nearly every known tongue—the outlook is certainly encouraging in the highest degree. In estimating our present resources for spreading the gospel, we are to take into the account the facilities afforded by modern discoveries and inventions, such as the printing press, the steam engine, and the manifold triumphs of science over the natural elements. The highest end of all our progress in science and mechanical inventions is seen in the important connection which it sustains to the salvation of the world. The resources of the church were never so great as at the present time; and while millions are given annually, she can well spare millions more. The spirit of missions is yet but imperfectly developed, but everything promises a steady and large growth in this direction. The base of aggression is the church at home. Her faith and spirituality, her money and her devoted men and women are the appointed means; and never was there so much to stimulate and incite to personal sacrifice and consecrated endeavor.

The end of this century will witness a state of Christianity in the world, of which the present is but the earnest. If the past is any foreshadowing of the future, the millennial revival will then have begun, the martyr spirit will have taken possession of the church, and believers, in the power and spirit of the souls that "were beheaded for the witness of Jesus," shall begin to live and reign with Christ. The prophetic vision is in the process of fulfillment—the earth is to be "filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord." The course of empire takes its way in this direction evidently, and gloriously. The gospel of the kingdom—God's witness to the nations—will ere long be preached throughout the world, and the kingdom itself will be set up in every land. But all this promise calls us to increased zeal, and its realization depends upon our effort and devotion to Christ. We may hasten or retard the blessed consummation. We may contribute to the grand result, and receive the wages of eternal life, or we may lose the opportunity and be made ashamed in the day of his coming. In the winding up of all things, "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars forever and ever."

THE SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY.

This institution is setting out with fresh energy upon its great mission. A plan has recently been set on foot to raise an additional endowment of $50,000. One-half of this amount was promptly secured on the spot, and we have no doubt that the balance will be realized in a short time. The University has ample facilities for the education of young men—facilities which, among Southern colleges, are unsurpassed, except, it may be, by the University of Virginia. It has many living epistles throughout the country—young men in the ministry, and in secular pursuits and professions, who do honor to their alma mater. The sons of itinerant preachers are free of charge for tuition, and good board in messes can be obtained at from $7 to $10 per month. The entire cost for the son of a preacher would be but $100; and for the sons of laymen $150 a year. When the means of a liberal education are so cheap there is no excuse for depriving our Southern boys of the invaluable blessing. Think of it! Only from $400 to $600 for an entire four years' course in one of the best literary institutions of the country!

The religious and moral influences are amply assured by the character of the faculty, and by the fact that the University is the property and under the control of our church. Young men from our pastoral charge have gone there, and have returned with increased piety and zeal for God, and we know that many have there found the pearl of great price, and have been sent out into the world qualified by both piety and learning to bless and adorn society. It is indeed a most impressive and gratifying fact that so large a proportion of the boys sent to this and other of our institutions of learning become hopefully and usefully religious. On religious as well as on literary grounds this college has the strongest claims to the generous aid and patronage of our people. Here are "light and sweetness" combined—the highest education of the intellect united with the best influences to secure a deep and experimental piety.

The trustees did a wise thing when they elected the Rev. A. S. Andrews, D. D., to the presidency of the University. His loss to the pastorate will be very great, but in his new position his great ability as a preacher will have an excellent field, while his ripe scholarship and fine executive talents will accomplish more for the church than in any other sphere. Dr. Andrews is a graduate of Trinity College, North Carolina, and filled a professorship in that institution for several years with ability and success. He came to Alabama to take charge of the Military Institute at Glennville—an institution which, in the course of three years, he brought up to a high point of success and popularity. He was afterward for three years principal of the Columbus Female Institute, where he achieved a wide and enviable reputation as a successful educator. The doctor has been a most successful and competent man in every position he has ever occupied; as professor, president, pastor, preacher, he has met all reasonable expectations. He is now in the prime of life, and possesses large experience, thorough scholarship, and administrative ability of the highest order. Rev. J. S. Moore is an alumnus of Randolph Macon, and also took the degree of A. M. in all the schools of the University of Virginia. There are probably no better scholars in any of our schools. Rev. T. O. Summers, Jr., A. M., M. D., though young in years, has already won quite a reputation as a chemist, and will fill his chair with credit and distinction. Prof. Casey is so well known that it is only necessary to mention that he continues in the chair of languages. Rev. M. D. Rush, as tutor, will fill his place efficiently, as all believe who are personally acquainted with him, and know of his superior attainments as a scholar, and of his worth as a man.

With so fine a prospect of endowment, with such facilities for economical education, and with such a faculty, we see not why the Southern University should not lead all of our colleges in the career of enterprise and prosperity. She has entered the race, prepared to run, and will win. They have in their agent a name that should bring all Alabama and the South to the aid of the institution. Dr. Hamilton has done much, and will do a great deal more; and we are sure that preachers and laymen of the Alabama Conference will respond zealously and generously to the claims which the Southern University has upon them.

EUROPEAN CORRESPONDENCE.

Rome, July 31, 1871.

My Dear Stewards: My last to you left me at Venice, a city which I cannot dismiss from even these cursory letters without further notice. Venice is a curiosity indeed. Its fifteen thousand houses and palaces are situated on three large and one hundred and fourteen small islands, formed by one hundred and forty-seven canals, connected by three hundred and seventy-eight bridges, (most of them of stone,) and altogether about seven miles in circumference. Imagine the streets of New Orleans canals, and in Canal street you will have the Grand canal of Venice, and in the other streets the less wide canals; only for Venice the streets must not be of the length of more than two or three blocks of New Orleans. The walking-streets of Venice, on the several islands, are scarcely the width of a respectable alley in New Orleans, and they are as crooked as they are narrow. One grand square, on the largest island, is the center of the internal trade, and the grand promenade of the city. I did not see a horse in Venice—thousands of people there, doubtless, have never seen a horse. Gondolas on the canals are as thick as vehicles on your streets, and pass and repass as readily. My letters to you cannot be a history, or I should find enough in the history of Venice—identified, as it is now, with places that I have seen, and associated with their story—to interest me in writing, if not you in reading, for the next two months of my absence from you. I write you more of what amuses me, therefore—given up, as my mind is now, to relaxation. The last night of my stay in Venice I was entertained by a grand fete on the Grand canal. A large, pagoda-shaped floating pavilion had been fitted up during the day, which at night was occupied by a band of music and a choir of vocalists, and was illuminated by about three thousand lamps. Pavilion and music together floated up and down the canal, surrounded by innumerable gondolas, which, together with the banks, seemed to me to contain the entire population of the city. Indeed, returning to my hotel long before the fete was ended, I should not exaggerate in saying that I found the streets and the Grand square absolutely deserted.

It would be strange were I to dismiss Venice without mentioning one object of melancholy interest which every traveler is sure to seek. In mentioning it I can use Byron's language appropriately:

"I stood, in Venice, on the Bridge of Sighs,
The prison and the palace on either hand."

There was the window through which the political convict, on his way to death, took his last look of gondola, lagune and sea. A few feet further, and the guillotine had done its work.

From Venice to Florence is nine hours' travel by rail. The Pitti palace, or gallery of paintings, is all of Florence for the traveler. I will describe its paintings. Of course that would be a hopeful task, would it not? There are the masterpieces of immortal artists. What a daub would even my commendation be! What an entertaining variety of letter-writing my criticism! But I, who am I, will at least venture to speak of eyes. I saw eyes there—mild eyes, large eyes, sweet eyes, eyes full of meaning, eyes that did not look at me, and yet they looked themselves in unforgetful impression upon my mind; eyes which the mirror of memory caught to bear away. They were large, dark, hazel eyes, swimming in beauty; eyes of a woman—of a woman holding her infant in her arms; love-beaming eyes, for they were full of the child; eyes in which hope and prophecy expressed their fulfillment—the hope of every Jewish woman, that she should be the mother of the Messiah—prophecy assured of its fact come to pass in the mother's consciousness; seeing eyes, that could see far, far into the future, and that saw the generations that should rise up and call the mother blessed; the eyes of Raphael's Virgin, with the infant Savior in her arms. I have spoken of the art simply. The everlasting recurrence of the Madonna and the Infant, in all these galleries and churches and cathedrals of France, Germany and Italy, is an abomination. Alas! the mother has reluctantly taken far too much the place of her Son in the adoration of these lands; and, in the second place, it is simply superstition to celebrate the Babe of Bethlehem in more than a Christmas hymn, when it is the man, Christ Jesus, who is our Lord, our Savior and our God.

I am in Rome to-day, but I cannot allow this fascinating city to betray my letter into too great length for your patience, and so dare not here introduce it, except to associate it with the three other cities of Italy that I have visited, in respect of a single observation. Our American Sabbath is here an unknown institution. Not all the stores are open, not all the trades indeed at work; but in Rome, as in the other cities, I have seen buying and selling, blacksmiths and plasterers at work on Sunday, and society wearing the same general aspect of worldliness, so unlike the at least formal sanctity of our American Sunday, and the contrast so striking as to draw from me, with fresh zest and meaning to myself, the ejaculation which had almost become trite in our American prayers: "Thank God that I was born in a land of Sabbaths!"

W. V. Tudor.

Bigots ever think others most perversely and willfully wrong-headed.

War makes thieves, and peace hangs them.

CENTENARY COLLEGE.

Mr. Editor: I desire, if you please, to address the friends of Centenary College through your columns.

In accepting the presidency of this institution I am actuated wholly by a sense of duty. I feel myself unequal to the task of administering the government of a college; but the wise and pious men who have elected me think differently. To their opinion I submit, and upon them throw the responsibility of the step.

My decided preference is for the pastorate, and in this field God has given me some success. Centenary College, however, is to the Louisiana and Mississippi Conferences of paramount importance, and if I have the blessing of God I can succeed, as brethren think, in building it up. I am willing to sacrifice preference and take it as my work.

I accept the position as the ordering of Providence, and expect by his help to devote all my energies to its success.

The organization of the faculty is now complete. The professors have proved themselves by years of service to be fully equal to their position, most of them having filled the same chairs in the most flourishing times of the college.

The completion of all the repairs needed upon the college buildings will be accomplished before the year closes. The location is most healthy, the community is made up of excellent people; so that we can heartily commend it to every one desiring superior educational advantages.

Let the friends of the college rally to its support.

There is no nobler charity in our Conferences than Centenary; there is no investment of funds more promising than that bestowed upon her. Men of means, large or small, remember this, and let not this contribution, which would so largely compensate yourselves, the church and the entire community, be perverted to more selfish channels. Rev. B. F. White, of the Louisiana Conference, our devoted and energetic agent, is in the field. He will be glad of contributions of any size. If he fail to reach you, please communicate with me, at Jackson, Mississippi, till the fifteenth of October, after that at Jackson, Louisiana.

Fellow-alumni, in yielding to what I recognize as a Providential call, I have laid myself upon the altars of Centenary. Can I not expect your hearty co-operation? Make and secure from others contributions for the thorough rehabilitation and equipment of the college, and canvass diligently for students.

Brethren of the ministry, you have perhaps the largest interest in the success of our enterprise, and you also occupy a position in which you can be abundantly useful to it. Every member of both patronizing Conferences is an agent of our own college. Now if each one would only assume these obligations, and work heartily up to them, we would soon have an institution second to none in the land. Brethren, in behalf of the thinned ranks of our itineracy, so sadly needing recruits; in behalf of the much-desired elevation of our ministerial standard; in behalf of the moral and intellectual influence of our Zion, I respectfully yet sincerely call upon you, each one of you, to do your duty in this particular.

Above all, let us continually implore the guidance and blessing of Almighty God upon our efforts, and Centenary shall soon become, as she was in former years, the nursing mother of our youth and the benefactress of our land.

C. G. Andrews,
President Centenary College.

Jackson, Miss., Aug. 18, 1871.

Louisiana Savings Bank.—We call attention to the advertisement of the above-named institution. Its officers are gentlemen of recognized integrity and financial skill, and are courteous and obliging in business intercourse. The vault of this bank is the largest and best arranged of any we have seen in the South. We regard the institution as fully entitled to confidence and worthy of patronage. BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

COMMENTARY ON THE NEW TESTAMENT. Intended for popular use. By D. D. Whedon, LL. D. Volume 3. Acts-Romans. New York: Carlton & Lanahan, 1871.

This volume of 402 pages, 12mo, is in the same style and binding as the two preceding volumes. The text differs from them in being broken into paragraphs, while the verses are numbered without any blank lines between. The catch-words in the notes are also in a different type, and better adapted to facilitate reference. A beautiful colored map, exhibiting the line of Paul's travels and the geography of the Acts, stands before the title page, and the text is illustrated by numerous well-executed engravings, charts and drawings. Dr. Whedon's Commentaries on the Gospels have been used and highly appreciated by us, and we are thankful for this addition to the series. The only fault we find is the brevity of the notes. We wish, especially in reference to Romans, that they had been expanded to thrice their present bulk. Instead of one hundred pages, a stout volume should have been given to this greatest of all epistles. Dr. Whedon's style is a model of condensation, point and strength, and his expositions exhibit the fruits of varied learning and ripe scholarship. We are indebted to the publishers for a copy.

THE MISSION OF THE SPIRIT, OR THE OFFICE AND WORK OF THE COMFORTER IN HUMAN REDEMPTION. By Rev. L. R. Dunn. New, York: Carlton & Lanahan, 1871.

This little duodecimo of 303 pages is a beautiful specimen of typography and binding. The subject treated is of surpassing importance, and has been exhibited by the author with learning and clearness. It is a timely publication, and it cannot fail to profit those who read it. We have perused the volume with pleasure, and can heartily recommend it to the earnest and prayerful attention of our readers. It has been received from the publishers.

THE STUDENT'S ELEMENTS OF GEOLOGY. By Sir Charles Lyell, Bart., F.R.S. New York: Harper & Bros., publishers, 1871.

This, it will be remembered, is distinct from the author's "Principles of Geology," is more concise, and is divested of the theoretical discussions and reviews of a controversial character found in that work. The present work is especially adapted to the use of beginners and students, it is copiously illustrated, and is of a convenient size for general use and reference. Our copy is from the publishers, through Ellis & Bro., New Orleans.

HISTORY OF FREDERICK THE SECOND, CALLED FREDERICK THE GREAT. By John S. C. Abbott. New York: Harper & Bros., publishers, 1871.

This is one of the handsomest volumes which the Harpers have issued for a long time—an octavo of 573 pages, printed in clear and large type, and illustrated without stint by engravings of battle scenes, portraits, topographical drawings, scenery and plans of battle-fields and fortifications. Those who had not the perseverance to get through Carlyle's six terrible volumes will be able to read Mr. Abbott's work with delight. Children, as well as grown people, will devour it with avidity, and, besides the pleasure received, they will have obtained a fair and truthful portraiture of the founder of Prussia's greatness. It is in Mr. Abbott's best style, not faultless, but readable and accurate. From the publishers, through Ellis & Bro., New Orleans.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT & Co. are entitled to the thanks of the American public for the splendid style in which they bring out those valuable British monthlies, Good Words, Good Words for the Young, and the Sunday Magazine. The numbers for August are a royal feast of the very best things. The Sunday Magazine continues: America and the Americans; has an article on Perverseness, by Dr Vaughan; another by Dr. Guthrie, the editor, on A Sunday in the Waldensian Valley, and other articles of interest. Good Words for the Young has among other articles: The Marble Cross; Jacqueline, La Folle; A Ramble in the New Forest; The Laird's Stag Ground; and When I was Young. Good Words contains several choice articles, among which we note: The New Reformation and Reformers in Germany; The Religious Aspect of History; Expression in Nature, and the Memorable Morning at Sedan.

GEAR'S ILLUSTRATED MECHANICAL ADVOCATE is a new publication, published in Boston, and devoted to the interest of mechanism, machinery and useful inventions. The first number is handsomely printed, and contains a number of well-executed drawings of machinery.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the July number of the Southern Methodist Home Altar, a guide to Christian perfection. Published at McMinnville, Tennessee. Price, $1 per annum.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL MAGAZINE for September is not behind any previous number in its interest. We heartily commend it to families and Sunday schools. It is ably edited, and should be carefully read by every Sunday school teacher in the church.

THE GALAXY for September has: Agricultural Labor at the South; Perpetual Motion; Pearl Hunting in the Pomotovs, besides other articles, and the usual able and entertaining Scientific Miscellany, Current Literature, Club Room and Nebulæ.

BEECHER'S ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE. The August number is the first we have seen. It is published at Trenton, New Jersey, by Beecher & Sanford. It appears to be well conducted, and is handsomely printed and illustrated.

THE SOUTHERN FIELD AND FACTORY is an excellent monthly, published at Jackson, Mississippi, and devoted to agriculture and manufactures. E. G. Wall, editor. Price, $2 per annum.

PETERSON'S MAGAZINE for September has reached us. The engravings and fashion plates are most exquisitely executed.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

DEAR BRETHREN: Finding it impossible to communicate directly with you, I take this method of obtaining the information I desire. If you will but be kind enough to respond at once, and give me as full answers as you can, I shall be better able to do my duty, and will be very thankful to you. I desire all the information you can give me on the following points:

1. How many children of Methodist families are going to school, and how many are deprived of this privilege?

2. How many schools in your work are Methodist in whole or in part? Specify those that belong to the church, those merely under church patronage, and those altogether private, but taught by Methodist teachers.

3. How many places do you preach where poverty prevents the establishment of a school, but where there are children enough to give large attendance?

4. How many such communities do you know where single teachers could find comfortable homes, and where there is earnest desire for the establishment of schools?

5. Do you think there is enough benevolence in communities adjacent to the destitute to pay a moderate salary for teachers to labor in one or more of these communities?

Now all you can tell me about these matters will be very gratefully received. As it will require only a little exertion on your part to approximate the truth in respect to each item, I shall confidently expect to hear from you before December 1. Fraternally yours,

F. T. RAWSON,
Chairman Comm. on Education.

P. S.—I would be glad also to receive information as to what other churches are doing within your limits, and how our schools, if we have any, compare with others.

THE EVANGELICAL APOLOGIST.

The fourth volume of the Evangelical Apologist commences on the fifteenth of September. We are making arrangements to enlarge the paper to double its present size by January 1, 1872. Will not all our preachers endeavor to secure us a few subscribers among the Germans in their respective fields of labor? The Apologist is the property of the General Conference. Though enlarged, the price will continue to be $1 per annum. Address

A WISE REPLY.—"Would you like to be a judge?" said a gentleman one day to a little boy. The child, after thinking a minute, replied: "I think I should like better still to teach children about Jesus dying to save them. That would make them love and obey him; and if they loved and obeyed him they would not need a judge."

DR. EDWARD EGGLESTON has left the Independent, and become attached to the editorial staff of the Hearth and Home; and Mr. Joseph H. Richards, former business manager of the Evening Post, has joined its publishing department.

Obituaries.

MRS. DORLISKA POWERS, wife of Rev. R. M. Powers, of the Alabama Conference, was born August 29, 1813, and died August 13, 1871. She was the daughter of Mill and Marla Ezell, of Clarke county, Alabama.

My acquaintance with this excellent woman began in 1833, when I was her father's pastor. At that time she was hardly grown to womanhood; but the ease with which she assisted in dispensing the hospitalities of her father's house, her natural and graceful deportment in the social circle, her cheerful, affectionate and untiring devotion to the wants of an aged and afflicted mother, and her punctual, unswerving obedience to the dictates of an enlightened religious conscience, all attracted my attention and marked her off as a young lady possessing all the elements of a very superior character.

Her mind was quick and capacious, her perceptions clear, her convictions earnest, her will firm, her actions prompt; yet her sensibilities were delicate, her temper mild and even, her movements deliberate, and her deportment gentle and winning. That softness and blandness of expression and manner which distinguishes true womanly refinement was beautifully blended in her character, with that earnest feeling and active energy that treat life not as an empty bubble, but as a divine gift full of reality. There was in it enough of pure womanly sentiment to preserve her from all harshness and rudeness; enough of earnest, healthy thought to forbid the presence of slokly sentimentalism, and enough of the fear of God and the love of Jesus to inspire her with the ambition to improve her talents, and to consecrate all her powers to the good of humanity and the glory of God.

With a character so molded and formed she entered Centenary Institute as a pupil, while Rev. R. K. Hargrove was president. The duties this gentleman exacted of his pupils were doterminod by the most elevated and pure ideas of woman's character and capacity and position. But Miss Ezell met every demand made on her intellect or her heart. She was a model for the young ladies, the pride of the president, and graduated with the highest distinction of the institute. From her college life she went immediately back into the school house as a teacher, and managed an academy with success and ease for two years at Choctaw Corner, in her native county. While at this place she accepted a position in her alma mater as teacher, and was followed by the tears and blessings of both her pupils and patrons.

Her stay at Summerfield was short on account of an attack of fever, which brought her nearer the grave. During this sickness the school and all the village were in a most anxious state of suspense, and prayers ascended from the church and from the domestic altars for her recovery. She always believed her restoration was owing to the faith of these prayers.

Fourteen months ago she entered into the bonds of wedlock. She understood the responsibilities of an itinerant's life and calling. She appreciated its privations and hardships; she comprehended its dignity and glory; and, true to the love of her heart and her convictions of duty, she entered upon the arduous and delicate duties of an itinerant's wife. From that hour she was devoted to that work, her highest ambition being to see her husband's usefulness increased, and to help him in his Master's work. As a wife she was faithful, loving and happy. But God saw that her work was done, and called her to her reward in heaven. She spoke of death often, and with great calmness. On Christ she leaned, and, without a fear in her heart, she met the monster, and, by faith in the Savior, conquered him. Her pain was intense and protracted, but no murmur escaped her lips. Only words of trust in God and comfort to her friends was she heard to speak. Her own life was extinguished by an effort to give another life to the world; and she and her babe were buried in the grave together. With the babe at her feet she sleeps, and is at rest.

I preached her funeral discourse; and from my knowledge of her life and character, preached death as a blessing and a privilege.

May God sanctify the bereavement to the good of her family, and sustain her husband with his grace. J. W. RUSH.

THOMAS L. HART was born in Halifax county, Virginia, February 8, 1816, and died at his residence, near Sharon, Madison county, Mississippi, June 13, 1871, aged fifty-five years and four months.

About the year 1838 he came to Madison county, in the state of Mississippi, where he was shortly afterward married to Miss Ann Billingsley. In 1851, under the preaching of the gospel at a camp meeting, he forsook his sins, found peace with God through faith, and "joined himself to the Lord in a perpetual covenant," in connection with the Methodist Church, of which he continued a regular communicant to the time of his death.

Thomas L. Hart was a remarkable man. He worked more nearly up to the full measure of his capacity than almost any one I ever knew. In many enterprises of society there were parts which he did not feel competent to perform; but whatever duty fell to his lot he cheerfully discharged, and was ever ready, as he often expressed it, "to do one man's part." He was faithful and punctual in whatever he undertook. Whether as a member of the board of police of the county, or as a justice of the peace, or as a citizen of the State, or as a member, class-leader and steward of the church, or as the head of a family, he was ever obedient to the behests of duty. He lived with wise reference to this world and the next. In the management of his temporal affairs he was more than ordinarily skillful. Whether one wished to buy or to borrow or to beg, he was prepared to sell or to lend or to give, and to do all three according to the high principles of Christian doctrine. The needy widow or the deserving orphan never asked help of him in vain.

In the church he was ready to sing or to pray or to exhort, and seemed glad to "spend and be spent" in such services to his Maker. His seat in the worshiping assembly was never vacant when it was expected to be filled. In prayer he was always humble and earnest, and frequently fervent and powerful; but singing the songs of Zion seemed to be the favorite exercise of his spirit.

His last sickness was short. He was calm and resigned during his entire sickness, and perfectly rational to the last moment. When he knew that his life had been despaired of, and friends were weeping, and wife and children were sobbing with aching hearts around him, his countenance still wore an expression of undisturbed serenity. Anxious to hear from him some parting words, we said inquiringly: "You seem calm amid the intense excitement around you." "Yes," said he; "but I trust not the calm of stoic indifference. There is a God who rules amid the hosts of heaven and among the children of men. He can give calmness in such an hour as this." As he was habitually a man of few words during his life, he was not otherwise in his last hours. Though we would gladly have heard more, "No anxious cares or fears," "All is well," and "I trust I am dying in the Lord, not out of the Lord," were almost the only, and yet the sufficient, words of comfort and encouragement we were permitted to receive from his departing soul. Such imperturbable serenity amid the alarms of death we never saw. The entire community was surprised, shocked and profoundly grieved at the unexpected announcement of his death. A principal pillar of the church at Sharon has fallen. He leaves a wife and nine children, whose spirits may the Lord comfort. H.

Argyle Bitters—Argyle Bitters.—A FEW WORDS FOR EVERYBODY.—These Bitters, so favorably known throughout the country for the last fifteen or sixteen years, have recently been reduced in price, while their purity and efficacy remain the same as in former years. They are manufactured of pure, full-strength Bourbon Whisky, and medicinal agents selected carefully and solely for this purpose. They are warranted pure and unadulterated.

They are anti-periodic in their effects, and are known to have warned off the baneful influences of malarial poison by their timely use.

They are known to have cured Intermittent Fever by their use alone, and are safe for any age, and are retained by the most delicate stomachs.

They are anti-bacchanalian, tonic, alterative and invigorating, and a certain preventive against Dyspepsia.

It is the safest, pleasantest and most efficacious family medicine now used. au3 1m

WOMAN'S FRIEND WASHING MACHINE.

IT IS THE INVENTION of a Kentuckian, on the Fulling Mill principle, and is operated by rocking.

Washing of clothes is so simplified by this machine that either a man, woman or child can do the work, and do it well.

It will thoroughly WASH, RINSE and BLUE one hundred (100) ordinary Pieces of Clothing in forty-five (45) minutes, without the LEAST WEAR of the clothing, the breaking of a button or the pulling of a thread.

The most delicate Fabrics can be washed with it without the least injury.

While it washes, it bleaches likewise.

It will wash Blankets, and give them a new appearance and feeling.

Its construction is so simple it will last for years with care, and cost less than wash tubs in the aggregate. Any one can repair it, as there are no cog-wheels or cranks to replace.

Price, $12; with Little Giant Wringer, $18.

The LITTLE GIANT WRINGER requires no adjustment to wring either a collar or a blanket. It can be used independent of the machine, if desired. Price, $..

I would ask attention to the following note of the Rev P. M. Goodwyn, of the Louisiana Conference, addressed to the editor of this paper:

"MR. EDITOR: Among your new advertisements I notice one of the 'Woman's Friend Washing Machines,' and if you will allow me I will say a word or two in regard to it, for the benefit of any who might like to have an outsider's opinion of it. Walking down Camp street some days since, I noticed one of these machines in front of a store, and, interested as I always am in everything that promises to be labor-saving and useful, I stopped to examine it. My first thought was: Here is the true principle on which to construct a machine for washing clothes. A day or two after, having consulted my good wife, I ordered one sent to my house; and having had it tested most thoroughly, under my own eye, I do not hesitate to say that its performance comes fully up to all that Mr. Thompson, the proprietor and manufacturer of it in this city, claims for it. The machine does its work, and does it well, in the time specified in the advertisement; and if the person managing it is active in handling clothes, and putting them through the 'Wringer,' it will be found that the job of washing is one that is soon over with. LITTLE HOME-BODY.

BY GEORGE COOPER.

Little Home Body is mother's own pet,
Fairest and sweetest of housekeepers yet;
Up when the roses in golden light peep,
Helping her mother to sew and to sweep.
Tidy as pin in her apron and gown;
Bright as to eyes, of the bonniest brown;
Fingers, and needle so fleet,
Patterns of womanhood, down at my feet!

Little Home-Body is grave and demure,
Wells when you speak of the wretched and poor;
Though she can laugh in the merriest way
When you are telling a tale that is gay.
Lily that blooms in some lone, leafy nook;
Bird that in bower away, moss-sided brook;
Fairies are fine, where the silver dews fall;
Home Girls—these are the best of them all!

Merry's Museum.

A BLIND BOY-MARTYR.

In the reign of "Bloody Mary" of England, when the good Bishop Hooper was about to be burned to death, a blind boy, by much entreaty, prevailed on the guard to bring him to the Bishop. This boy had lately suffered imprisonment in Gloucester for confessing the truth.

After the Bishop had examined him concerning his faith and the cause of his imprisonment, he looked on him steadfastly, while tears stood in his eyes, and said: "Ah, poor boy, God hath taken from thee thy outward sight—for what reason he best knoweth; but he hath endued thy soul with the eyes of knowledge and faith. God give thee grace continually to pray unto him that thou lose not that sight; for thou shouldst then be blind both in body and soul."

The boy's name was Thomas Dowry. How often or how long he had endured imprisonment for truth's sake is not known; but, on his final examination, he was brought before the Chancellor of Gloucester.

He was asked: "Dost thou not believe that, after the words of consecration spoken by the priest, there remaineth the very real body of Christ in the Sacrament of the Altar?"

"No," answered the blind boy; "that I do not."

"Then," said the chancellor, "thou art a heretic, and shalt be burned. But who taught you this heresy?"

"You, Master Chancellor."

"Where, I pray thee?"

"Even in yonder place," replied the boy, turning and pointing with his hand toward where the pulpit stood.

The chancellor again inquired: "When did I teach thee so?"

Dowry answered: "When you preached there" (naming a day) "a sermon to all men, as well as to me, upon the 'Sacrament.' You said the sacrament was to be received spiritually, by faith, and not carnally and really, as the papists have heretofore taught."

The shameless chancellor, who had turned Roman Catholic, answered: "Then do as I have done, and thou shalt live as I do, and escape burning."

The blind boy said: "Though you can so easily mock God, the world and your conscience, yet will I not do so."

"Then God have mercy upon thee," rejoined the chancellor; "for I will read the condemnation sentence against thee."

"God's will be fulfilled," answered the young martyr.

Hereupon another officer of the Romish Church, being moved with the scene, stood up and said to the chancellor: "Fie! for shame, man! Will you read the sentence against him, and condemn yourself! Away, away, and appoint some other to give sentence and judgment!"

"No, Register," said the hardened man; "I will obey the law, and give sentence myself, according to mine office."

He did so. On the very same day the blind boy was led to the place of execution at Gloucester, together with one Thomas Croker, a poor bricklayer, condemned also for the like testimony of the truth. Both of them, in one fire, most firmly and joyfully yielded their souls into the hands of the Lord Jesus.

ONLY A PIN.

I have been reading the story of a pin; and it seems to me so good that I have concluded to write it for the boys and girls who read the Treasury. It was told by a mother to her children; and here it is:

"Only two or three days ago an overseer in the mills found a pin which cost the company about three hundred dollars."

"Was it stolen?" asked Susie. "I suppose it must have been very handsome. Was it a diamond pin?"

"Oh, no, my dear! not by any means. It was just such a pin as people buy every day, and use without thought. Here is one upon my dress."

"Such a pin as that cost three hundred dollars!" exclaimed John. "I don't believe it."

"But mamma says it's a true story," interposed Susie.

"Yes, I know it to be true. And this is the way the pin happened to cost so much:

"You know that calicoes, after they are printed and washed, are dried and smoothed by being passed over heated rollers. Well, by some mischance, a pin dropped so as to lie upon the principal roller, and, indeed, became wedged into it, the head standing out a little way from the surface.

"Over and over went the roller, and round and round went the cloth, winding at length upon still another roller, until the piece was measured off. Then another piece began to be dried and wound; and so on, until a hundred pieces had been counted off. These were not examined immediately, but removed from the machinery, and laid aside.

"When, at length, they came to be inspected, it was found that there were holes in every piece throughout the web, and only three-quarters of a yard apart. Now in each piece there were from thirty-five to forty-five yards; and, at twelve cents a yard, that would count up to about five hundred dollars.

"Of course the goods could not be classed as perfect goods; so they were sold as remnants, at less than half the price they would have brought had it not been for that hidden pin.

"Now it seems to me that when a boy takes for his companion a profane swearer, a Sabbath-breaker or a lad who is untruthful, and a little girl has for her playmate one who is unkind or disobedient, or in any way a wicked child, they are like the roller which took to its bosom the pin. Without their being able to help it, often the evil influence clings to them, and leaves its mark upon everybody with whom they come in contact.

"That pin damaged irreparably forty hundred yards of new print; but bad company has ruined thousands of souls for whom Christ died. Remember, 'one sinner destroyeth much good;' therefore avoid evil companions."—The Child's Treasury

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

To Improve Starch.—To each bowl of starch add one teaspoonful of epsom salt, and dissolve in the usual way of boiling; the fabric thus starched will be considerably stiffer, besides being rendered to a certain degree fireproof.

Tapioca Pudding.—Simmer four ounces of tapioca in a pint of milk ten minutes; then add half a pint of cream, a teaspoonful of pounded cinnamon, four ounces of butter, warmed, same of white sugar, yolks of four eggs, well beaten. A little oil of almonds will improve the flavor. Bake half an hour.

How to Test the Richness of Milk.—Procure any long glass vessel—a cologne bottle or long phial. Take a narrow strip of paper, just the length from the neck to the bottom of the phial, and mark it off with one hundred lines at equal distances; or, if more convenient, and to obtain greater exactness, into fifty lines, and count each as two, and paste it upon the phial, so as to divide its length into a hundred equal parts. Fill it to the highest mark, with milk fresh from the cow, and allow it to stand in a perpendicular position twenty-four hours. The number of spaces occupied by the cream will give you its exact percentage in milk without any guesswork.—Mississippi Agriculturist.

The Origin of Dancing. Egypt claims to be the inventor of dancing, as well as of the science of geometry. The legend ascribes the honor to Alethus, the Egyptian Mercury, who, observing that music at sacrifice naturally moved the body, reduced the motions of the feet as the Apollo did the speech. One of the most famous of their dances was the astronomical dance round an altar, which was supposed to represent the sun, while the priests around it were the individual planets; their movements were, as befitted the sacred occasion, solemn and stately. In later and more civilized times the government, dreading the effect of public and self-practiced dancing upon a people naturally much given to licentiousness and immorality, forbade the higher classes to learn the art, and permitted persons of the lowest caste to take it up as a regular and recognized profession. Grace of posture and movement was the chief end attained, and they danced to the sound of the harp, lyre, pipe and tamborine, and in the streets even to the drum. According to Wilkerson a primitive form of the modern ballad, and especially the step of the pirouette, delighted an Egyptian party upward of three thousand five hundred years ago. Their dresses were transparent, and sometimes they appear to have danced entirely naked. The dance was often supplemented by gymnastics, and, among the inferior order of performers, tended toward the species of pantomime and dumb show.

The Farm and Garden.

Red Clover in the South.—All old readers of Southern agricultural journals will remember the very decided success, fifteen or twenty years ago, of Colonel Croom, near Greensboro, Alabama, in raising red clover; and we have often since seen this fine grass growing in many places from Georgia to Texas. The Marion (Alabama) Commonwealth of June 7 has the following: "There was left in our office last Friday a stalk of red clover measuring four feet and three inches in length, grown on the plantation of that clever man and good farmer, Captain Carlos Reese, three miles south of Marion. This clover was planted last November; yet our people have taken up and hugged to their bosoms the notion that nothing is to be expected from clover until the second year—and they will die entertaining that false idea, unless they do as Captain Reese has done, plant and see for themselves. Clover is a quick and profitable growth, but some folks seem to think that they can afford to make cotton and sell it for twelve and a half and thirteen cents, and 'send off' and pay from one to two and a half cents a pound for clover, hay and timothy to feed their stock, and think they profit by the arrangement. To all such we can only say: 'Where ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise.' There are but few things that our people actually need that cannot be raised in this bright, sunny South, and we urge, we beseech, our planting friends in the future to raise more corn, wheat, potatoes, peas, clover, rye, oats and barley, and let cotton 'go where the woodbine twineth,' or 'where Ward's ducks went,' if necessary—but raise your own supplies. Then will our beloved, down-trodden country prosper—not before."

Harvesting and Storing Onions. The proper time to harvest onions is when the tops have turned to a brown or yellow color, and fallen down. In the Middle and Northern States this usually takes place in the latter part of August, or in September. They should be pulled by hand or with a wooden rake, and then allowed to remain on the ground three or four days to dry. After they are dried, if large quantities are to be stored, they may be thrown into piles containing two or three bushels, and left in this condition two or three weeks, covering them with caps in case of rain. They should then be opened and allowed to dry two or three days before storing.

After cutting off the tops about an inch from the bulb, the latter may be taken to bins in the storehouse or cellar, and kept for market or for winter use. In latitudes south of New York they may be kept in bins, in chambers or on lofts, piled a foot deep, and covered a foot and a half deep with straw or hay, and filled in about the sides of the bins, where spaces should be left, to the same thickness. They should not be disturbed till wanted for market in the spring. Any freezing is an injury, but a little freezing will not injure them materially, if they are not permitted to thaw till the freezing season is past. In latitudes north of this line they must be kept in bins in the cellar. The cellar should be dry, cool and airy.

The Vegetable Garden.—Attention should now be directed toward securing a good crop of turnips. To this end sowing should be made at intervals of ten days, during the present and first of next month. Cow-penned ground, rather sandy, which has been broken up deep at intervals during the summer, seems best adapted to this plant.

The purple top is the earliest, and one of the most certain varieties cultivated at the South.

The Norfolk has generally succeeded well in our experience.

The seven top, or "Johnnie Reb," is a good variety to stand the winter, as its bulb grows entirely under ground. It furnishes a bountiful supply of "greens" in the spring.

A second crop of beets may be planted now; if your soil is rich and well prepared they will make good roots for winter use.

Cabbages may still be set out for winter use; insert deep in the ground as can be done without covering the bud.

If a second crop of Irish potatoes has not been started, the first of this month is not too late to plant them. Potatoes which have been kept dry for three weeks before planting will come up readily if the ground is moist. Take care to plant the whole potato, for cut ones are apt to dry up or rot. Some of the largest Irish potatoes we ever saw were planted on the tenth of August, in Marshall county, Mississippi, and matured before frost.—The Field and Factory.

Fruit and Nuts for All.—Do urge the people, Mr. Editor, to plant berry bushes as well as fruit and nut trees. Many and many a plantation and farm are as guiltless of apples, pears, peaches, figs, plums, cherries, grapes, blackberries, strawberries and raspberries, pecan nuts, walnuts, chestnuts, hazlenuts and hickorynuts, as if they cost millions, or would not grow on our soil. Cannot you manage to din into their ears that "places" with these luxuries growing on them are twice as valuable as those "bare fields." Your valuable magazine gives you much influence. Will you not exert it in favor of these home comforts? Cotton, corn and potatoes are the only things thought of—even groundnuts are neglected. A little trouble now would give the farmer an abundance, and leave more for the children coming on; each man should plant trees, for are we not sitting under the shade of those planted by hands long since laid to rest? We shall soon follow, and should leave fruit and shade for the next generation.—Rural Carolinian.

To Make Barren Trees Fruitful. The most effectual mode of bringing barren trees into fruitfulness is by root pruning. Dig a trench entirely around the tree, at a distance of a few feet from the trunk—say from three to six feet, according to the size of the tree—digging deep enough to cut off all the roots. Let the spade be sharp, so as to make a clean, smooth cut. When this work is completed, shovel the dirt back into the trench, leaving the surface level and smooth. If the soil be not sufficiently rich, a little well-rotted stable manure, mixed with the returned earth, will be of advantage. The work should be done in the fall or early winter. The philosophy of root pruning is thus stated by Downing: "It has the effect of at once cutting off a considerable supply of the nourishment formerly afforded by the roots of a tree. The leaves, losing part of their usual food, are neither able to grow as rapidly as before, nor to use all the nutritions matter already in the branches; the branches, therefore, become more stunted in their growth, the organizable matter accumulates, and fruit buds are directly formed. The energies of the tree are no longer entirely carried off in growth, and the returning sap is employed in producing fruit buds for the next year."—C. C. Langdon, in the Field and Factory.

Potato Flour.—Few persons in the United States are aware of the demand for farina, or potato flour, and of the almost unlimited extent of the market that can be found for this product, which is simply the dry, evaporated pulp of the ordinary potato, the whiter and more free from black specks the better. It is used for sizing and other manufacturing purposes, and with the aid of precipitation and acids is converted into starch. In Europe it meets a large and increasing demand, in its primitive state, as potato flour; and in Lancashire alone twenty thousand tons are annually sold, and as many more would be taken if put into the market. When calcined it is used largely for silk-dressing and other purposes. At this time the quotation for potato farina in Liverpool is a little over four cents a pound, while wheat flour is about two and one-sixth cents a pound; so that the potato flour is worth nearly double that of the wheat at the present rate. Consignments to Liverpool are solicited by the brokers there, who promise to take all that can be furnished.—Agricultural Report.

Salt for Bees.—I have been raising and managing a small stock of bees for the last ten years, and I find the use of salt a great benefit to them. I salt each hive regularly once a week as I do my cattle. One tablespoonful of salt to each stand of bees will do. The hive must be raised about one and a quarter inch high from the bench or stand. This enables the bees to have free access to the salt that I throw or scatter under the hives. The hives are raised from the bench by placing a small piece of stone under each corner. I never have had the moth to trouble my hives since I have adopted the plan of salting my hives. The bee-raiser will find it of great benefit to salt his bees once a week. It saves bees the labor of hunting salt in the busy part of the season.—A Practical Farmer in Christian Observer.

Pretty.—Washington had been visiting a lady in his neighborhood. On leaving the house a little girl was directed to open the door for him. He turned to the child and said:

"I am sorry, my little dear, to give you so much trouble."

"I wish, sir," she replied, "it was to let you in."

A true religious instinct never deprived man of one single joy; mournful faces and a somber aspect are the conventional affectations of the weak-minded.—Ballou.

A wise man has said: "Though a man without money is poor, a man with nothing but money is still poorer."

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

J. W. Blackman's
COMMERCIAL COLLEGE,
61 CAMP STREET,
Corner Commercial Place, N. O.

Open day and evening the entire year.

Penmanship, Book-Keeping, Mathematics and Languages are practically taught by experienced professors. Persons from fifteen to fifty years of age attend. Instruction given privately to each student, who has a separate desk to himself, and is put through a thorough and systematic course of study to qualify him for the situation he intends to fill. Persons who have neglected their education are here speedily prepared for business. Students from the country may obtain board in the family of the principal.

Terms—Twenty per cent. less than other Commercial Colleges in this city. Cost of full Commercial Course only $100. Average time, three to four months.

The principal has been a professional teacher in New Orleans since 1851.

EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE,
VIRGINIA.

This institution, located on the great railroad line from New Orleans to Baltimore, among the mountains of Virginia, is offering peculiar advantages to those who are seeking a thorough collegiate or business education. Two Hundred and Thirty Dollars will cover the expenses for an entire collegiate year of ten months, for Tuition, Board, Fuel, Room-rent, Washing and Contingent Fees. For the character of the school, please consult our own Alumni, or any of the Bishops or of the leading men of the Southern Methodist Church, or the Professors of the University of Virginia, who have authorized this reference. Our Fall Session begins AUGUST 17, 1871. If you desire a catalogue write to

HIWASSEE COLLEGE.

The twenty-second annual session of this school will begin on the First Monday in August, 1871. The entire expense for board and tuition, for forty weeks, will be $150. The board is of the best description that the country affords, being furnished by the steward from his own farm and prepared by the hands of his own family. We had boys from five different States last year, and not a word of complaint was ever made on this point, which is often the subject of just complaint at boarding schools. The fare is peculiarly grateful to Southern boys, who require a more generous diet when they change their climate.

The manner of governing the school is paternal, as the entire exemption from temptations in the surrounding country renders the discipline easy. The institution is under the care of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, but under my own control. The young men attending the school last year were, without exception, moral and religious. Young men preparing for the ministry may receive tuition free, and in certain cases can obtain lower rates of board. Regular services are held in the College Chapel.

The location of the school is near Madisonville, Monroe county, East Tennessee, in the midst of a fruitful and beautiful country, and surrounded by a thrifty and intelligent population. No negroes live in the neighborhood, all the laborers in the fields and servants in the families being white. The citizens of Monroe county were true to the South in her late struggle, and have adhered to Southern churches.

Students arriving by the East Tennessee and Virginia Railroad will get off at Sweetwater, forty miles south of Knoxville, whence they will find conveyance to the college, seven miles distant.

Our post office is Madisonville, Tennessee.

F. M. GRACE, President.

P. S.—1. Families from the South will find good board in the neighborhood, and a delightful summer retreat at White Cliff Springs, sixteen miles distant from Madisonville. For information on this point parties may address H. A. McKenzie, steward of the college. The health of the country is proverbial.

P. S.—2. Younger boys may be safely sent to this school, as all are under the immediate oversight of the principal, both when in school and when at the boarding house.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

WHITWORTH FEMALE COLLEGE,
Brookhaven, Mississippi.

On the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad, one hundred and twenty-eight miles from New Orleans, and fifty-seven miles south of Jackson, Mississippi.

The location is healthy. The instruction in all the branches, including French and Music, is thorough. During the past term there were one hundred and eighty-two pupils. The Faculty consists of four gentlemen and six ladies. The total expenses for board, tuition in English, Latin and Greek, English text-books, school-room stationery, medicines and medical attention, for the term of forty weeks, amount to $263. The next session will open on the twentieth of September, 1871.

Catalogues can be obtained from R. J. Harp, 112 Camp street, New Orleans, Louisiana, or from the president.

OAK GROVE ACADEMY.

The exercises of the above institution were opened on Monday, JULY 31, 1871.

Students can at this institution, at comparatively no expense, prepare themselves to enter the senior classes of the best colleges, where they can acquit themselves with as much honor as those who have spent $1,500 to $2,000 in the acquisition of an education.

TUITION PER TERM OF FIVE MONTHS.

First class	$8 25
Second class	10 00
Third class	12 50
Fourth class	15 00

Board and washing can be obtained in good families, at $2 per week. Students wishing to board themselves can have cabins free of charge.

The locality of the institution being in one of the most healthy portions of East Tennessee, certainly recommends itself to the young men of the South, who should always remember that while they are cultivating that higher type of their nature, they should also be preserving or restoring a sound constitution, without which there can be no great enterprises.

CORONA.

Corona strives to justify its name,

THE CROWN OF SCHOOLS

for the higher education of women, by judiciously combining in its scheme the special points of excellence found in all other schools. It aspires to superiority in all departments—literary, scientific, æsthetic, domestic and hygienic. The principal, after spending nearly twenty years in studying educational questions and in the practice of teaching, is devoting his whole mind and heart to the task of maintaining not the largest but the best school in the South. His system of education comprehends such an harmonious development of all the powers of mind, heart and body as will fit the young lady for the faithful discharge of the highest and lowliest duties of life.

The methods of instruction are those approved by the foremost educators of the age. The very best aids are employed for imparting real knowledge, such as maps, charts, globes, specimens and apparatus of all kinds. There is no role—learning of the mere letter of text books—no cramming of the mind with disconnected facts.

Assistant teachers of known scholarship and well-tried aptness in teaching are engaged. In physical science and modern languages instruction is given by the eminent professors in these departments of Cumberland University.

The course of study is very extensive. It is arranged into schools after the plan of the best universities, and pupils are graduated in such schools as they or their parents may elect. Music on piano, harp and guitar.

In the boarding department young ladies enjoy all the comforts of an elegant home. The rooms are large, well ventilated, neatly furnished and newly carpeted. Fires in rooms whenever wanted. The table is bountifully supplied with wholesome food.

The location is most favorable in point of health, social refinement and religious privileges.

The health and physical development of boarding pupils are promoted by a system of gymnastic exercises, under a competent teacher, with dumb-bells, wands, rings and Indian clubs, without charge.

The expense of boarding and regular tuition is $250 or $200 a year. Extra branches at usual rates. The annual session always begins on the first Monday of September.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR.
A Purely Vegetable Compound
FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF
RHEUMATISM AND GOUT

The subscriber takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered inestimable relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Rawson, Delhi, Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Bradley, Floyd, Louisiana.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to dread on of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia, from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

New Orleans Christian Advocate.

This paper has always been well known in this community as

The Very Best Advertising Medium

by which the business men of the city could bring their merchandise, trades, professions, and the like, before country readers. This is easily understood when it is remembered that FOUR HUNDRED PREACHERS, scattered throughout the Mississippi, Alabama and Louisiana Methodist Conferences, are all more or less active agents for the paper; and when it is also remembered that our paper circulates among a large class of people who seldom see any other New Orleans paper.

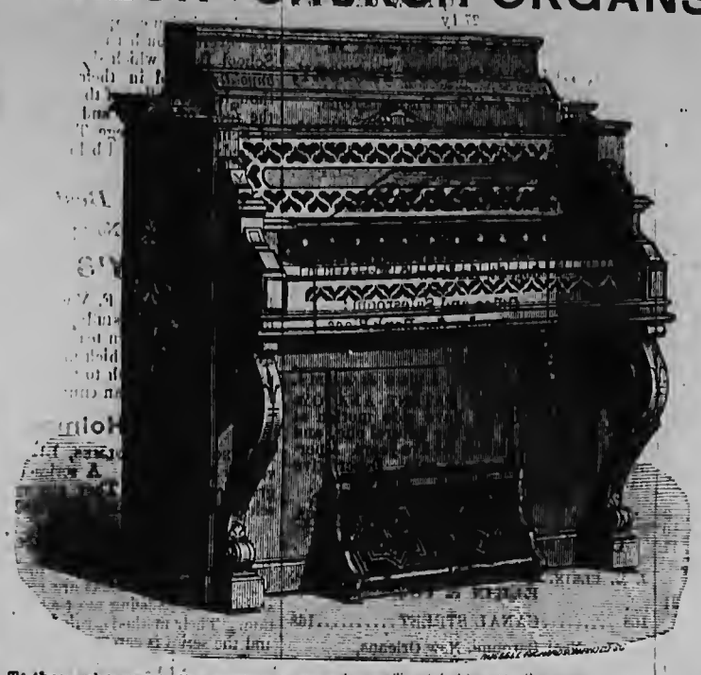
ROBERT J. HARP,

NO. 112 CAMP STREET, NEW ORLEANS,

AGENT FOR THE SOUTHWESTERN STATES FOR THE SALE OF

GEORGE WOODS & CO.'S

PARLOR And CHURCH ORGANS.



To those who are at all acquainted with the trade in musical instruments, or those conversant with the improvements that during the last twenty years have been made in that most popular of instruments, the Reed Organ, it is entirely superfluous to speak of the reputation or ability of the firm of GEO. WOODS & CO. We will however, mention, for the benefit of any who may be without information on the subject, that the senior partner, Mr. Geo. Woods, has been engaged in the manufacture of Organs for many years, that he is the inventor of many valuable improvements and ingenious devices, and that his confrères in the business are all men extensively known to the trade as being possessed of uncommon skill, taste and experience in their different branches.

In offering our instruments to the notice of all interested in music, we merely ask a comparison between those of our manufacture and those of others, and briefly mention upon what points in our instruments we base our claims of superiority to the productions of our competitors in business:

QUALITY OF TONE.

Its Purity, Clearness and Brilliancy, Extraordinary Power,
CAPACITY FOR VARIETY, AND BEAUTY OF EFFECT,

Which is owing in a great measure to the excellence of our famous SOLO STOPS,

VOX HUMANA AND VOX CELESTE,

which differ materially in their construction and effects from other Stops of the same or similar name.

Our MANUAL SUB-BASS; smooth as well as effective in quality of tone.
PATENTED INVENTIONS AND INGENIOUS DEVICES.
Our method of employing SOLO SETS in separate WIND CHESTS.
IMPROVED VALVES AND WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.
THOROUGHNESS OF CONSTRUCTION AND ELEGANCE OF DESIGN.

All material used in the construction of our instruments will be found to be strictly of the best quality. Our workmanship will also be found to be of a very high order.

The Cases are constructed with a proper regard to the laws of sound, having acoustic chambers at the ends of the case.

The Fronts of Keys are Ivory, and are not of Holly wood.

The Carvings are hand-made.

The Stops are of Ebony and Ivory, engraved by hand.

Special attention is called to these Organs. Price Lists and Catalogues, containing full particulars of the many numbers, sizes, varieties and prices—ranging from $110 to $650—will be mailed to any one on application.

☞ All instruments will be thoroughly examined and shipped in good order. Therefore parties can safely order without coming to select. Address

The College of the Holston Conference.

THE TWELFTH ANNUAL SESSION of this well-known institution will begin OCTOBER 1, 1871, and continue forty weeks.

FACULTY.

R. W. JONES, M. A., of the University of Virginia, President.

Rev. W. G. E. CUNNYNGHAM, D. D., Professor of Moral Philosophy and Belles Lettres.

Miss MAGGIE J. TUCKER, Preceptress.

Miss ANNIE M. RHODES, Drawing and Painting.

F. L. FUNK, Professor of Music, with a full corps of assistants in each department.

Board and English tuition, for term of twenty weeks, from $95 to $105.

No extra charge for Latin or Greek. Charges for the other branches moderate. All charges to be paid in advance.

The course of instruction embraces every subject of a solid and finished education.

The system of instruction is that of the University of Virginia, at which the President graduated as Master of Arts.

The college buildings are substantial brick structures, commodious, comfortable and elegant.

The grounds have been laid out with exquisite taste, and present an appearance of surpassing loveliness.

All the associations and surroundings are such as to cultivate the taste and refine the feelings.

Abingdon, situated on the Virginia and Tennessee railroad, eight miles from Emory and Henry College, and fifteen from Bristol, amid the mountains of southwestern Virginia, is noted for the beauty and grandeur of the surrounding scenery, a balmy atmosphere, general healthfulness and refined society. Mineral waters abound in its vicinity.

Parents in the South cannot find a place in the United States where the influences are more favorable for the perfect development of the physical constitution, and where educational advantages of a higher order are afforded.

For catalogue or any additional information address the President or

DR. CUNNYNGHAM.

DRILL OF THE MILITARY SCHOOL.

Located in a quiet, healthy country, so far distant from town as to place the young men beyond the manifold temptations which ordinarily attend college life.

The students all board in the Barracks, and are kept under rigid military discipline. There are no temptations to extravagance or dissipation.

This school has combined the discipline of the camp with the comforts and pleasures of home life, which can hardly be found elsewhere.

Scientific.

THE Richmond and Louisville Medical Journal says that, in general, the dose of carbolic acid is one grain to an ounce of water. As a gargle, one or two grains to an ounce of water. As an injection, one grain to four ounces of water. As a lotion, fifteen grains to an ounce of water. As an ointment, sixteen grains to an ounce of lard. As a liniment, one part to twenty of olive oil. As a plaster, one part of carbolic acid to three parts of shellac.

THE use of nitrous oxyd gas, says Dr. Mclaren, in the Edinburg Medical Journal, should be avoided in all cases of diseases of the lungs in which the breathing is much embarrassed, and when there is evidence of either serious brain or heart disease. One of its greatest advantages as an anæsthetic is its safety, only two fatal cases having been reported; but there is a disadvantage in the rapidity of the patient's recovery from its effect.

PALM OIL.—Palm oil is prepared from the fruit of the palm tree as follows: On its arrival at maturity the fruit is plucked and thrown into a heap on the ground, where it is left for about a month. Fermentation is thus produced. When this is sufficiently advanced the mass is thrown into large iron vats and boiled with water, the fruits being crushed from time to time. After prolonged boiling they are pounded in rude mortars formed from trunks of trees, the kernels are removed and the shells again boiled. The oil then floats on the surface of the liquid and is collected with large wooden spoons. This oil is solid at ordinary temperatures in our climate. Its color is reddish yellow, and it is esteemed in proportion to the depth of its color. Its odor resembles that of the iris or the violet.

PETROLEUM IN THE CAUCASUS.—The petroleum deposits in the region of the Caucasus are very remarkable. For many centuries the springs have been known, and the oil has been collected by skimming. On the eastern shore of the Caspian twenty thousand such wells, all of them quite shallow, are now skimmed. The wells are often close to each other, and the sinking of a new one does not affect the productiveness of another near it. One sunk in 1863, by the very side of another, which for centuries had produced three thousand five hundred pounds per day, yielded forty thousand pounds per day, without affecting the first. The American method of boring wells has lately been introduced, and flowing wells have burst forth from a depth of 250 feet, which have maintained a jet from forty to sixty feet high.

SHAD IN THE HUDSON RIVER.—The propagation of shad in the Hudson river has been prosecuted under the New York Commissioners of Fisheries this year with energy and success. The number of young shad hatched and turned into the river may be counted by millions. The advance of the season, causing the temperature of the water to rise above eighty degrees Fahrenheit, terminates the hatching season. The place selected for operations was Mull's fishery, some ten miles below Albany. To that place the agents employed, with the requisite apparatus, repaired, and encamped about the middle of May and remained till the sixth of July. Owing to the increase of shad by the work of former years, there was less difficulty in obtaining the parent fish for propagation. The catching of the shad and the procuring the eggs is all accomplished in the night—generally between the hours of nine and two.

Mr. Green, who has given his personal attention to the operation at Mull's, reports that on the night of May 15 he caught forty shad, from three of which were obtained 60,000 eggs. The temperature of the water ranged from sixty to sixty-eight degrees. On the twentieth he obtained from seven shad 140,000 eggs. On several occasions over 300,000 eggs were thus secured in a single night. On the fifth of July the water was above eighty degrees and no shad were taken. About half a million young shad were turned loose, and this closed operations on the Hudson for the season. The total number of eggs taken was 8,335,000, from which 7,823,000 shad were produced and turned into the river. Three years from this spring these shad will be large enough for market, and at that time the catch in the Hudson will probably be so large that shad may be sold at a very low price. Enough has already been done in the way of shad culture in the Hudson, in the past two seasons, to make a perceptible difference in the yield in the two succeeding seasons.

CONSCIENCE is a sleeping giant; we may lull him into a longer or shorter slumber; but his starts are frightful and terrible in the hour when he awakes.

You cannot be happy, but as God makes you holy.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have no improvement to notice in the general market since our last report. Sugar has been in some request, but with trifling receipts and a light stock the movement has been of limited extent. Operations in flour have been to a fair extent at easier prices, and extras have given way 25 to 50c. ₱ barrel. Corn has been steady at the previous reduction. Pork has sold at a further falling off, in round lots, of 25 to 50c. Bacon has also ruled in favor of buyers, showing a net decline of ¼ to ½c. ₱ lb.

Our accounts from the country are more discouraging, both as to the general condition of the crop and the caterpillars, which have already caused considerable damage in some localities. There is now no longer any doubt of the appearance of the real army worm, to an extent which creates general alarm. We have had no further receipts of the new crop.

The river is 13 feet 9 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the eighteenth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales.	1,350
Lake		4
Mobile		917
Texas		219
Total		2,490

On Saturday the demand fell off and the sales were confined to 400 bales, taken by three buyers, at about previous rates, but with a tendency to easier prices. There was some inquiry at concessions to which factors would not submit. On Monday the movement was resumed with more spirit, and 1,200 bales changed hands, partly at easier prices, but without requiring any reduction in quotations except ⅛c. in the outside rate for strict good ordinary. On Tuesday, under encouraging telegrams from New York and discouraging crop accounts, factors were more stringent in their pretensions, and in some cases realized prices showing an improvement of ⅛ to ¼c., but without establishing a general advance. The business embraced 1,000 bales.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 2,600 bales.

The receipts at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 1,442,587 bales, against 1,140,792 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 1,101,194 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 881,540 bales to Great Britain, 209,492 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 208,000 to France.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

STUGAR.—There is little or nothing doing. Now and then small sales are made to the city trade at 9½ to 10⅜c. for common, 10½ to 10⅝c. for good common to fair, 12c. for prime, 12½c. for choice, and 12⅞ to 12¼c. for yellow clarified. Refinery yellow clarified is quoted at 12¼ to 12¾c., and white at 13 to 13½c. ₱ lb.

MOLASSES.—The small lots coming in from plantations are selling at 15 to 25c. for poor fermenting, and 25 to 35c. for good fermenting. Fair refinery refuded is selling at 35 to 40c., prime 50c., choice 60 to 65c.; golden syrup 90c. to $1 ₱ gallon.

PORK.—The market is very dull, and prices are still lower. On Friday, not previously reported, 350 barrels choice and full-weight mess sold at $13.50, and on Saturday 200 barrels do. at $13.50 ₱ barrel. Holders are asking $13.75 ₱ barrel, without buyers at that price. It is retailing at $14.25 to $14.50 ₱ barrel.

BACON.—The market is very dull and unsteady, and prices are irregular and lower. There were sales on Saturday and Monday of 100 tierces, in small lots, at 8½ to 8⅝c. for clear sides, and 20 tierces choice sugar-cured hams at 16c. ₱ lb. On Tuesday 10 casks shoulders sold at 6⅞c., 30 boxes clear sides at 8½c., and 30 tierces choice sugar-cured hams at 15, 15¼ and 15½c. ₱ lb.

DRY SALT MEAT.—On Monday a lot of 6 casks shoulders sold at 5¾c. ₱ lb.

LARD.—The market is quiet, with a fair stock on hand. Tierces are quoted at 10¾ to 10¾c., kegs 11¼ to 11¾c. On Saturday 25 tierces refined sold at 10¾c., and on Monday 125 kegs refined at 11¼c. On Tuesday 40 tierces refined sold at 10¾c. ₱ lb.

BREAKFAST BACON is dull at 16c. ₱ lb. On Tuesday 10 boxes Western sold, in two lots, at 9¾c. ₱ lb.

MONETARY.—Gold, 111¾ to 112.

American silver half dollars, 106½ to 107½, and Mexican dollars at 2 to 2½ per cent. premium in gold.

The stock market has continued inactive, the only sales reported being 100 shares Louisiana Levee Company on Saturday at $8.50, and 100 at $8.75; 250 do. on Monday at $8.75, 100 at $9.25, and 100 (a resale) at $9.50; and about 200 same on Tuesday at $9.25 to $9.75 and $10.87½, 5 People's Bank at $63.50, and 50 Barra Barra Copper Mine at $8.25.

On Saturday $3,700 City Appropriation Certificates sold at 95½, and on Tuesday $4,300 at 94 to 95¼.

Clarksville Female Academy,

CLARKSVILLE, TENNESSEE.

THE FALL SESSION of this school opens SEPTEMBER 1, 1871. The Faculty is able and experienced, and the course of study thorough and practical.

The character of the school may be known by consulting the Bishops and leading men of the Southern Methodist Church.

It is located in an elevated, healthy country, and in the midst of a people of cultivation and refinement. It is the first high ground after passing the miasmatic regions of the South.

The school for years has had an average matriculation largely over two hundred pupils, many of whom were from various Southern States.

The expenses of an entire term, for English tuition, board, lights, fuel, furnished rooms, washing and servants' attention, will not exceed $125. Apply for catalogues.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical,

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of entirely unsectional, unpartisan, unpolitical, and in their teaching should not be offensive to the thought and feeling of the Southern people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. MAURY, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simplicity of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in the selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

COMPRISES, ALSO,

De Vere's French Grammar, Readers, etc.,

By M. SCHELE DE VERE, LL.D., Professor of Modern Languages in the University of Virginia.

Gildersleeve's Latin Series,

By B. L. GILDERSLEEVE, Ph.D., LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

Carter's Elements of General History,

By Rev. J. P. CARTER, A.M., of Baltimore, Maryland.

Holmes' English Grammars,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

LeConte's Scientific Series,

By the Professors LECONTE, late of the University of South Carolina.

Johnston's English Classics,

By R. M. JOHNSTON, A.M., late Professor of Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres in the University of Georgia.

To which list other books in other departments will early be added.

Send for our full ILLUSTRATED DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE, which will be mailed free to any teacher or school officer. Liberal terms given for introduction.

VOL. XVII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, AUGUST 31, 1871. NO. 33.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

MONTGOMERY, Aug. 23.—There is no longer any doubt about the appearance of the army worm in unusual numbers through the richest cotton counties of Alabama. The rains now falling will aid their development.

ST. AUGUSTINE, FLA., Aug. 24.—The steamship Lodona was wrecked seventy-five miles south. Twenty persons lost. The mess boy, who was picked us yesterday, hrings the news.

The vessel is a total wreck. The survivors are the captain's son, first and second mates, chief and first assistant engineers, fireman, four sailors and mess boy.

SELMA, ALA., Aug. 25.—The army worm commenced operations on the twenty-first in this vicinity, and are now committing fearful ravages. The cotton crop will be materially shortened.

WILMINGTON, Aug. 25.—For two days we have had reports here that yellow fever prevailed in Charleston. Information was received to-day which removes all doubt as to its existence there, and, it is feared, in epidemic form.

A letter received this morning from one of the most prominent clergymen of Charleston states that a malignant type of yellow fever is there, and that the writer has himself seen four cases.

Information from another source states that the disease is there and thought to be spreading.

WASHINGTON, August 27.—Dispatches from Captain Hall, commanding the Polaris, dated Halsteinberg, the first instant, were received at the Navy Department to-day, reporling the arrival of the expedition there July 31, where they were agreeably surprised at finding the Swedish expedition, consisting of a brig and a small steamer, under command of F. W. Vonotter, which had been to Disco and Uppernavik, and is now on its return homeward.

With the exception of a gale which broke upon the Polaris, on the evening they left Fiscano, and July 28, a gale that made the sea, with ils icebergs all around them, one of wild grandeur, with Greenland's icy mounlains, along which they were coasting, they experienced no danger whalever.

The Swedish expedition brought highly favorable news from the Uppernavik, that the season for arctic navigation is better than has been known for several years; that no ice, save occasional bergs between Holsteinberg and Disco, and belween the latter place and Uppernavik, has been seen for several weeks.

CHARLESTON, S. C., August 27.—Since last Friday three new eases of yellow fever are reported, and one of the eases previously reported died. The first excitement occasioned by the appearance of the disease is subsiding. The feeling in the community is quiet and hopeful.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., August 27.—Brig Pomora, of Richmond, Maine, went ashore twenty-five miles south of Cape Conaveret, August 17. The cargo of cotton can be saved; no lives lost. Steamer Lodona was stranded six miles north of Capo Conaveret. The beach is strewn with her cargo for thirty miles. The captain and twenty men were lost; the first officer, second officer, chief engineer, first assistant engineer, chief cook, one fireman, Captain Harvey's son, mess boy and five seamen were saved.

The brig Welsh, of Philadelphia, is ashore fifteen miles south of Conaveret. Her cargo of sugar washed out. Captain Watson was drowned, and his body buried on the spot. The brig H. G. Berry, of Baltimore, is ashore fifty yards from the Welsh, and is a total wreck. Her cargo consisted of sugar and molasses.

The bark Hilda, from New Orleans, bound to Cowes, stranded six miles south of St. Augustine. Her cargo of tobacco and staves will prove a total loss. One man was drowned.

BOSTON, Aug. 27.—The Bangor express ran into the Revierè train seven miles from Boston. Eighteen men and three women are dead, and forty to fifty persons are wounded.

The particulars of the accident on the Eastern railroad, at Reviere, are appalling. The express ran into the accommodation train at full speed, with such force that the engine and tender reached the center of the last car, which was demolished. This car was crowded with passengers, sitting and standing. The woodwork instantly took fire, and the scene which followed was terrible. The boiler of the engine burst and the victims were enveloped in a cloud of steam and deluged with hot water.

The flames were at last extinguished, hut there were but few of the passengers in the car (who were not instantly killed by the collision) who escaped the fatal effect of the steam. The other cars in the accommodation train took fire from the upsetting of the kerosene lamps, but the passengers got out in time.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 28.—A mail train going thirty-five miles an hour and a freight train going eighteen miles an hour collided on the Erie railroad, near Westport, Pennsylvania, by which six persons were instantly killed, and a large number of persons severely injured. The engineer was fatally injured.

The total population of the United States is 38,555,983, composed as follows: Natives 32,889,437, foreigners 5,566,466, white 33,586,988, colored 4,380,009, Indian 25,731, Chinese 63,254. Of the Indians and Chinese, the Territories contain 4,503 of the former and 7,075 of the latter. The Indian Territory and Alaska are not included or mentioned in any of the census tables above epitomized.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Aug. 28.—Diligent inquiry fails to discover any new cases of fever in the last twenty-four hours. The whole number of persons now ill with the fever hardly exceeds a dozen. The disease seems to yield readily to medical treatment, except in cases which were neglected in the early stages.

The apprehension of an epidemic is gradually subsiding.

MOBILE, Aug. 28.—The Register has kindly furnished the following particulars of the explosion yesterday: The steamer Ocean Wave left the city on Sunday morning, with about two hundred persons on board, for an excursion to Fish river. On her return she stopped at Point Clear, reaching there at five P. M. The boat was made fast, and the band and part of the passengers went ashore. After remaining half an hour the whistle was blown, and the passengers just got aboard when the boiler exploded with great force. Fragments of timber and metal flew in every direction. The forward part of the boat and cabin were carried completely away. The chimney fell backward toward the rear of the boat, crushing the upper cabin, and the boat immediately sank, with her bow submerged. About sixty or seventy persons were killed and injured by the explosion.

So far the bodies of nineteen of the dead, eight ladies among the number, have been recovered. Twenty-eight wounded have been brought to the city, and one of the number, a little girl, has since died. It was appalling and heartrending. Wilder scenes of grief are seldom witnessed. Many of the passengers were little children, and many little hats and bonnets came ashore to tell of the little victims beneath the waves.

Captain Eaton swam some time with both legs broken. A boat reached him just too late, and he went down. The two pilots were killed. The engineer and wife were severely injured, and all the firemen killed.

It is impossible to correctly estimate the loss. By some it is supposed that at least thirty or forty persons are still buried in the debris of the wreck or at the bottom of the bay. A diver has gone to the scene of the disaster. The accident has cast a gloom over the whole city, and a universal sadness prevails.

The Ocean Wave has been for some time considered unsafe. The boat has always been an unlucky one.

A criminal responsibility rests somewhere, and it should be visited to those to whose recklessness and incapacity it is attributable. The system of inspection everywhere is loose, careless and reckless. The boiler was not so much exploded as it was torn open, with a long seam. It was so rotten as to literally tear open. Had it been stronger, so as to explode with greater violence, the destruction would have been greater. The force of the explosion was upward and forward.

MOBILE, August 29.—Thirty-five dead bodies have been recovered. It is feared many more are under the wreck.

The excursionists were mostly working people, with their families.

A submarine diver thoroughly examined the wreck of the Ocean Wave, and failed to discover any bodies. He reports the steamer terribly shattered. The force of the explosion was tremendous.

The community is still excited, and an investigation will be held as to the cause of the explosion. So far the casualties are fifty-five, of whom twenty-nine were killed and twenty-six wounded. Many more missing bodies will come to the surface in a day or two.

Three more of the wounded died this afternoon.

The reported death of Willis Meriwether is incorrect.

CHARLESTON, Aug. 29.—A few new cases of yellow fever reported. Three old cases fatal since yesterday. Many unacclimated persons leaving. Opinion is divided as to whether the disease will or not spread.

WASHINGTON, August 29.—The United States steamer Congress has returned from Greenland, having made the run of two thousand five hundred miles in less than thirteen days. Her officers report that the steamer in returning passed a hundred icebergs, but no packed ice. The season has been very mild, not unlike May in New York. Day became perpetual as the steamer advanced north.

The Polaris, Captain Hall's vessel, sailed northward from Greenland on the seventeenth, with three parting cheers from the crew of the Congress. The Congress is the largest ship ever seen in Disco bay.

FOREIGN.

VERSAILLES, Aug. 23.—The prolongation of Thiers' term is assured.

Another two hundred million of francs have been paid.

It is stated Thiers adopts the disarmament of the National Guard as a government measure.

LONDON, Aug. 23.—A collision occurred on the Midland road, near Leicester, by which many persons were injured.

A meeting in favor of the ballot, at Birmingham, passed resolutions condemning the action of the House of Lords.

Gambetta proposes to the French Republican Union the dissolution of the present Assembly on the first of May, 1872.

The bill proposes the dissolution of the National Assembly on the grounds that its discussions have proved fruitless, and provides for the election of a Constituent Assembly. The bill also provides for the resignation of Thiers when the Constituent Assembly is elected.

A special to the Times says: "The discussions upon the dissolution of the Assembly are exciting. A conflict is apprehended, and grave consequences are probable."

A church in Bolano, Italy, was struck by lightning. Thirty-two persons were killed and injured.

A foreign ship arrived at Shields with cholera.

Baron Buest's retirement from the Austrian cabinet is reported.

The potato blight in Ireland has been exaggerated. It seems the official statement says the crop is a good one.

VERSAILLES, Aug. 23.—The court-martial establishes the fact that the Federals, disguised as firemen, fed the flames with petroleum. Cellet, the prison director of the Commune, swears he received orders from Ferret to shoot the hostages, but he declined.

The Assembly approve of the new additional taxes, and decided to proceed to the immediate discussion of the question of the disarmament of the National Guard.

The government is acting in concert with Italy to prevent cholera.

In the court-martial to-day the argument for the prosecution was concluded, and counsel for the prisoners commenced to sum up.

BERLIN, Aug. 23.—Four cases of cholera here, two of which were fatal.

PARIS, Aug. 25.—The Radical journals unanimously favor a dissolution of the Assembly.

The government has forbidden public rejoicings in this city on the fourth of September, the anniversary of the revolution in Paris last year against the Bonapartes.

It is reported that assurances have been received at Versailles that the Prussian troops in France will be reduced to fifty thousand on the first of September, and those who remain will be lodged in barracks.

BERLIN, Aug. 28.—The Prussian Cross Gazette confirms the report that a second meeting between the German and Austrian Emperors has been arranged, and states that it will take place on the seventh of September, at Salsbourg. The Emperor Francis Joseph will be accompanied by Count Von Buest.

A firm basis was laid at Gastein for relations whereby Germany and Austria are to assume joint attitude. Italy has unconditionally agreed to the same policy, and communications have passed between the three governments looking to the establishment of a complete understanding.

LONDON, Aug. 28.—The Herald correspondent at Salsbourg telegraphs: I am in position to affirm that a new secret treaty, offensive and defensive, has been concluded between Prussia and Italy.

BERLIN, Aug. 29.—There were three hundred and twenty-nine deaths in Koenigsberg for the week ending the twenty-fifth, including one hundred and twenty-seven from cholera.

No deaths have occurred at Dantzic for the last two days.

The New York Roman Catholic City Government.

We give an extract from a three-column article recently published in the Evangelist, a Presbyterian paper of this city. From it our readers will learn that the editor has had an interview with Judge Hilton, and has come to the conclusion that all the charges of knavery made against our city officials are false, as also are the statements that our city government is under the control of Irish Catholics, and that he does not believe New York is worse than any other city under the sun. In commenting on this the Herald, on Sunday last, re-echoes the words of the Evangelist, and winds up with this question: "Who can assert, after reading the above, (from the Evangelist,) that the government of the city of New York is in the hands of the so-called Irish Catholics?" Now this is evidently an attempt to rob our Irish Catholic citizens of a credit that belongs to them beyond all manner of doubt, as may be seen by the following list made up hastily from memory, and without calling upon Controller Connolly for information which his modesty, we fear, might prevent him giving:

P. B. Sweeny, President Park Commissioners, Roman Catholic.
Richard B. Connolly, Controller, Roman Catholic.
Benard Smyth, Receiver of Taxes, Roman Catholic.
Richard O'Gorman, Corporation Counsel, Roman Catholic.
James B. Nicholson, Commissioner Charities, Roman Catholic.
Owen W. Brennan, Commissioner Charities, Roman Catholic.
William Hitchman, President Fire Department, Roman Catholic.
John H. Williams, President Board of Ex., Roman Catholic.
Matt. T. Brennan, Sheriff, Roman Catholic.
Michael Connolly, Register, Roman Catholic.
J. H. McCunn, Judge Superior Court, Roman Catholic.
J. R. Brady, Supreme Court Judge, Roman Catholic.
C. P. Daly, Judge Court Common Pleas, Roman Catholic.
James M. Sweeny, Clerk Superior Court, Roman Catholic.
L. Clancy, Clerk Marine Court, Roman Catholic.
Thomas J. Barr, Police Commissioner, Roman Catholic.
Robert C. Hutchings, Surrogate, Roman Catholic.
Richard O'Gorman, President Commissioners Emigration, Roman Catholic.
Thomas J. Creamer, Tax Commissioner, Roman Catholic.
John Galvin, President Board Assistant Aldermen, Roman Catholic.
William H. Moloney, Clerk Board Assistant Aldermen, Roman Catholic.
Thomas Coman, President Board Aldermen, Roman Catholic.
John J. Bradly, Chamberlain, Rom. Catholic.
Ed. Hogan, Police Judge, Rom. Catholic.
Thomas A. Ledwith, Police Judge, Roman Catholic.
E. J. Shandley, Police Judge, Rom. Catholic.
John McQuade, Police Judge, Rom. Catholic.
Dennis Quinn, Civil Judge, Roman Catholic.
Thos. Kilvin, Civil Judge, Roman Catholic.
Jos. McGuire, Civil Judge, Roman Catholic.
Wm. J. Kane, Civil Judge, Roman Catholic.
Benard Smyth, President Department Public Instruction, Roman Catholic.
John Mullaly, Health Commission, Roman Catholic.

A careful examination of this list will show that every department of our city government is headed by or is under the control of an Irish Catholic, with the exception of the mayor's office, and that, after the dastardly attempt of its occupant to deprive a number of our citizens of their rights, we have neither the right nor the wish to claim. Does the Herald or the Evangelist desire any further proof of their error?—Public School Journal.

"You can't stand there," said a watchman to a thin man in a suit of rusty black, who was endeavoring to maintain a favorable position for viewing a late fire. "You must come down, sir." "Allow me to remain, if you please; I am a reporter, and it is necessary that I should see what is going on." "I don't care," responded the guardian; "if you want a report of it you'll see it in all of the papers to-morrow."

THE Sunday School Workman thus defines true criticism: "To be earnest, but kind; to be forcible, yet gentle; to be plain, and very practical; to direct the criticism in such a way as to effect a real good."

REV. HENRY LONGUEVILLE MANSEL, D. D., dean of St. Paul's church, London, died on Monday of last week, in his fifty-first year.

Baptized Children—Their Relation to the Church.

MR. EDITOR: I have been a Methodist fifty years, and a preacher forty-five years; I have read our standard works, especially the writings of Wesley and Fletcher; I have heard Bishops McKendree, Soule, Roberts, Waugh, Capers, Bascom and Andrew, to say nothing of the episcopal lights remaining among us; I have heard Dr. Newton, of England, and most of the distinguished Methodist preachers of America who have flourished within the last forty years; I was a member of the Lonisville Convention that laid the ground-work of our Southern organization; I have been a member of every General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and was a member of several before the division, and I never read, or heard, till recently, the opinion, coming from a Methodist—any Methodist preacher—that the children of non-professing parents were not entitled to baptism. I knew that Calvinists—say, for instance, Presbyterians—will not allow the baptism of children, without at least one of the parents be a professor of religion; and this I know is based on the doctrine of election: that children, or the children of elect parents, alone are entitled to the rite of baptism with them. But I always understood the Methodists to teach that children were entitled to the rite, not because their parents were of the elect, but because Christ died for them—for every sinner. I always understood the Methodists to teach that man has two representatives, called by Paul the first and second Adam; that because of our connection with the first Adam we had fallen under sin, and had become guilty and corrupt; that "By one man's disobedience many were made sinners; that all had sinned and come short of the glory of God; that by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin—so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned."—Rom. That because of our connection with the first Adam we became subject to death, "That by man came death."—First Cor. xv, 21. That the first man is of "the earth earthy, and that we bear the image of the earthy.'—47 49.

I have been taught by the Methodists to believe that we have been redeemed by the second Adam, that he died to ransom our race, and that by the grace of God he tasted death for every man; so that "By the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all unto justification of life."—Rom. "That as sin hath reigned unto death, even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life, by Jesus Christ our Lord."—Ibid. That in Christ, our second representative, we have gained, or may gain, all that was lost by our first representative—even the resurrection of the body and victory over death.

Now, Mr. Editor, when I baptize a child—any child, the offspring of saint or sinner—I baptize it because it has an interest in the atonement, and belongs to Jesus Christ by redemption. I argue that the child has the right, not because of the faith of the parent, but because it is the property, by redemption, of Jesus Christ, who is the head of the church. "All souls are mine, saith the Lord: as the soul of the father so also the soul of the son." All parents should be Christians, and set a good example before their children; but because the father sins, the child shall not necessarily be cut off. "The soul that sinneth it shall die."

But some one inquires: Do you baptize children to bring them into the church? I answer, in one sense I do. That is, by baptism we recognize the right of children to a place in the church, which Christ has purchased with his own blood. We baptize them, "Because of such is the kingdom of heaven." Abraham was justified before he received the sign of circumcision, and was circumcised because he had been justified by faith.—Rom. iv, 11. Will any man say that the children whom Jesus took in his arms and blessed, and of whom he said, "of such is the kingdom of heaven," were baptized children? I presume that they were of the kingdom of heaven before they were baptized, and have a right to the privileges because they are of the kingdom. But I do not make them members of any particular branch of the visible church of Christ. Allow that baptism makes the child a member of the church, represented by the officiating minister or administrator, and see to what it will lead. Here is my child born of Methodist parents; it is placed in the hands of a Roman Catholic nurse; the child is carried to a Romish priest and privately baptized; is it thereby made a member of the Romish Church? Or, my child is sick, my pastor is absent, I wish the child baptized, and apply to a Presbyterian minister, and he performs the solemn act. Do I thereby transfer my child to the Presbyterian Church? Or, the Presbyterian's child is sick, his pastor is absent, I baptize his child, it recovers—do I claim it as a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South? No, no! All children belong to Christ. He sends his ministers into all the world to preach, baptize and teach. As one, I go. I baptize every penitent believer who applies, if he has not been previously baptized. I baptize every child that is solemnly offered to God through my ministry, and when it comes to years, if it wishes to be recognized as a member of the branch of Christ's church which I represent, and gives evidence of his fitness, I will receive him according to the rules of the Discipline. Now he is not only a member of the universal church of God, but a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Or if he prefers another branch, and becomes identified, say with the Presbyterians, still he is a member of the church of God, but not in pastoral connection with the minister who baptized him.

Mr. Editor, we are in danger of being led away by the specious arguments of those who transfer the authority of Jesus Christ to the so-called priests of Christianity, or who seek to invest the church or the sacraments of religion with a saving efficacy. There is no priest but Jesus Christ. He alone can forgive sins. There is no power that can cleanse and purify the sinful heart of man but the Holy Ghost. Baptismal regeneration, confirmation by the laying on of the hands of the Bishop, the doctrine of apostolic succession, and the arrogant assumption of those who claim to be the church, are all to be avoided as you would the face of the old serpent that deceived the mother of our race. In our zeal for mental and moral training we are to be careful not to substitute learning in the ministry for a call from God to preach, education for religion, or Sunday schools for the church of God, or parental nurture for the regeneration. Our children are all born in sin, and all need to be born again. "For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but a new creature." J. B. McFerrin, in Nashville Christian Advocate.

INCLUDING DR. AND MRS. DURBIN there were in the immediate circle, a month ago, five persons of the age of "threescore and ten," or over. Dr. Durbin himself is now nearly seventy-one, and, though he has been actively engaged since he was first licensed to preach, (at the age of eighteen,) almost fifty-three years ago, is now in the enjoyment of comparatively excellent health. We believe he has been sick but a single day during his long official life. During his missionary secretaryship he has buried two sons, one of them five or six years ago, and the other early last spring.—New York Christian Advocate.

THE system of church-support by weekly contributions is growing in favor in Massachusetts. Recently a report was made to Governor Claflin, of that State, in which it was shown that five small churches alone increased their receipts $7,000 last year by recourse to this plan. It is found that every member of a congregation is willing to furnish regular contributions in this way, and that it increases the interest in church affairs.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

ENGLISH PAPERS announce the death of Edith Mary, daughter of the poet Southey, and wife of the Rev. John Wood Warter, B. D., of Christ church, Oxford, rector of West Tarring, who edited Southey's "Doctor," and gave to the public his "Commonplace Book and Letters." Mrs. Warter was the daughter of Southey's first wife, and was born in 1805. Mrs. Southey died in 1837, and in 1839 Southey was married to Caroline Bowles, the poetess.

NEVER dare go where you have reason to question whether God will go with you; a Christian should never willingly be where there is not room for his Savior.

TO TELL A MAN he is all wrong and leave him and go your way is not a very kind or helpful proceeding.

THE CLOSING SCENE.

BY T. BUCHANAN READ.

[The following is pronounced by the Westminster Review to be unquestionably the finest American poem ever written.]

Within this sober realm of leafless trees
The russet year inhaled the dreamy air,
Like some tanned reaper in his hour of ease,
When all the fields are lying brown and bare;

The gray barns, looking from their hazy hills,
O'er the dim waters widening in the vales,
Sent down the air a greeting to the mills,
On the dull thunder of alternate flails;

All sights are mellowed, and all sounds subdued,
The hills seemed further, and the streams sang low,
As in a dream the distant woodman hewed
His winter log, with many a muffled blow.

The embattled forests, erewhile armed with gold,
Their banners bright with every martial hue,
Now stood like some sad beaten host of old,
Withdrawn afar in Time's remotest blue;

On slumberous wings the vulture tried his flight,
The dove scarce heard his sighing mate's complaint,
And, like a star slow drowning in the light,
The village church vane seemed to pale and faint;

The sentinel cock upon the hillside crew—
Crew twice, and all was stiller than before—
Silent, till some replying warder blew
His alien horn, and then was heard no more.

Where erst the jay, within the elm's tall crest,
Made garrulous trouble round her unfledged young;
And where the oriole hung her swinging nest,
By every light wind like a censor swung;

Where sang the noisy masons of the eaves,
The busy swallows circling ever near—
Foreboding, as the rustic mind believes,
An early harvest and a plenteous year;

Where every bird which charmed the vernal feast
Shook the sweet slumber from its wings at morn,
To warn the reapers of the rosy east;
All now was songless, empty and forlorn.

Alone, from out the stubble, piped the quail,
And croaked the crow through all the dreary gloom;
Alone the pheasant, drumming in the vale,
Made echo to the distant cottage loom;

There was no bud, no bloom upon the bowers,
The spiders wove their thin shrouds night by night,
The thistle down, the only ghost of flowers,
Sailed slowly by—passed noiseless out of sight.

Amid all this, in this most cheerless air,
And where the woodbine shed upon the porch
Its crimson leaves, as if the year stood there
Firing the floor with his inverted torch;

Amid all this, the center of the scene,
The white-haired matron, with monotonous tread,
Plied the swift wheel, and with her joyless mien,
Sat like a fate, and watched the flying thread.

She had known Sorrow—he had walked with her,
Oft supped, and broke with her the ashen crust,
And in the dead leaves still she heard the stir
Of his black mantle trailing in the dust.

While yet her cheek was bright with summer bloom,
Her country summoned and she gave her all;
And twice war bowed to her his sable plume—
Re-gave the sword to rust upon her wall;

Re-gave the sword, but not the hand that drew
And struck for liberty the dying blow;
Nor him who, to his sire and country true,
Fell 'mid the ranks of the invading foe.

Long, but not loud, the droning wheel went on,
Like the low murmur of a hive at noon;
Long, but not loud, the memory of the gone
Breathed through her lips a sad and tremulous tune.

At last the thread was snapped—her head was bowed!
Life dropped the distaff through his hands serene;
And loving neighbors smoothed her careful shroud,
While Death and Winter closed the autumn scene.

LETTER FROM DELHI, LOUISIANA.

DELHI, LA., Aug. 1, 1871.

MR. EDITOR: This town is one of excellent appearance, liveliness and thrift. There is nothing dirty-looking about it. Have you ever seen Vicksburg from the deck of a steamboat? If so, you cannot have forgotten the impression conveyed that you there saw one of the most rusty, dirty mixtures of houses you had ever seen. But when you see our little city, en route, the impression is so different that you by no means feel it would be afflictive to lodge here awhile. There is a good deal of business done here sometimes; but I think the country around must fill up more before the merchants here can compete with Vicksburg. The lands around are rich, however, and if newcomers were tolerably sure of health, I know of no better country than this for them. Here grow the finest peaches, pears and apples, together with other fruits, that can be found anywhere. I really believe so. Corn, cotton and other things usual in this latitude are said to do finely if reasonably cared for.

The woods abound with game, and the streams with perch, trout, bass and other fine varieties. All these, with bear also, may be had by the moderately zealous sportsmen in a range of twenty miles of town.

The social character of the people is of a high order, and they appear to be very moral; but religiously, I think, they take matters too easily. There seems to be but little "hungering and thirsting after righteousness." They attend church well, and with the exception, now and then, of a few thoughtless young people, the proprieties of the house of God are well observed. The church building is owned jointly by the Presbyterians and Methodists. The Baptists occupy it also on one of my days. The Sunday school is a union Sunday school, and there is a sort of union feeling evident that consists quite well with a state of ease in Zion. Something like a dozen new houses have gone up this year, and others are being built. I think Delhi and adjacent country very desirable if one could have health; but of this one can only judge by trial.

Our church quite lately lost one of its best members—Mrs. Mary Owens, who died very suddenly. She bore an excellent name in the community, and as a church we felt the loss, though believing it her gain.

On Sunday morning, about ten o'clock, a fearful accident occurred, which, alas! is only one of many of the same sort. A lady, well known and highly respected here—Mrs. Fox—the wife of our postmaster, and the mother of seven children, out of patience with attempting to start a fire in a stove, seized the can of kerosene and poured it on the coals! Instantly the can exploded; the burning contents enveloped her almost entirely. She was alone, but ran down stairs toward a deep pond, where she was seen, and a young man threw her into the water, and with help from others extinguished the flames. They at once procured a blanket, and bore her up stairs, sending also for Mr. Fox, who was in another part of town. But, alas! she was blistered or charred almost entirely, and, after about four hours of such agony as may be imagined, her spirit ceased to regard her awful calamity.

Now how much, in such cases, is owing to thoughtlessness, and how much to the rascality of oil dealers, may not be known. Certain am I, however, that adulterated oils are very common. I bought a can of oil, on which I thought I could rely for non-combustibility, for I had seen oil of that name tested with burning coals and lighted matches for about five minutes, and yet no burn. But on trying mine at home, two months after, to show some friends how perfectly safe that oil was, it caught fire; and, after the first catching, would ignite with the match three inches from the vessel! These facts I can show by several witnesses, and the oil is one of the most popular known, and no doubt deserves to be, though behind the merchant of whom I bought adulteration had taken place!

But I beg pardon for this long letter; yet I am not sure that it is not a matter of duty to hold these facts and warnings up to our fellows, with such reproof of adulteration as may tend to rouse the people against all, even mere dealers who do not test every gallon of oil they sell!

MINISTERIAL SUPPORT.

"Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel."—FIRST CORINTHIANS IX, 14.

MR. EDITOR: Over twelve years ago I was admitted on trial in the traveling ministry of the Methodist Church. I was young, had been converted, felt called to preach, preferred the Methodist Church, and freely consecrated myself to her service. At the close of my second year I was received into full connection, and ordained to the office of a deacon. At the close of the fourth year I was ordained to the office of an elder, and I married. I have now been a traveling elder nearly nine years. During that time I have been exclusively devoted to my calling, except a part of two years. I have not farmed, merchandised, taught school, or engaged in anything but the work to which I consecrated myself in early life. Five years I have spent in stations, and in three different charges I have enjoyed the benefit of a parsonage. My support has been as good as that of the most of my brethren, and we have always practiced economy. And now here I am, passing the meridian of life, and spending the strength of my days in the Methodist ministry, with a family (three children) growing up around me.

"No foot of land do I possess,
Nor cottage in the wilderness;
A poor wayfaring man," etc.

The support I am receiving from the church is hardly sufficient. Every year I am getting a little behind, with no means to fall back on. My children are getting old enough to go to school, and consequently my expenses are increasing, but my salary is not.

"Wife, what had we better do?"

"Well, really, I cannot decide. You must not locate, but I would like so well to have a settled home. Do as you think best."

Mr. Editor, could you resist that? I believe my business is to preach the gospel. There is nothing else in this world I could be happy in doing. I believe in the itinerancy, and in an unsecular ministry. But a support, the education of my children, keeping out of debt, etc.—I wonder if the stewards know all this! How easy it would be for them to remedy these evils! What a power in the land would a body of itinerant, unsecular ministers be! But we cannot have it, because the church is unwilling to give the ministry an adequate support. Does the church call for an unsecular ministry? Is there a cry for more laborers? Where is the cause? Is not my experience the experience of many? Does not this state of things turn young men from the ministry? Brethren, "think on these things."

ITINERANT.

A TIME OF POWER.

CASTOR CT., LOUISIANA CONFERENCE, August 4, 1871.

MR. EDITOR: We have just closed one of the most remarkable meetings ever witnessed in this country, even by the oldest inhabitants. We commenced on Tuesday night, July 25, at Gewin's school house, where a good number of the membership at Indian Village have been holding weekly prayer meetings since last December, which have been largely attended by the neighborhood. The revival which closed last night is the evident result of those prayer meetings. The meeting was largely attended, and a deep interest was manifested in the first hour's service. Penitents crowded the altar, Christians sang and shouted, and sinners trembled. On Friday morning we moved over to the church at Indian Village. The introductory sermon was preached from the text, "Thy kingdom come," and never have I seen a greater manifestation of power than attended each hour's service during the meeting, and never have I seen the membership so fully aroused to a sense of their duty, so untiring in their efforts to win souls to Christ. On Sunday seventeen were baptized and received into the church, in the presence of as large a congregation as was ever seen together in this section of country. From Sunday night until the close of the meeting was a time never to be forgotten. God came down in mighty power; scores of weeping penitents crowded the altar, nor would they leave until they had found the pearl of great price; and then so overpowering was the evidence of sins pardoned that at different times many were borne from the house to the open air, where they lay side by side, as though they were dead; but soon they were made alive unto God, and then the shouts of new-born souls and happy Christians, making the forest ring for hours with God's praise, rendered it one of the sublimest scenes ever witnessed by those present. We closed the meeting last night. Sixty-nine were added to the church, while the number converted was still larger. I was assisted by Revs. C. A. C. Herlong, J. B. Sanders and — Armstrong—a Baptist minister.

A HEALTH PAPER says that the habit of taking a nap after dinner is a bad one. Ten minutes' sleep before dinner is worth more than an hour after. It rests and refreshes, and prepares the system for vigorous digestion. If sleep is taken after dinner it should be taken in a sitting posture, as the horizontal position is unfavorable to healthful digestion.

LIKE the tree, we should be constantly growing outward toward men and upward toward God.

IT IS WELL.

Slowly, slowly, a lifeboat, freighted with a precious soul, was drifting down the mystic river of Death. The blessed haven loomed in view, and safe anchorage was nearly gained—a long voyage closed. The tumult of the retreating waves of sorrow and toil was hushed, and the peaceful atmosphere of heaven already began to refresh the weary soul, when, softly, sweetly came echoing through the stillness: "It is well with me." This was a message from a dying friend.

Fellow-voyager, is it well with thy soul? Is your title to the home of the blessed secured by penitence and faith in Jesus, and sealed by the Holy Spirit on thy heart? Then it is well.

Believer, art thou in trouble? Do the waves of sorrow, the chill blasts of disappointment, and the rough winds of adversity sometimes tose thy little bark? Listen to the voice of the heavenly pilot: "It is I; be not afraid."

"The bark sails safe through foul and fair,
His hand is on the helm."

So he bringeth them to their desired haven.

"Soon will your sorrows all be o'er,
And you shall sweetly tell,
On Canaan's calm and pleasant shore,
That all at last is well."

But, friend, if perchance you have neglected this great preparation for safe entrance to that peaceful haven, then delay no longer; but seek for pardon and peace, and that hope in Christ which will prove a sure anchor to thy soul, and then it shall be well with thee.

"Savior, perfect my trust,
Strengthen the might of my faith,
Let me feel as I would when I stand
On the rock of the shore of death;

"Feel as I would when my feet
Are slipping over the brink;
For it may be I'm nearer home,
Nearer now than I think."

A CAMP GROUND.

At a meeting of the Board of Commissioners for the location, etc., of a camp ground for the Brookhaven district, J. J. Hennington in the chair, and J. F. Enochs secretary, it was Resolved, 1. That the camp ground be and is hereby located in the vicinity of the town of Crystal Springs, on the plot selected by J. J. Hennington and J. F. Enochs.

2. That J. J. Hennington, J. F. Enochs, J. W. West, J. W. McMillan, W. Graves, J. H. Thompson and H. J. Bracey, of the Board of Commissioners, be and they are hereby appointed a board of trustees to receive and hold for the use of the Methodist Episcopal Church South the titles to the property, according to forms of Discipline.

3. That J. J. Hennington, J. F. Enochs and J. W. McMillan be and they are hereby appointed a committee to complete the further duties of the board under the following restrictions: 1. That they prepare for holding the camp meeting during the full moon in August next, the presiding elder to give public notice of the opening day. 2. That they divide the ground into lots, and give notice to the respective Quarterly Conferences for the membership to make choice by the first of June next, otherwise the lots will be open for occupation by those desiring to tent on the ground. 3. That the committee conduct the meeting on the self-sustaining plan, allowing suitable lots for boarding tents and stock inclosure, making the necessary rules for their government.

4. That Bro. G. F. Thompson, presiding elder, be and he is hereby requested to inform the respective Quarterly Conferences of the location of the camp ground; and to request each Quarterly Conference to appoint a committee to raise not less than $50 by or before the first of January next, and forward (through the pastor in charge) to J. J. Hennington, Crystal Springs, to enable the commissioners to carry out the instructions of the District Conference to have an arbor built, and other necessary improvements.

5. That a copy of the proceedings of this meeting be published in the Copiahan, Copiah Herald, Brookhaven Citizen and NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

On motion the meeting adjourned.

J. J. HENNINGTON, Chairman.
J. F. ENOCHS, Secretary.

THESE old tempers are all alive yet, though under restraint. They do not yield without a struggle. They are enemies to his sanctification. They are to be kept down and stifled till the breath is out of them. He will have to watch and pray and fight for this conquest.

Lake Providence District Conference, Louisiana Conference.

MR. EDITOR: The Lake Providence District Conference met, according to appointment, in Delhi, August 9.

The attendance was better than last year, and the religious part of the work was more satisfactory. No committees were appointed, but things of interest were discussed as they came up in pastor's reports. Rev. J. E. Bradley read a memoir of Rev. W. G. McGaughey, of Lake Providence circuit, who had died before entering upon his work. Bro. McGaughey had been connected with the church in this section for a number of years, and wielded an extended influence for good.

The conference continued the Historical Committee of last year, adding other names, and expressing confidence in the necessity and advantage of such a committee. It is the business of this committee to gather and record all items of interest in connection with the church in this district that can be obtained.

The conference resolved that hereafter each minister in the district should be expected to prepare an elaborate sermon on some important doctrinal point—the list of which should be selected by the presiding elder—and preach the same at some hour during the session of the conference. Also that the various interests of the church—i. e., missions, Sunday schools, finance, etc.—should be divided among the lay members of the district, who would be expected to prepare during the year careful essays thereon, to be read in conference for its consideration and action. The object of this is that the conference may have the mature reflections of the body upon matters of moment. Generally these things are jumped up in a moment, and attended to in haste, without the advantage of deliberate attention thereto.

Revs. C. F. Evans, of Monroe, and J. D. Parker, of New Orleans, were present, and gave aid and pleasure during the meeting.

The following are the delegates to the Annual Conference to be held at Monroe: J. Harvey Brigham, H. P. Wells, H. W. Drake, Rev. J. H. Boult. Alternates: Rev. T. M. Mann, Thomas S. Maybin, W. E. Rapp, D. P. Chapman.

The next conference is to be held at Rayville.

The publishing interests of the church were considered, but we thought resolutions unnecessary, as we intended to do all we could in that direction anyhow, especially for the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

I may mention that a prominent member of the conference presented a novel method for relieving the preachers of the trouble as to the time of holding the Annual Conference, and he was requested to lay the matter before the members thereof through the columns of the ADVOCATE.

THE WESLEYAN CONFERENCE.

The one hundred and twenty-eighth annual session of the Wesleyan Conference of Great Britain commenced on Wednesday morning, July 26, in the Oldham street chapel, Manchester. Over seven hundred ministers were present. After devotional exercises the first business of the day was proceeded with, namely, the filling up of those vacancies in the Legal Conference, through death or superannuation, which have occurred during the year. In the economy of British Wesleyanism, when a member of the Legal Hundred has been a supernumerary four years, he is deemed to be superannuated, and his place becomes vacant. It was found that in Great Britain there were five vacancies, one occasioned by death, and four by superannuation; in Ireland two, one occasioned by death and one by superannuation. These vacancies were then filled by the following-named gentlemen: James Crose, J. W. Greeves, John Tindell, Charles Garrett, John C. Wilson, B. Bagly and W. McMullen. Next the Conference proceeded to ballot for its president and secretary. The predictions, for weeks previous to the sitting of the Conference, were to the effect that Luke H. Wiseman would be chosen president, he having received the highest number of votes at the Conference last year. The result elected a close poll: For president, John H. James, D. D., 201; L. H. Wiseman, M. A., 1[illegible] Charles Hayden, 46; other perso[illegible] 36. Dr. James was declared elect[illegible] For secretary the vote was as f[illegible] lows: Luke H. Wiseman, M. [illegible] 334; George T. Parks, 41; H. [illegible] Williams, 20; other persons, [illegible] Mr. Wiseman was declared elect[illegible]

The first Annual Conference [illegible] the Wesleyan body was held at [illegible] Foundery, in London, June [illegible] 1744, the following persons be[illegible] present: John Wesley, Charles W[illegible] ley; Rev. John Hodges, rector [illegible] Wenvo; Rev. Henry Piers, vicar [illegible] Bexley; Rev. Samuel Taylor, vi[illegible] of Quinton, and Mr. John Merito[illegible] five preachers and one layman. T[illegible] conversations related chiefly to d[illegible] trinal points, but on the last day [illegible] the session church polity and d[illegible] cipline were introduced, and a re[illegible] lution adopted declaring the Chu[illegible] of England "a congregation of E[illegible] lish believers;" a definition to wh[illegible] members of that church co[illegible] scarcely take exception on [illegible] ground of comprehensiveness.

It was in the year 1765 that [illegible] first Conference convened in M[illegible] chester. There were in England [illegible] that time 25 circuits; in Scotla[illegible] 4; in Wales, 2, and in Ireland [illegible] The total number of travel[illegible] preachers was 92. At this Con[illegible] ence the question of caring for [illegible] worn-out preachers was discus[illegible] and it was resolved that ev[illegible] preacher in full work should c[illegible] tribute half a guinea annually, [illegible] a full guinea as entrance money [illegible] being received into the trave[illegible] ministry. Church debts and chu[illegible] architecture were dwelt upon in [illegible] tail, and during the debate it [illegible] resolved that, in the constructi[illegible] churches, the windows should [illegible] sashed, opening downward. It [illegible] also determined that no more [illegible] pulpits should be erected, and [illegible] the preacher get as near on a [illegible] and as close to his hearers as p[illegible] ble. The preachers were exhor[illegible] to carry a copy of the Bible [illegible] them, and to economize their t[illegible] in the study and memorizatio[illegible] such passages as might be used [illegible] proof texts in defense of the d[illegible] trines of Christianity. Somebo[illegible] complained that he had witnes[illegible] hard treatment of horses by two [illegible] the preachers, and it was therefo[illegible] enacted that each preacher sho[illegible] see with his own eyes his ho[illegible] "rubbed, fed and bedded," [illegible] "never to ride hard."

At this first Manchester Con[illegible] ence a debate sprung up in re[illegible] to the "rich members," it ha[illegible] been ascertained that some o[illegible] eort were of a too selfish and ov[illegible] ous disposition, "attending ge[illegible] ally to the wants of their own fa[illegible] lies, and being slow in making [illegible] tributions to the cause of the L[illegible] Some of the members had mar[illegible] unawakened or half-awakened [illegible] bands and wives, and thus [illegible] Christian zeal had abated, and [illegible] had, in a great degree, adopted [illegible] manners and practices of the wo[illegible] and had become lukewarm in r[illegible] gion.

It is one of the paradoxes, in c[illegible] nection with the proceedings of [illegible] Wesleyan Conference, that a la[illegible] part of the Conference work is [illegible] before the Conference itself is [illegible] session. The meetings of the p[illegible] paratory committees, so called, [illegible] nearly or quite a week before [illegible] assembling of the Conference, [illegible] among the most interesting and [illegible] structive of the meetings. The m[illegible] bers of these preparatory comm[illegible] tees discuss general education, m[illegible] sions, home and foreign, theologi[illegible] training, chapel building and oth[illegible] topics. Our British brethren [illegible] tach the greatest importance to [illegible] nominational schools. They fe[illegible] and justly, the importance of e[illegible] cating Methodist youth in Meth[illegible] ist doctrine. They feel that a you[illegible] man is almost as good as lost to t[illegible] ministry and the church if he [illegible] ceives his education outside the p[illegible] of a Wesleyan school; and exp[illegible] rience attests the correctness [illegible] their views. We, in this coun[illegible] are learning this lesson slowly. [illegible] few comprehend the vital neces[illegible] of giving our sons and daugh[illegible] an education at the hands of [illegible] structors who are in accord with [illegible] polity and doctrines of Methodism. [illegible] Western Christian Advocate.

SOME minds seem to be govern[illegible] by a sort of evil fate, which ma[illegible] them energetic in whatever co[illegible] cerns worldly business, but ba[illegible] ward in religious work. How co[illegible] mon are the complaints, "I hav[illegible] time," and "I am not adapted [illegible] this work"—made, too, by men w[illegible] never lack either time or talent [illegible] trade, for political meetings, [illegible] study, for any kind of secular wo[illegible] which their hearts are set on.

IN THE Antarctic seas there [illegible] sea-weeds which have stems ab[illegible] twenty feet high, and with a diam[illegible] ter so great that they have been c[illegible] lected by mariners in those regio[illegible] for fuel, under the belief that t[illegible] were drift-wood. They are as th[illegible] as a man's thigh.

LEISURE is a very pleasant [illegible] ment to look at, but it is a very b[illegible] one to wear. The ruin of millio[illegible] may be traced to it.

THE WIDOW'S ANSWER.

Ah me, with so many little months,
That care must a widow feel!"
said the deacon, with grief profound, ch as only a Christian can feel;
w the widow was knitting a stocking nd just rounding off at the heel.

Care!" deacon," she murmured with saintly smile,
nd gently she shook her head,
nd turned soft eyes to her merry boys
t play near the garden bed;
Mouths, be as 'em, as red as a cardinal flower,
even pairs of sweet lips," she said.

Not one too many, the curly pates;
ven Johnny, the baby, there!
have given them all to the dear Lord Christ,
rusting in faith and prayer;
nd God he leads them as he leads me;
don't know the meaning of care."

Not know the meaning, widow, widow!
nd working as work you must?
ot know the terrible meaning of care hat cuts at the brain like rust?"
The gray-haired deacon doubtingly smiled.
But I take the Lord on trust," ays the smiling widow; "I'm just as sure,

f my little stock be spent,
nd the cruse run low, and the flour be gone,
nd the money be needed for rent,
hat he who knows when a sparrow falls,
nd whither a thought is sent;

And where the down of the thistle blows,
nd the course of the fickle wind,
nd how the underworld paints the rose,
Without leaving a drop behind;
nd why there are never two leaves alike,
Though a million leaves you find;

And why ocean, bound by a mighty will,
s yet in ravastness free —
an, without stint from his bountiful store,
ives to my babes and me,
s that day must follow the risen dawn,
Or that rivers find the sea."

THE ROMANCE OF LUTHER'S LIFE.

Dr. Dollinger has thus far sustained his protest against papal infallibilty with admirable wisdom and firmness. But in assuring the world that he is still determined to remain in the Roman Catholic Church, he says, as reported by telegraph: "No Catherine Bora shall lead me astray."

This would pass for a very pungent witticism, if it came from one who joined with certain traducers of the Reformation in saying that a beautiful nun made Luther a Protestant, and that marriage was his motive in abandoning the church of which he was a monk. We can hardly think that so good a historian as Dr. Dollinger seriously credits such an old story. Nevertheless, he either attributes to Catherine a wonderful power of fascination, or reflects severely upon the consistency of Luther. Let us glance at the facts.

In the convent of Nimtschen, Saxony, were nine nuns who seem to have let the light and breath of the Reform in at their windows, and panted for liberty. Among them was Catherine von Bera, nobly born, poor, devout, gentle, obedient, and by no means intent upon raising a commotion in a convent, which was named "The Throne of God," and which had stood for nearly three hundred years. Nor was she dreaming that, after almost three hundred other years should pass away, it should be but a pile of ruins, part of which were to be removed to make room for a boy's school. With her eight young friends she was listening to such whispers of truths as heaven might send that way, and reading the word of God which had got into their hands.

"This is not the place for us," said one of them, quite afraid of her voice, yet confident of sympathy.

"What shall we do?" was the question of the little band, as in a corner they devised plans of relief.

They resolved to write to their parents and guardians, most of whom had wealth and influence. They declared: "The salvation of our souls will not permit us to remain any longer in a cloister. Take us home and we will serve you always."

We can almost hear their fathers and mothers exclaiming in reply: "For what are you under vow and vail but for the salvation of your souls! Be quiet, or you will cause us and the church a tempest of troubles."

Filial entreaties had failed, and the nine nuns grew more resolute and bold.

"Let us keep and act together," said one of them.

"Never will I forsake the rest of you," said they all; "and when the hour comes, we shall retire in a body, with order and courage, to some respectable place, where we can find friends and homes."

Had they yet heard of Luther, and his thesis, his protests, his tracts, his sermons, his battles with priests and pope, his translation of the Bible in the Wortburg Castle, and his growing favor with the people? Had any of them caught a glimpse of him in 1519, when he spent a few days at Nimtschen? It was now 1523, and did they know that several monasteries, not far distant, had been abandoned by inmates who had got hold of the gospel? Did they write to Luther?

The only fact about it, known to us, is that Luther heard of them, and their eagerness to escape, and resolved to help them. He put a word into the ears of Leonard Koppe, recently a councilor and government auditor, and two other Torgau men, who acted their part with consummate skill and courage. On the eve of Easter, 1523, they had a wagon, somehow, at the spot where it was likely to be needed.

The nine young nuns said, "Help comes from God," and they left the convent, none opposing, for none may have detected them. The tradition is that they crept through the window of Catherine's cell. To this day the antiquarians of that town show a slipper, which they say Catherine lost in the hurry of the flight.

A wagon rolled up to the gate of the old Augustinian monastery, at Wittemberg, in which Luther still resided, and the nine nuns were free in the darkness of the night and of their world. Without relatives to own them, homeless, shelterless, and fearful of being betrayed by strangers among whom they might seek refuge, they exhibited great emotions of joy and anxiety. Louis Cranach should have been there to paint the scene.

They soon found rest and safety in homes of the citizens, chiefly, no doubt, through Luther's agency. With his usual sympathy for all in need of kindness, he promptly sent forth his appeals. On the third day after their escape he wrote to the elector's secretary: "These eloped nuns have come to me; they are destitute, but as very respectable citizens of Torgau have brought them, there can be no suspicion of their moral character. You ask what I intend to do with them. I shall report the facts to their relatives, so that they may provide for them. If they refuse, I shall look to other persons, for several have promised aid."

The Wittembergers proved more friendly than all relatives, and gave them homes. It is a high commendation of the character of Catherine that she was adopted into the family of Philip Reichenbach, an honorable magistrate of the city, in which she won the esteem of the best of the people.

Great was the noise over the flight of the nuns and speedy the imitation of their example. From several convents young women were escaping. Luther was assailed as the author of all this enormous mischief. Leonard Koppe was alarmed and fearful of violence against himself, and wished to conceal his part in the affair. But Luther, always brave and candid, wrote to him: "Would to heaven I could in this, or in some other way, rescue all troubled consciences and empty all convents! I would not be afraid to confess my own agency in the business nor that of my assistants. You know that I advised and sanctioned the enterprise, that you executed it, and that the nuns consented and earnestly desired it. * * * It is not right that young girls should be locked up in convents where there is no daily use of God's word, and where the gospel is seldom or never heard, and where temptations are most severe. * * * Women were not created to spend a lazy and useless life in a convent."

Already had Luther proved himself the great German Reformer. Rome had excommunicated him, and he cared little about it. He was glad to see reformed priests and rising scholars marrying good wives. They and his aged father were urging him to do likewise. He somewhat admired Eva Schonfield; but he thought Catherine von Bora rather proud, so reserved was she in womanly dignity. "No," said he; "God may change my heart, but now at least I have no thought of taking a wife. My mind is not thus inclined, while I am daily expecting a heretic's death and punishment." (November, 1524.)

A month previously he had written to the theological student, Baumgartner: "If you have made up your mind to marry Catherine, make haste, for another suitor near at hand seeks her. I should be delighted to see you as her husband."

The other suitor was Dr. Glacius, vicar of the Castle church of Wittemberg. The one declined to press his suit; the hand of the other was refused by Catherine. She complained to Armsdorf, and asked him to entreat Luther to make no more pleas for his friends.

Some months later the lawyer Schurff said of Luther: "If this monk should marry, he will make all the world and the devil himself burst with laughter, and he will destroy the work he has begun."

"Well, then, I'll do it," replied Luther boldly, raising his head. "I will play the devil and the world this very trick. I will please my father and marry Catherine."

It was a sudden resolution; the courtship was short, the wedding quiet. Melancthon wrote: "On the thirteenth of June, 1525, Luther quite unexpectedly married Catherine de Bora." He was forty-two and she twenty-seven years of age. A roar of slanders began at once; it dies away before the simple facts of their sacred union and their blissful life.

Luther's home, with its music, its wit, its table-talk, its piety, its trials, and its unfailing comforts, makes the charm of his biography. His was the grandest marriage among the Reformers. The year following the wedding he wrote to a friend: "My rib, Kate, salutes you. She is amiable and obliging in all things, to a greater degree than I could have hoped, thank heaven, so that I would not exchange my poverty for the wealth of Croesus." He often called her playfully, "My Lord Kate," "Master Catherine," "Mrs. Doctor and Professoress." Her softening influence upon his strong, rough Saxon nature was generally noticed. Erasmus said: "Since Luther's marriage he begins to be more mild, and does not rave so fearfully with his pen as formerly." When finishing his Commentary on Galatians, his favorite work and most popular to this day, he said: "This is my letter to which I am betrothed; it is my Katy von Bora!" He would often say: "I love my Kato; I love her more than I do myself. I would rather die myself than that she and the children should die." She outlived him nearly seven years, dying in 1552.

Few writers have questioned the statement of Erasmus that her appearance was magnificent, her beauty extraordinary. Romish writers lay stress upon her beauty, as if that were damaging to Luther. Chardon found a portrait of her, writes one of Luther, in a lumber room at Orleans, and wrote: "I will bet that there is no man who would not wish to have so beautiful a wife as Catherine von Bora." It justifies the opinion which Bossuet has given of her appearance. "She has a noble, expressive and animated face." Her portrait was often drawn by such eminent artists as Holbein and Cranach. Luther, who ascribes to her almost every excellent trait of character, seems not to mention her beauty.

In the sphere of home she was a model. Not strongly intellectual and literary, nor simply amiable and complacent, she was dignified, properly self-reliant, independent and sympathetic. On her tombstone, in the city church of Torgau, is a recumbent statue of Catherine, the size of life, with an open Bible pressed to the heart. It was from that book she learned the elements of woman's true character and mission, and so lived as to commend to all wives and mothers its precepts and consolations.—Prof. W. M. Blackburn, in Interior.

THE BIBLE IN MEXICO.

Miss Melinda Rankin, says the Christian Union, who has so long labored for the good of the Mexicans, furnishes for the Bible Society Record the following incidents of a Mexican missionary:

"I took a locality in the immediate vicinity of the Romish church, where I supposed priestly power most dominant, and visited thirty-three Mexican families. In each house I inquired for their Bible or Testament. Some member of the family would go to some secret place and bring me the book, with evident marks of having been well read. Some of the Testaments I recognized as having been circulated some eight years previous. I was uniformly asked: 'Why do you want to see our Bibles?' I told them I had been informed that they let the priests have them, and that they burned them. With a significant smile they said: 'We read our Bibles at night, when the padres are not about.' I called upon a Mexican woman, whose daughter had formerly been my pupil, and had just before died with the yellow fever. The mother burst into tears upon my asking to see her Bible, saying: 'I put it into the coffin of Parhasus; as she loved her Bible so much when living, she wanted it buried with her.' I called upon another family; the man met me at the door. I asked him for his Bible; he too replied: 'My boy has just died, and I put the good book into his coffin by his side.' I called upon another family; the man I had known as a lover of the Bible for some years, and through him I had sent many Bibles into Mexico. I was much shocked to learn that this peaceable man had been shot by some lawless Americans while attending to his stock on the prairie. The widow told me this with streaming eyes; and upon my asking to see his Bible, she replied: 'I keep it just as he left it, with all the marks as he placed them.' She said: 'He was accustomed to sit up many hours after night to read.' I asked her if she would let me take the book for a few days—I carried it to the man who had expressed so much doubt of the good use of the Bible among the Mexicans; and after looking carefully over this well-worn Bible, and listening to the other facts I was able to relate, he acknowledged his error, and lent his aid toward a Bible society we were then establishing in Brownsville."

A CLERGYMAN asked some children, "Why do we say in the Lord's Prayer, 'Who art in heaven,' since God is everywhere?" He saw a little drummer-boy, who looked as if he could give an answer, and turned to him for it. "Well, little soldier, what do you say?" "Because it's headquarters."

GAVAZZI PREACHING IN ROME.

The Apostolic Church has organized again in Rome, and the celebrated Gavazzi is preaching the gospel there. Writing from Rome to a clergyman in Dublin, he says:

"MY VERY DEAR FRIEND: Thanks to God, I am at last in Rome, after twenty-two years of exile: and I am in Rome preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ while the Pope is still here; and I am in Rome lecturing six times a week in two different places, and lecturing against the most popish errors in spite of that fearful inquisition which would gladly even now receive me within its charitable portals. That is to me the most marvelous feature of the case: to find in the same place two such antagonistic agencies. Really the finger of God is here, and the fact will prove even to the most blind and fanatic that all is over with the temporal power of the Pope, and that Italy is the true and sole mistress of the Eternal City. As to the spirit of our people here, if you except, as a matter of course, the antipathies of all kind and sex, and their bigoted devotees, (who, however, are only a minority, nay, a fraction in our population,) it is the most promising I ever met with after Venice. The work is hard just now, and full of dangers, even personal, and yet I hope it will succeed in the most splendid way, and will end in a complete triumph. I commenced my preaching in a sufficient hall not far from the Pantheon, and without any previous notice, in order to avoid obstacles and disturbances; and yet, in a few evenings, it was so crowded as to oblige my keepers to close the doors to prevent crushing, to the disappointment of hundreds. I have accepted the kind offer of the Scotch colony here, which gave me the use of their new church out of Porta del Popolo, and where already we have a second crowded house, although my lectures there are at half-past three in the afternoon. In the hall I preach on Sunday morning, and lecture thrice weekly; in the church I lecture twice, but, owing to the wishes of the people, I shall lecture there three times also by the next week. My first course during January and February was on the benefits of the gospel; my second, at the hall, is on the church, and that of the Porta del Popolo is on the creed of Pius the Ninth. You can easily imagine the arts and war of the priests, especially the Jesuits, against such daring as this; they cannot forgive me to have brought before the people their Sanhavar conspiracy against Christ, gospel and liberty, in the very center of their power. But here I am, by the grace and blessing of God, in spite of them all, the same as ever, nay, with redoubled strength, being almost rejuvenized by the realization of all my hopes and expectations. But I have a serious grief in the midst of so many consolations, and that is the scandal offered to my Romans by the tomfooleries of the English Ritualistic party here. The so-called 'Old English Church,' door to door to the Scotch place where I lecture, is nothing else than a popish exhibition under a Protestant name. From such a Jesuitical nest many perversions to Romanism happen every year. I have to fight against their influence, holding forth to my Italians that the church is not at all Protestant, or purporting the true Christianity of Ridley and Latimer, but only a pretext to lead astray as many dupes as they can. Pray for the blessing of God on our mission, and the spread of the true gospel of our dear Jesus, even in Rome. Believe me, your affectionate friend,

STUDENTS are negligent of their bodies. Other men look to their tools: a painter will wash his pencils; a smith will look to his anvil hammer and forge; a husbandman will mend his plow-irons, and grind his hatchet if it be dull; a falconer or huntsman will have an especial care of his hawks, hounds, horses, dogs, etc.; a musician will string and unstring his lute; only scholars neglect that instrument (their brain and spirit, I mean) which they daily use.—Burton.

TURNING AN HONEST PENNY.—One of the liberal papers at Rome has just published the affidavits taken in the Eternal City a few years ago, when it was discovered that a firm of fathers of one of the religious orders were getting rich in trading in the "bones of saints," and such "relics," any amount of which they were prepared to furnish at the shortest notice and on the most reasonable terms. The thing was hushed up then, but unluckily the papers were not burned.

THE apostle Peter did not say, believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and ye shall be converted, and watch, pray, struggle, read, fast, work, and you shall be sanctified. But to one and all he said: "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of the Lord Jesus, and you shall receive the Holy Ghost."

REV. DR. FORSYTH, a Presbyterian, has been appointed chaplain at West Point.

THE BRITISH WESLEYAN CONFERENCE.—The British Wesleyan Methodist Conference opened its one hundred and twenty-eighth annual session in the city of Manchester on Wednesday, July 26th. There were present about six hundred ministers, and a considerable number of lay delegates—the latter gentlemen coming as members of the various connectional committees and as representatives of the several districts.

BROWN UNIVERSITY was founded in 1764, and is the seventh American college in point of time. When the College of Rhode Island was moved from Warren to Providence, in 1770, it had no library. Two years later President Manning writes: "We have about 250 volumes, and these are well chosen, being such as our friends could best spare." In 1843 the library contained 10,235 volumes, seventy-three years from its commencement. The present number of volumes exceeds 38,000.

SOMETHING NEW FROM INDIA.—One of the English journals printed in India states that the Rajah of Mysore has applied for an accomplished female teacher to take charge of the education of the ladies residing in his palace. Here is another of the excellent fruits of the introduction of missionary female instruction in the East. Until the establishment of the native mission schools by the wives of the missionaries no instruction of the kind was ever sought for. New York Christian Advocate.

"THE publication of the newspaper Turquie has been suspended by order of the Turkish government, in consequence of an attack on the Pope which has appeared in its columns." That is rich. The only friend left for the poor Pope is the Mohammedan Sultan, who stops a newspaper because it attacks the Pope. We wish the Pope all joy in his new ally. The next monarch to retire from business is the Sultan, and his new love for the Pope will not prolong his reign.—Observer.

THE New York Advocate, noticing the return of Rev. F. S. DeHass from Europe, says that among other relics of interest brought home by him is a complete and very ancient copy of the Pentateuch. This manuscript is of rare value, being older, it is believed, than any other in this country, and older also than the oldest of those in the British Museum. Dr. DeHass found it in possession of a sheik in the vicinity of Jerusalem, and became the fortunate purchaser. Tischendorf and other eminent Hebraists have examined the manuscript, and agree in pronouncing it very ancient, Tischendorf expressing the opinion that it antedates the Christian era."

THE Romanists are doing all they can to soothe the Pope after the loss of his dominions, and the presents given him on the occasion of his twenty-fifth anniversary amount to $5,000,000. The Queen of Wurtemberg sent him $40,000 in gold, the ex-Empress $20,000, while an unknown American was still more generous, for he presented the Pope with $250,000. We would like to know the name of this enterprising American. But all the money the Pope gets does not console him for the loss of his scepter. He cannot hurt the hair of the head of a heretic now. And the old giant chained can only growl as the world moves on and laughs at his ruin.—Observer.

M. E. CHURCH IN BUENOS AYRES.—By a letter from Rev. H. G. Jackson, Buenos Ayres, June 3, says the Northwestern Christian Advocate, we learn that our mission work is prospering in Montevideo and Rosario. In Buenos Ayres, Bro. Jackson says they are doing the best they can do under the circumstances, and are expecting to have public religious services in the basement of their new church on Sunday, the fourth or eleventh. The windows and seating for the audience floor of the building are on their way out from this country. Yellow fever has disappeared since the above was written. At Rosario they had the misfortune, on the Sunday night after the first religious services in the Spanish tongue, to have their church broken open and rifled of all their Spanish books, including hymn and note books.

THERE ARE NOW eight ministers or evangelists connected with different evangelical churches laboring in Rome. Six places of worship have been opened in different parts of the city. In these places of meeting there are held every week at least twenty services, and these are attended more or less regularly by from four to five hundred persons. Hitherto the different denominations have labored together harmoniously. Every Monday morning the ministers and evangelists, along with several brethren connected with the different churches, meet together to pray for the blessing of God, and by study of the word of God to render more solid "the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace." These meetings are held alternately in the halls belonging to the Baptist, Methodist, Free and Waldensian churches.

A MEETING was held at Heidelberg, on Sunday, August 6, to take measures for the foundation of the "Church German." Forty delegates were present, coming from various parts of Germany, Austria and Switzerland. A committee was appointed to draw up a constitution for the new church. Its main points will be the principles of the Council of Constance of 1414, subordination of the Pope to the council, separation of Church and State, participation of laymen in the management of the church, free election of bishops, communal election of pastors, and modification of the Confessional. The delegates are divided in opinion as to whether the new church should acknowledge the primacy of the Pope. The committee were instructed to submit their report for ratification at a meeting to be held at Munich in September.

IN HUNGARY, as well as Germany, the spirit of church reform is abroad. A pamphlet representing the views of a large party of Hungarian priests has been published, in which the following are given as the essential features of the proposed reform: "1. The use of the language of the country in divine service, and a revision of the calendar of saints' days (the saints' days, as a rule, to be kept on Sundays.) 2. A total reform of the present ecclesiastical discipline. 3. An improved education for the clergy. 4. Modifications of the monastic rules, or total abolition of monastic orders. 5. The abolition of disciplinary punishment referring simply to dogmatic matters. 6. The introduction of diocesan synods; and, 7, the abrogation of the law imposing celibacy on the clergy." The reform, it will be seen, is much more radical than that contemplated in Germany; and there is reason for the hope that it may meet with great success. Independent.

THE SYNOD OF CHINA.—Under this suggestive title the Evangelist says that the China Synod embraces about fifty ministers and sixteen churches. These are divided into eight presbyteries, namely, Pekin, Shantung, Ningpo, Foochow, Canton, Japan and Siam. The presbyteries of Foochow and Pekin were constituted at the meeting of the synod in Shanghai last fall. As this was the first meeting of the synod, more than half of the presbyteries were unrepresented, and failed to send up any report. During the previous year, however, fifty-four members had been added to the eight churches in the presbytery of Ningpo, making a total membership of four hundred and thirty-eight in that presbytery. One man had been licensed to preach the gospel, and nine more were in training for the same service. All these churches are contributing toward their own support; the members of one of them having engaged to give one-tenth of all their earnings to the Lord. Some of the converts have been called to endure scourgings and imprisonments for the gospel, and yet they have not renounced their faith.

AT THE RECENT MEETING of the Wesleyan Missionary Committee of Review, at Manchester, England, the Rev. W. J. Davis (from South Africa, author of the Kafir Dictionary and Kafir Grammar) gave a very interesting account of the establishment and growth of the mission in South Africa, showing the difficulties with which the Rev. W. Shaw had had to contend at the outset, and how much the society were indebted to him for what he had done. He stated that in 1823 there was but one chapel, and now there were 137, besides 693 native huts and other buildings in which worship was held on the Sabbath day, and they had 800 services now held every Sabbath day. In 1823 there were 63 members of society, all Europeans; whereas now they had 11,374 members, and 2,963 on trial; of whom more than 10,000 had been converted from heathenism. In 1823 there were two local preachers, Europeans; now 850, of whom 750 had been converted from heathenism; and thus it was that they supplied more than 800 places of worship. In 1823 they had one Sunday school, and about 100 children, all Europeans; now 168 Sunday schools, and 11,163 scholars. In 1823 there were no week-day schools; now 106, with 6,227 scholars. The attendance on the ministry in 1823 was about 400; but now there were 50,000 to whom they ministered the word of life; and the whole country was open to them. The advancement in the arts and appliances of civilization was equally gratifying; and the revivals had been not only remarkable, but lasting. Some of the young Kaffirs were becoming good classical and mathematical scholars, and gave evidence that the Kaffir intellect could attain to anything; and it was upon such young men that they relied for the future of Methodism in that mission.

HELPFUL HEARERS.

The preacher nsnally sees before him in every congregation some who help him in the act of preaching. Were they there alone, a mere nnclens and handfnl, and the rest of the people away, he conld still preach with animation and interest. There is something stimulating and enconraging in mere numbers; bnt the presence of a certain few is felt, in a pecnliar way, to inspire and aid in the delivery of the gospel message. On the other hand, there are hearers who nnnoy and worry, and who contribnte to depress and embarrass, rather than to strengthen and help.

The incorrigible church sleeper is the reverse of a standing compliment to the worthy preacher who is laboring with all his powers of lungs and of thonght to wake np his andience to a sense of eternal things. He may in a measure get used to chronic cases of somnoleney, but generally the depressing effect will tell in spite of every effort to throw it off. Paul found it easier to raise Entychus from the dead than to keep him awake during that long sermon which lasted till midnight. Whether or not this circumstanee is a rebuke to the sleepers of the sanctnary, it should be some comfort to those whose ministrations are afflicted by them. A sleeping hearer is worse by far than an empty pew or a lifeless post. We can comprehend his infirmity, sympathize with him in his constitutional proclivity, and we might even hazard the opinion that it is better for him to come than to stay away. If he does his best—goes to bed early the night before, takes his coffee as usual, and does not overfeed—he must be borne with, and all parties mnst be resigned to the inevitable. At a venture some stray arrow may hit him between the dreamy naps, and the wakeful interludes of prayer and song may be a partial means of grace. Some of the best Christians we have known have been deep and habitual sleepers; but they have not been helpful hearers. There are various degrees of sleepers. While some make a full and unconditional surrender, others spend their entire time and strength in the laudable effort to maintain their consciousness. They rub their eyes, change position, nod, and then sit straighter than ever, to show that they are most attentive. Snch persons deserve credit for a resolute and determined spirit, and illustrate the power of will to overcome the weakness of the flesh. They trouble the preacher, but it may be partly his own fault, because there is a presumption that he is himself somewhat wanting in liveliness.

There are, besides, wide-awake hearers who are not helpful. They may be entirely "at themselves," but restless, looking as if they wished to know more of their neighbors than of the sermon; twitching and jerking nervously, turning from this side to that, casting their eyes up to the ceiling, gazing out of the window, scanning faces and costumes around them, and never continning "in one stay." There are the cold, the indifferent, the critical, the belligerent, all with a set of opposition, running from half-concealed contempt to defiance. They are there from other motives, it may be, than the best; but they make a part of that strange conglomerate which we call a congregation. It is the preacher's business to reach them if he can, to arrest their attention, and to win them to seriousness and to Christ. Their presence is as that of the enemy in battle, calling out courage and exertion, but not supplying the means and munitions for the conflict.

There are occasionally good people and regular hearers who purposely sometimes—unconsciously often—act as a break npon the progress of the preacher. They seem to show dissatisfaction, look awry, hide their heads behind the back of the pew, and wriggle about as if the seat were too hard or too narrow. If their favorite preacher is not in the pulpit, or if the matter in hand does not suit the frame they are in, or if the style and manner are not altogether to their taste, they are sure to enact this offensive pantomime.

A hearer may be a helpful one, thongh nnconverted. If he be a sincere inqnirer after truth, he will be reverent and attentive, and his good breeding will supply what personal piety has failed to bestow. He may have the prejndice and misapprehension of the woman at Jacob's well, or of Nicodemns, bnt he will be open to conviction and sincerely occupied with the services of the sacred honr. An honest donbter and skeptic is far better than an indifferent and trifling soul, and is likely to draw out the strength and sympathy of the preacher. The serious and awakened penitent always aids the sermon, and enriches it with the highest elements of power. The preacher is encouraged by the prospective harvest, his deepest feelings of tenderness and compassion are aronsed, and the grandest exhibitions of divine love and mercy flow spontaneously from his lips. He is refreshed by the penitential tears which sparkle aronnd him like dew upon the grass, and his soul is kindled by the nnutterable emotions of those who are agonizing to enter in at the strait gate. The easy preaching in a revival is largely owing to this reaction upon the mind of the preacher. He has a helpfnl audience.

But there are none so helpful as some who are among the oldest and most experienced in the things of God. They are capable of appreciating the spirit, the matter and the good of every sermon. The temper in which they hear enables them to find and separate the wheat from the chaff, and to bring out the beautiful and the good, even when surrounded with blemishes and imperfections. They have the rare capacity of enjoying all gospel subjects, and of appreciating the most diverse styles of preaching. They have breadth of understanding, unfailing considerateness, spiritual discernment and broad sympathies. They are enlisted with the subject, although it may be foreign to their present experience and wants; and they are enlisted for the preacher, because they know his heart, and that he is dealing with the needs and conditions of others. Next to the divine anointing, such people in an audience are the preacher's best allies. They hold up his hands and cheer his heart, and are as a body guard about him when he lifts the standard of the cross. They are in full sympathy with the work of Christ, and the droppings of the sanctuary fall upon them as the rain upon the well-tilled fields. They visibly feed upon the word, and "take the water of life freely." The river, "the streams whereof make glad the city of our God," is flowing full and fresh in their souls, and there is in them something that responds to every presentation of religious truth. "As in water face answereth to face, so the heart of man to man;" and "as iron sharpeneth iron, so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend."

These helpful hearers are men and women of prayer, who love the gospel for its own sake, and with whom hearing is not a patient endurance, but a joyous privilege. Young preachers on their first circuits have found a sprinkling of them at their appointments, and have felt their bracing and comforting influence while they have gone tremblingly through the delivery of their message. Ministers of the largest experience will recall the faces of some, in every congregation they have served, whose presence was to them a refreshment and a tower of strength. Their features shone and pulsated with waves of light, while the moistened eye and the suppressed emotion reflected the sermon as in a glass. Blessed mission that some are performing in this way! and blessed are the memories of others who, after being helpful hearers below, are now in the heavenly places above! The helpful hearer is doing a threefold work: he is inspiring the preacher, winning souls to Christ, and saving himself.

OUTWARD—TO THE PACIFIC.

BY BISHOP KEENER.

SACRAMENTO, August 14, 1871.

The fertile region between Kansas City and Omaha I passed mainly during the night. In the morning Council Bluffs came into view: high hills covered thinly with soft verdure, without tree or bush, with ridgy sides. The effect is at first very pleasant to the eye, and seems to give more atmosphere to the landscape than if the hills were wooded. This smooth-surfaced hill and mountain never leaves the traveler on this route until the Nevada mountains are reached; it at length wearies, and one longs for the sight of wooded sides and tops.

Omaha is upon a broken, elevated site, half a mile from the river. It is now building a railroad bridge across the Missouri, of grand proportions, upon piers made by sinking iron tubes into the bed of the river, and filling them with concrete, at a cost of one or two millions. The place is an offshoot of Chicago; is largely advertised, contains twenty thousand inhabitants, and has, I think, very nearly attained its growth. It has nothing like the support and promise and position of Kansas City. Indeed the further I traveled westward the more was I impressed with the belief that, next to St. Louis, Kansas City is the best located town west of the Mississippi river. The further you go west the thinner the soil.

From the Missouri out for a thousand miles the valleys and plains have been graded by nature for railway purposes. The water system of the Nile sources is not more marked than this railway system of the Rocky and Humbolt mountain slopes. The Pacific road was the cheapest and easiest road ever built, until within twelve hours of Sacramento. The engineering by which a child can walk over the Simplon has been surpassed here by nature; for the locomotive rises and passes over the Rocky mountains so gradually, mile by mile, that you attain an elevation of eight thousand feet without cut or embankment, or anything to make the fact apparent, except the thinness and coldness of the atmosphere. The road is a single track, with capital bed, and is in fine running order. Cars are all that could be desired. Snow fences are an item, and are distributed all along the high points of the road. Snow sheds occur as you approach the Sierra. The immense cost of these fences, and the general leanness of the region through which the road passes, led me to doubt if it paid. But, upon inquiry, I learn that it has an immense freight and passenger business from San Francisco to Utah, Nevada, Montana, Colorado and Idaho, which are all mining regions. Besides, the company has land grants of great value in California, and is rich enough to control all the railway enterprises in this State. Its stock is controlled by eight or ten men, each of whom is thereby a millionaire.

It was far out in the dreary regions between Cheyenne and Ogden that I saw, for the first time, that curious, harmless little creature—the prairie dog. There was quite a colony of them, and at the door of their burrows several of them were sitting up and looking very saucily at the train; had evidently become used to the latest rush of steam, and not at all inclined to go further. They are brown, about half way between a squirrel and guinea-pig, and have a very sociable face. There were no symptoms of their imposed friends—the owl and rattlesnake. Just after passing this warren an antelope came into view, distant four hundred yards, standing alone upon a bare hill-top, and looking steadily at us. There was nothing between this little creature and the blue sky, as he stood to us, and all around was sand and rock. Presently he concluded to be frightened, wheeled and ran swiftly far away. In all, some eight or ten antelopes, a few water fowl, the prairie dogs and a dozen or two Indians were the only signs of life that interrupted the three days of steam passage over the great desert, which consumes so large a part of our American continent. Twelve hundred miles without a single tree—almost without a bush—is something hard to imagine. There is not so very much of this Western world, after all. The pioneer must make up his mind very soon where he will stop; for only a little way beyond Kansas and there is nothing left to choose from, excepting this strip on the Pacific coast. This railroad has let in much light upon our inheritance. The charm of an unknown and immeasurable region beyond must now be sought southward—Mexico. Central America and the lands of the Orinoco is the course to which the "Star of Empire" must henceforth take its way.

I used to wonder why people came back from this trans-continental railway trip and were so monosyllabic in their raptures; but the fact is, there was nothing to say—they had seen nothing but clay and alkali and lava, and bowlders as big as a kitchen; of course, friable red granite. Even the sage brush could not find a lodgment upon the sides and tops of the hills, though apparently willing to grow anywhere on any terms, and in its color and size looking much like a stone. On the other hand, one's admiration increases for the hardihood of those who have made their way out, day by day, over these Siberian steppes, in thirst and weariness, and dreariness and dangers, until months were consumed in the passage. It was only less than the campaign of marchings of Israel through the deserts of Sin and Zin, without the cloud that led or the stream that followed.

The next features of this route to the land of gold are the gorges and canyons through which the train curves and glides as a snake through the grass. There are mountains of rock on each side, billows of stone each higher than the other, congealed as by a word, with an ocean still behind; now all arrested just over some peaceful stream, as if God, by a "thus far," had protected it from surging mountains that are too proud to look down, holding their heads far away. Sometimes jagged, overhanging cliffs appear as if the thunder of the train, aided by winter frosts, might bring down a thousand tons a thousand feet.

Among these dry places, fit for the haunts of the "unclean spirit," the Mormon has found a Dead Sea, a Jordan, a New Jerusalem and a Sodom. Emerging from Webber Canyon, the train stops in the valley of Salt Lake. Naturally beautiful to one who has sickened over dreary wastes, this vale burst suddenly upon the sight like a vision of the promised land. Wheat fields just reaped, green patches, houses, the broad expanding lake, its margin of rich land, and just across it, twenty miles distant, a range of hazy, clean-cut mountains, the sun just going down behind them and purpling the atmosphere, composed a painter's landscape grand as Italy can yield. The train runs round the head of the lake, and you look down its length, one hundred and twenty miles, toward the radiant home of the Latter-day Saints. A train leaves Ogden, and in two hours you are there. The Northern Methodists have a church in the city, and recently a great notorious light has visited those that sit in that valley: but with what success time alone can disclose.

This letter is too long. Suffice it to say that I am here in Sacramento, on Saturday afternoon, with two appointments for to-morrow. Bro. Klose, of the Spectator, after the style of the first century, met me at the Three Taverns, a day out on this iron Appian Way, and bade me welcome to California—whom, when I saw, I thanked God and took courage.

EUROPEAN CORRESPONDENCE.

ROME, August 7, 1871.

MY DEAR STEWARDS: It was Dean Alford, I believe, who, in writing of his visit to Rome, failed to mention the Colosseum—the only traveler ever known to be guilty of such an omission. But I can tell you why he made the omission: the subject was too big for him. And following the Dean's wise example, I would gladly, if I could, omit Rome altogether from my letters, for I am actually dismayed before the mass of material that has accumulated upon my hands. Only look for a moment at the subject-matter in bare outline—matter that will come up, unless I close my bodily eyes to the objects that surround me, or suspend memory and reflection altogether; in other words, turn lunatic. See! Rome, ancient, modern—a stone of human configuration here that connects the period of 700 years before Christ with the Rome of to-day, as seen in a piece of masonry there, and which I can see without changing my position, the mortar that cements which is hardly yet dry; nor only so, but it is highly probable that that single stone, a relic of the flint period, an epoch far removed from any written records, tells of a far greater antiquity for the city of Rome than the date of B. C. 700 years. That single stone is the first thing, and with that for the heading of the first chapter, while around me there lie broken columns, and walls, and arches, and aqueducts, and monuments, and basilicas, and temples, and palaces, and piles of masonry of every description, all having their story—what hope is there of ever getting through with such a subject? The bare outline is not yet fairly begun. Take the first object of interest that I visited—let us begin there—the Colosseum. Of course I must not make Dean Alford's mistake, or I should not be a greater man than he. I shall be sure to mention the Colosseum; but at the same time I hear some one aside say: "What will he do with it?" Answer: Drop the subject as quickly as possible, my friend; it is a little too heavy to carry it far. I saw the Colosseum first by moonlight—a most auspicious time to feel its weight—within two hours after my arrival in Rome. Its weight is as follows, viz: Eighteen hundred years, the largest theater, the only Colosseum in the world; one-third, still standing, of a gigantic elliptical structure, whose external circumference measures one thousand seven hundred and ninety feet, or upward of one-third of a mile; its ancient height standing, perhaps, for one-fourth of the circumference or more, four stories of galleries that provided seats, according to the books—and seeing is believing—for eighty-seven thousand spectators, five thousand wild animals, and perhaps twice as many human victims slain in the gladiatorial combats that continued during one hundred days at its inauguration; the arena, by no great effort of the imagination, yet echoing with the shrieks and streaming with the blood of thousands, thousands of unhappy men and beasts; the galleries yet vocal with the shouts of yet wilder beasts in human shape; the material yet remaining of the stupendous ruin, worth two millions and a half of dollars—"a noble wreck in ruinous perfection;" generations gone of men and women, kings and peoples, princes and plebeians, crowding now the vast amphitheater; ghostly spectators, to the number of millions—mute witnesses for judgment to their iniquity; guilty may represented—that is something of the weight which, with this, I gladly throw off.

But history awaits my escape from the Colosseum, and summons me to fresh burdens of recollection and reflection. The centuries have heaped rubbish upon the city that was once the mistress of the world, and buried it deeper than graves are usually dug; so that, with the exception of the capitol and a few buildings on elevated sites, the Rome that was now lies open only to the spade of curious inquiry. Excavations are being prosecuted all the time, and the remains of pride and glory are at intervals unearthed. Pride, glory, remains, unearthed—words are these that tell of the inevitable succession, the fall of pride, and

"The path of glory leads but to the grave."

The number and extent of the ruins still preserved is very considerable. Rome was called the Eternal City, and properly, for the wonderful vigor with which many of its structures have survived fire and wars and barbarian incursions. The ancient capitol and forum stand immediately adjacent and hard by the palace of the Cæsars gradually yields to excavation. The capitol has been rebuilt several times, but is still ancient enough to tell of venerable empire and gorgeous magnificence sunk into decay. The forum presents to view only a few broken columns, but they seem to be so many pedestals from which Cicero and Cataline and their contemporaries are still haranguing the assembled wisdom of Rome. The palace of the Cæsars would hardly shelter a bat now, but it is probable that the Antonines dwelt there, under whose wise and peaceful reign the empire and mankind in general of that age enjoyed the highest degree of prosperity. The nearly perfect arch of Titus, erected to his honor on his return from the destruction of Jerusalem, is almost exactly eighteen hundred years old to-day. Later, the column of Trajan, the column of Marcus Aurelius, the sumptuous baths of Caracalla with their rich mosaic pavements bear witness to the observer's eye of the skillful and successful handcraft of a thousand years ago, and more. Columns of the temple of Jupiter and the temple of Saturn still standing, are memorials of the spattered shrines of false gods, and a warning of the desolations determined upon idolatry. The Appian Way—the great military road, the "queen of roads"—built in the third century, is still to be seen, but has been excavated for only about ten miles, the remainder still lying under ground. The long Claudian aqueduct, built full eighteen hundred years ago, out of use now still presents miles of unbroken arches. The tombs of the Scipios and other great men are in wonderful and sacred preservation. In all these things, and many others which I have seen, and do not pretend to mention, ancient Rome has an identity to-day on this spot as distinct and clear as that which it could well claim in its glory, and which sharply separates it, as by a chasm wide and deep, from Rome modern. I sought for some connecting link, some bridge to cross the interval, nor found it until I entered the catacombs, the burial places of the early Christian centuries. Here death, which first separates, and then brings together again those whom it has separated, gently conducts us across from the Rome that was to the Rome that is. They are gone, the generations that once thronged these now deserted avenues and palaces and temples, and are like water spilt upon the ground, that cannot be gathered up again. It was thus at last that the burdened memory had to dispose of the Cæsars and Ciceros, of whom I had read from my boyhood I could only with great difficulty realize that I actually looked upon objects familiar with their presence and identical with their career; for I had never, in the boldest dreams of my future, entertained but a very slender hope that I should at some time be where I am now. The poet has said thus much in immortal verse, and I may not improperly have occupied a paragraph of my letter to you with a similar experience. I will add two or three of the poet's lines:

"And I am here!
Ah! little thought I, when in school I sat,
A school-boy on his bench, at early dawn
Glowing with Roman story, I should live
To tread the Appian."

But the difficulty to realize my situation culminated at the point of intensest interest, when I thought of one other name and character, which, in anticipation, I had, as it were, reserved for my contemplations last. Paul. I make his name a sentence of itself. It is more than a sentence. It is a volume, a library. Paul was here. Here are buildings on which his eye must have rested. Here are walls that have heard his voice. Here he was stationed for two years of his itinerancy. It was along this Appian Way, doubtless, that he was led out to execution, taking a scaffold on the way to glory. His hired house is in dust now, and likewise the earthly house of his tabernacle; but you know what he said—read it in Second Corinthians, v, 1. But why do I so boast myself of standing in Paul's tracks? Have not others, a plenty, been in Rome? Even so; but Job said: "Whom I shall see for myself." So I.

But I see that Rome will claim another letter. W. V. TUDOR.

REVIVAL ITEMS.

Rev. L. Ercanbrack, writing from Webberville, Texas, August 15, says: "We have recently had a glorious revival of religion at Webberville. Some one hundred and seventeen or one hundred and eighteen have been converted; forty-three have joined us, and a good many have united with the Baptists and a few with the Presbyterians."

Rev. E. W. Simmons, East Baton Rouge circuit, Mississippi Conference, writes that at two meetings—one held at Bethel and the other at Antioch—seventy-two were added to the church.

Rev. C. L. Dobbs, writing from Lawrenceville, Alabama, August 21, says: "We have just closed a protracted meeting at Clopton, Alabama. The church was very much revived. I don't know the precise number of conversions. Fifteen were added to the church. The amounts assessed the church for missions, superannuates and Bishops were raised; several hundred dollars were also subscribed for church repairs."

Thanks to Laymen and Preachers.

We have to acknowledge this week our indebtedness to the exertions of two laymen for thirty subscribers—one sends ten and the other twenty; while for twenty-five others we are indebted to three of our preachers, (seven, eight and ten,) making fifty-five from five persons. One of these brethren, who sent ten subscribers and a draft for $30, says: "It is my determination to do everything in my power to put the ADVOCATE in every Methodist family on my circuit before the close of the year."

WE HAVE RECEIVED the first volume of Our Home Journal, handsomely bound. This journal, published by James H. Hummel, 106 Camp street, New Orleans, is devoted to agriculture, science, and the industrial interests of the South generally. Great credit is due Mr. Hummel for the enterprise and taste displayed in the publication of this beautiful and valuable paper. We are glad to learn that it has already become a successful and profitable undertaking.

HEALTH OF THE CITY.—We can assure our friends at a distance that the city is free from yellow fever. We have never known a healthier season, and there is every prospect of continued exemption from all epidemic diseases.

A CHILD, while walking through an art gallery with her mother, was attracted by a statue of Minerva. "Who is that?" said she. "My child, that is Minerva, the goddess of wisdom." "Why didn't they make her husband too?" "Because she had none, my child." "That was because she was wise, wasn't it, mamma?" was the artless reply.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

THE LOUISVILLE DEBATE is a volume of 704 pages, published at Lexington, Kentucky, by J. D. Trapp, of the Apostolic Times. The book contains the reported debate between Elder L. B. Wilkes, of the Christian Church, and Rev. Jacob Ditzler, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Mr. Ditzler is widely known as an able debater, and thoroughly posted on the subject of baptism, while his opponent, Mr. Wilkes, is a representative man in his denomination. We suppose that the subject is thoroughly and ably handled by both parties, and, judging from the size of the volume, they have pretty well exhausted the theme. The question discussed, What is Christian baptism? embraces a wide range, and all interested can here find the views of the Campbellites and their vindication, as well as one of the latest and most satisfactory defenses of the doctrines of our church.

WE HAVE RECEIVED from the publishers, Sower, Potts & Co., Philadelphia, the Normal Elementary Algebra, by Edward Brooks, A. M. The author of this work is a teacher of large experience, and author of several valuable text books. He is principal of the Pennsylvania State Normal School, and favorably known as an educator. The present volume is strictly elementary, but its extent, matter and method appear to be admirable.

THE ILLUSTRATED CHRISTIAN WEEKLY for August 26 is promptly at hand with a varied table of contents, and an unusual number of fine engravings. The great Central Park of New York is depicted in a series of illustrations, and the editor promises to illustrate Prospect Park of Brooklyn in a few weeks. We notice that the publishers offer to send the first three months of the paper, stitched in paper covers, postpaid, to any address, for only fifty cents. This affords an excellent opportunity to all to examine this beautiful illustrated weekly. Address Illustrated Christian Weekly, New York.

THE September number of Scribner's Magazine is splendidly illustrated, and contains the following among other excellent articles: Pictures from Canada; Mercator, the Path-finder of the Seas; The River of Egypt; The Co-Education of the Sexes; An Adventure in Japan; A New Study of an Old Force.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE for September is one of the best numbers yet issued. It has in its table of contents: Scrambles Among the Alps; Shall we Throw Physic to the Dogs? The City of Monuments; Wild Ireland, and Insect Locomotion, besides Our Monthly Gossip, Literature of the Day, etc.

GOOD HEALTH for September has articles of unusual interest. Among these we note: National Health; Near-Sightedness or Myopia; Sunstroke; Medical Treatment of Insanity. This periodical is published by Alexander Moore, Boston. Price, $2 per annum.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE for August 19 has a fine table of contents. Hugh Miller; The Character of Christ; The Function of Physical Pain—Anæsthetics; The Literary Life; A Wrestle with Niagara, and Roman Notes are the titles of some of the articles.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY for September has the following principal articles in its table of contents: Twin Love; The Field and the Garden; American Life in France; Our Whispering Gallery; The Romance of Mallone Hollow.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL JOURNAL for September is an excellent number of a very superior publication. It is specially adapted for the use of teachers and young people. Carlton & Lanahan, publishers, New York.

THE UNIVERSITY MONTHLY for August has: No. 5 on Storm Signals; Examination Papers; The Uses of Greek and Latin; Composition Writing; Cyclones, and other articles of merit and interest.

APPLETONS' JOURNAL is rich in art and literature. The number of September 2 is one of special interest. The illustrations are helpful, and have much artistic merit.

EVERY SATURDAY for August 26 has a likeness of Sir Walter Scott, a Peep at St. Pauls, and Scenes at Long Branch; also a picture of Frond, the historian.

ARTHUR'S LADY'S HOME MAGAZINE can always be safely commended for its high moral tone and literary excellence. The number for September is handsomely illustrated.

THE CHILDREN'S HOUR, by the same publishers, is always "a thing of beauty" in its line. The September number is as charming as heretofore.

THE New York Teacher and American Educational Monthly for September is duly to hand.

THE GIFT OF GOD.—The water-carriers in Egypt, as they bear about their bottles of water on their shoulders, cry: "The gift of God! the gift of God!"

Obituaries.

Sister REBECCA J. RANN departed this life on the third of August, 1871. She leaves a husband, two little children and many friends to mourn her loss. She died in the faith of the gospel.

At four o'clock on Saturday morning, August 12, 1871, after suffering for several months, Sister ANN KING, consort of William L. King, of Yazoo county, fell asleep in Jesus without a struggle. Her place cannot be filled here on earth. Death seems to select the brightest marks.

Proper obituary notices will appear soon.
THOS. W. FLOWERS.

Died, at Winona, Mississippi, August 1, 1871, EDWARD MANN, only child of N. R. and Alice C. Arendal.

"Little Mann," as he was lovingly called, was one year and ten months old—a child of rare beauty and brightness, greatly endeared to his grandfather, R. H. Powell, and his family, as well as to his now afflicted parents. What a painful vacuum death has made there! Is this a stroke of our Father's love? Whom he loveth he afflicteth. May the bereaved say: "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord;" and as David: "He is dead. Can I bring him back again? I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me."

"I take the little lambs," said he,
"And lay them in my breast;
Protection they shall find in me,
In me be ever blest." W. P. B.

Died, at the residence of H. H. Bradford, in East Baton Rouge parish, on Thursday, August 17, 1871, MARY LOUCATIE, oldest daughter of H. H. and Victoria Bradford, aged two years and ten months.

"Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me; for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

"I take the little lambs," said he,
"And lay them in my breast;
Protection they shall find in me,
In me be ever blest.

"Their feeble frames my power shall raise,
And mold with heavenly skill;
I'll give them tongues to sing my praise,
And hands to do my will."

His words the happy parents hear,
And shout with joys divine:
"O Savior! all we have and are Shall be forever thine."

A FRIEND.

MRS. MARY FRANCIS GREEN, wife of C. M. Green, died near Burnt Corn, Alabama, August 4, 1871, aged about forty years.

Thus has passed away one whose life was a consistent and beautiful illustration of our holy Christianity. In early life she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and continued an acceptable member of the same until admitted into the church triumphant. Of refined sensibilities and cultivated manners, the deceased was an ornament to the domestic circle, a devoted wife, and a prudent, loving mother. Guided by conscience, under the teachings of the Bible, she made the will of God the rule of her conduct, and in all the relations of life left no duty unobserved, no office of kindness unperformed. Never, during an intimate acquaintance of many years, has the writer known her to use a harsh or unkind word. During a painful and protracted sickness no word of murmuring or complaining escaped her lips.

She was calm and serene in Christian resignation to the will of her Heavenly Father, and only hoped to be spared the pangs of death; but in this she was not gratified. Conscious that death was approaching, she desired to embrace her two boys. In a few hours after she entered into rest. Beloved by all who knew her, she so lived that death had no terrors for her. In her sickness she said that she had no fear of death. The last audible words she was heard to say were, "Glory be to God!" and her spirit fled. May God bless the bereaved husband and children.

"Let me die the death of the righteous, and may my last end be like his."

H. J. HUNTER, Pastor.

Died, at the residence of Mrs. Narcissa Taylor, after a severe illness of four weeks, at forty-seven minutes past four o'clock A. M. on the third of August, 1871, MARY D. GILL, wife of William H. Gill, and daughter of Samuel and Narcissa Taylor, of Sumter county, Alabama, aged thirty-seven years, eleven months and twenty-six days.

She was the subject of much and intense affliction for the larger portion of the last three years. She was strongly attached to her family and many friends, and, had it been God's will, would have preferred to live longer, especially to raise her children, for whom she had great solicitude; but God saw fit to take her away in the prime of life, and she and we had to say: "The will of the Lord be done." She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, under the preaching of the Rev. O. P. Thomas, about two years ago, in Gadsdville, Alabama. Her standard of piety was very high, and she often expressed to the writer a wish to be ill for a full enjoyment of the largest blessings of God's gracious goodness. By afflictions God seemed to temper her mind for heavenly things, so that she became more and more like our heavenly Master as she neared the better land. During the last of her sickness her organs of speech became partially paralyzed, which prevented her expressing herself to us on any subject, although she often made efforts to do so.

Mary leaves a devoted husband, three children, a fond mother, two affectionate sisters and two brothers, and a large circle of dear and loved friends to lament her loss; but they mourn not without hope. Blessed be God for the Christian's hope. What is life without it? Mary, we bade thee good by; but we will meet thee again, and then in that bright beyond, the Jerusalem above, we will no more say farewell. HUSBAND.

MRS. MARTHA A. SCOGIN died at the residence of her father, in Butler county, Alabama, July 6, 1871, aged twenty-three years, five months and eighteen days.

Her father, Rev. S. F. Pilley, and mother, S. H. Pilley, are among the most faithful old soldiers of the cross. Long have they been fighting the good fight of faith, and still they are at their post in the army of Christians, battling against sin and for the cause of the Savior. The old man is well known all through our connection here as a superannuated member of the Alabama Conference, but even in his old age a highly gifted preacher. He has a son, also a member of our Conference, and a daughter, the wife of another faithful itinerant; another son at their home in South Butler, who gives promise of usefulness as a minister, if the church will aid him a little in procuring the necessary education, which, I am happy to learn, she is taking steps to do through the instrumentality of our excellent presiding elder. Three other brothers and two other sisters, in addition to those above mentioned, and a little child and husband are left to mourn the death of Sister Scogin. Her infant, W. B. Scogin, died February 7, 1871, aged four months and twenty-six days. A merciful God called the little angel child home first, it may be, to welcome the mother, who was then suffering with consumption. She did not tarry long after the death of her child. At an early age Sister Scogin assumed the obligations of her baptism before the world, and the distinguishing characteristic of her conduct, though so young, was Christian propriety and decorum. The precise time of her conversion she could not tell; neither could she remember when she first began to pray and seek the protection of God. But she had the more important knowledge of present acceptance with God. Her piety was practical. It was principle controlling the emotional nature, teaching her spirit how to suffer patiently those evils in this life which a sensitive nature is often made to feel, but cannot control. She had learned to suffer. During her last sickness, while consumption was bringing her with rapid steps nearer and nearer to the grave, no expressions of impatience were uttered. Quietly the struggle went on between her disease and life. She had a desire to live to educate her little girl. For herself she had no fear. About half an hour before she breathed her last her brother asked her if she suffered pain. She answered: "No." "Is the mind perplexed?" "A little." Her answer was in allusion to her child. She asked him to pray. The prayer was offered, and just as it was ended anxiety seemed to disappear from the mind, and she gently slept in Jesus. Leaving one little child in the care of God among her friends, her spirit took up its rapid flight to rejoin the little angel child in the better land. Her spirit left its earthly tenement about the time the sun was setting in great beauty. Though I was thirty miles away from the place where she died, long will I remember the beauty of that setting sun. The material heavens conveyed to my mind the idea of a vast audience room in some superhuman place. The richness, gorgeousness and magnificence of its drapery so stirred my love of the beautiful and sublime in the works of God that I instinctively called my wife from the room, where she was busying herself, to join me in enjoying the glory of the scenery. The colors of the cloudy hangings of the sky were various. Snowy whiteness, and dark, orange and golden, silvery-lined, pink and saffron hangings were so mingled and grouped, and their exquisite tints so noiselessly spread out with the cloud as to baffle all attempts at description, while they wafted in silent grandeur amid the rays of the setting sun. Little did we know then that this was the time when Sister Scogin was leaving this world for the glory land. Though when I saw her, about five days before, she appeared to be hastening near the shores of time, yet I was not prepared to hear she was dead so soon. But two days after, this I learned, at her burial, from Mother Pilley, that this was the very time when she breathed her last. Fit emblem was that scenery of the royal palace above, to which she has gone—the house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, in the city of the New Jerusalem. Christians may not inhabit gorgeously-arrayed palaces in this world, especially when they are members of itinerant families, but their homes in heaven will be glorious. What richly-adorned earthly palace is worthy to be compared with the beauty and grandeur of God's works in this world? How much less with the home of the redeemed, where Sister Scogin has gone, at the right hand of God.

IT IS THE INVENTION of a Kentuckian, on the Fulling Mill principle, and is operated by rocking.

Washing of clothes is so simplified by this machine that either a man, woman or child can do the work, and do it well.

It will thoroughly WASH, RINSE and BLUE one hundred (100) ordinary Pieces of Clothing in forty-five (45) minutes, without the LEAST WEAR of the clothing, the breaking of a button or the pulling of a thread.

The most delicate Fabrics can be washed with it without the least injury.

While it washes, it bleaches likewise.

It will wash Blankets, and give them a new appearance and feeling.

Its construction is so simple it will last for years with care, and cost less than wash tubs in the aggregate. Any one can repair it, as there are no cog-wheels or cranks to replace.

Price, $12; with Little Giant Wringer, $18.

The LITTLE GIANT WRINGER requires no adjustment to wring either a roller or a blanket. It can be used independent of the machine, if desired. Price, $5.

I would ask attention to the following note of the Rev. P. M. Goodwyn, of the Louisiana Conference, addressed to the editor of this paper:

"MR. EDITOR: Among your new advertisements I notice one of the 'Woman's Friend Washing Machines,' and if you will allow me I will say a word or two in regard to it, for the benefit of any who might like to have an outsider's opinion of it. Walking down Camp street some days since, I noticed one of these machines in front of a store, and, interested as I always am in everything that promises to be labor-saving and useful, I stopped to examine it. My first thought was: Here is the true principle on which to construct a machine for washing clothes. A day or two after, having consulted my good wife, I ordered one sent to my house; and having had it tested most thoroughly, under my own eye, I do not hesitate to say that its performance comes fully up to all that Mr. Thompson, the proprietor and manufacturer of it in this city, claims for it. The machine does its work, and does it well, in the time specified in the advertisement; and if the person managing it is active in handling clothes, and putting them through the 'Wringer,' it will be found that the job of washing is one that is soon over with. HIWASSEE COLLEGE.

THE TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL SESSION of this school will begin on the FIRST MONDAY IN AUGUST, 1871. The entire expense for board and tuition, for forty weeks, will be $150. The board is of the best description that the country affords, being furnished by the steward from his own farm and prepared by the hands of his own family. We had boys from five different States last year, and not a word of complaint was ever made on this point, which is often the subject of just complaint at boarding schools. The fare is peculiarly grateful to Southern boys, who require a more generous diet when they change their climate.

The manner of governing the school is paternal, as the entire exemption from temptations in the surrounding country renders the discipline easy. The institution is under the care of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, but under my own control. The young men attending the school last year were, without exception, moral and religious. Young men preparing for the ministry may receive tuition free, and in certain cases can obtain lower rates of board. Regular services are held in the College Chapel.

The location of the school is near Madisonville, Monroe county, East Tennessee, in the midst of a fruitful and beautiful country, and surrounded by a thrifty and intelligent population. No negroes live in the neighborhood, all the laborers in the fields and servants in the families being white. The citizens of Monroe county were true to the South in her late struggle, and have adhered to Southern churches.

Students arriving by the East Tennessee and Virginia Railroad will get off at Sweetwater, forty miles south of Knoxville, whence they will find conveyance to the college, seven miles distant.

Our post office is Madisonville, Tennessee.

P. S. 1. Families from the South will find good board in the neighborhood, and a delightful summer retreat at White Cliff Springs, sixteen miles distant from Madisonville. For information on this point parties may address H. A. McKenzie, steward of the college. The health of the country is proverbial.

P. S. 2. Younger boys may be safely sent to this school, as all are under the immediate oversight of the principal, both when in school and when at the boarding house.

The Great Equivalent.—The world may be safely challenged to produce so perfect a simulation of anything in nature as is of its original, the Seltzer Spring of Germany. The Aperient, based on a correct analysis of the Seltzer Water, is even superior to the manufacture of Nature herself, because it contains all the active medicinal properties of the spring, unalloyed by any of the inert and useless particles found in all mineral fountains. The genuine article being secured, you have the Seltzer Water of Europe, purified and perfected, and probably the best, the most genial cathartic and anti-bilious preparation on the face of the earth.

THE OLD LADY.

[illegible]

The Boy Hugh Miller.

Hugh Miller was a Scotch boy. He did not wear fine clothes, or go to a fine school, or have anything fine. Indeed, he never, even when a man, cared much for fine things, unless they were good and useful at the same time. His father was a sailor; a right honest, brave fellow, who had often risked his life for others; but he was drowned in a storm one night when Hugh was only a little boy of five, and nothing was ever heard either of him or his sloop afterward.

When every one else had given up all hope, Hugh would go to the banks and sit and look out for "the sloop with the two stripes of white and the two square topsails," but she never came. So he was an orphan. Hugh's mother worked hard at the needle to keep him and his little sisters in comfort; and he was put to school. He was very ready to learn. In playtime he loved to wander by the seashore and in the woods. He must have been a very cheerful companion, for the best of the scholars soon joined him in these excursions; and they all agreed they got good from them, and never forgot either them or Hugh.

Hugh had learned, when a very small boy, that "the art of reading was the art of finding stories in books," and he almost always carried a book with him when he went to the seaside, and would get a little time to read by himself, or would read aloud to his companions. He tried many things while a mere boy, just as boys do now; he made verses, and he began to excel. He found out at last that he could write prose better than poetry, and he wrote such prose, when a man, as few men have been able to beat. There were a great many caves near where Hugh lived; one was called Pigeon's Cave, which Hugh and another boy discovered, and where they were shut in nearly all one dark and rainy night by the rising tide. It was very deep, and they were very much interested exploring it. The pigeons, much disturbed by the sight of visitors, whirred by them through the gloom; flocks of seagulls screamed over their heads, and a shoal of porpoises made a small tempest in the water. In the midst of their explorations night came on, and they found their fine cave was neither more nor less than a prison. They climbed every way in vain, for the shelf of rock, by which they came, was covered by the tide, and there was no other way to get out.

"What will my mother think?" cried the poor little fellow who was Hugh's companion. "I would care nothing for myself, but my mother!" and he burst into tears. Hugh did his best to comfort him, and forgot his own sorrow and alarm in his sympathy for his little friend. Night came on, as I said, both dark and rainy, and they lay down in one corner of the cave with their arms around each other's neck.

Toward morning two boats paddled in, the men shouting their names. They were out in search of the missing boys; and, not finding them in the woods, and concluding they had fallen from the cliffs, a boat had been manned to cruise round and find them, dead or alive. They were alive, and glad enough to be found.

Hugh loved nothing better than to spend his afternoons seeing what was to be seen; and in this way his eyes were sharpened to observe things. Bees, butterflies, dragons and spiders he watched closely; nor would he hurt the smallest living thing. Weak people and little children loved him dearly as he grew up; he was so tender-hearted and kind.

When he was old enough, Hugh was apprenticed to a mason, and, as the quarry where he worked was near the shore, he was often seen going along the beach with his hammer in his hand, striking off bits of rock, many of which he carried home in a bag. The people did not know what to make of it. He gathered and gathered till he had a whole store of stones, and went to all sorts of places to find more.

These rocks gave him a great deal to think about; and at last he wrote a whole book about them, telling how some of the stones contained the pictures of creatures which lived long before man. He told how the country looked thousands of years ago; how there were very odd fishes; and that millions on millions of tiny creatures, with the neatest snils, that do not exist now, sailed on the sea in fleets that covered whole miles, though no human eye was there to see them, presenting a sight such as for beauty we cannot see now-a-days. And he led them to see in nature, nature's God, the wonderful Creator, who is at the same time our Father and our Friend. This is not to introduce you to a great and good man, who, though dead, has written books which will some day interest you very much.

Besides, it shows the value of seeing eyes—that is, those habits of observation which help people to gain knowledge from the commonest things around them. Use your eyes, children; you are now on vacation visits all over the country, some by the seaside, some by the hillsides. Open your eyes and furnish your minds with a great deal to think of when you go home.—Child's Paper.

Hillel and Maimon.

The wise Hillel had a disciple named Maimon, in whose natural gifts he greatly delighted. But soon he perceived that Maimon trusted too much in his own wisdom, and wholly discarded the aid of prayer.

The youth said in his heart: "Why should we pray? does the Almighty need our words in order to aid and bless us? Then is he human? Can man's sighs and petitions change the counsels of the Eternal? Will not the All-merciful of himself bestow what is good and needful?" Such were the young man's thoughts.

But Hillel was grieved in his soul that Maimon considered himself wiser than the divine word, and he determined to reprove him.

One day, when Maimon went to Hillel, he found him sitting in his garden, leaning his head upon his hand; and he said: "Master, where are thy thoughts?"

Then Hillel raised his head, and answered in these words: "I have a friend who lives upon the produce of his lands, which, until now, he has cultivated with care, and has been richly rewarded for his pains; but now he has thrown aside plow and mattock, and no more cultivates his field. Thus he will soon come to poverty and lack the necessaries of life."

"Has a spirit of ill humor seized him, or has he become a fool?" asked the youth.

"Neither," answered Hillel. "He is well skilled in all human and sacred wisdom. But he says, 'The Lord is almighty,' so that he can easily supply my wants without my bending my head to labor. He is good, so that he will open his kind hand to bless my table. And how can it be contradicted?"

"How!" said the youth; "is it not tempting the Lord God? Hast thou not told him so, master?"

Then Hillel smiled and said: "I will do so now. Thou, my beloved Maimon, art the friend of whom I spake."

"I!" said the youth in amazement.

"Ay," said the old man; "dost thou not tempt the Lord? Is prayer less than labor? and are spiritual gifts less than the fruits of the field? And is he who commands thee to labor for earthly goods another than he who bids thee raise thy heart to heaven to implore heavenly blessings? O, my son, be humble, believe and pray!"

So spake Hillel, and Maimon went away to pray, and henceforth his life was a godly one.

While China is taking further steps to shut out Western civilization, Japan is inviting it in. A mint has been opened at Osaka capable of coining $40,000 and one hundred and sixty thousand smaller coins a day; three telegraph lines are projected; and a new lighthouse in the Akashi straits is to be furnished with the latest improved combination lenses from Europe. Hon. H. Capron, late Commissioner of Agriculture at Washington, has accepted a similar position offered him by the Japanese government for the purpose of improving their agricultural and industrial enterprises. His salary is to be $20,000 a year; here it is said to have been $3,500. The Japanese and Chinese are essentially different races. The former are much the more intelligent and active-minded, and, as it would appear, the more liberal and receptive of the two.

Rev. Dr. Cumming, of London, writes to the Advent Herald this synopsis of the Apocalypse. It is orthodox in faith, if it errs in knowledge.

"I do not think you entirely accept my firm belief that the Apocalypse is an itinerary from Patmos to Paradise that is to come, but you and I are at one in seeing all its stations in the light of that sunrise which will have no western declension. My hope, like yours, is not primarily any object on this side of the personal appearing of the Son of God. Between the cross and the crown there is much to encourage, but nothing to dim the splendor or diminish the orb of the Sun of Righteousness."

The Farm and Garden.

The Use of Concentrated Fertilizers.

The cause of failure in the use of concentrated fertilizers is often due to the manner in which they are applied. It is difficult for those who have been accustomed to use bulky manures to realize that the full fertilizing potency of a bushel of animal excrement may be held in a large-sized tablespoon, and that a handful of one adds to plant structures as decidedly as several shovels full of the other. A full dose of opium, as given to patients, furnishes quite a dark, bulky powder or pill; but if we separate the alkaloid principle upon which its hypnotic power depends, we have only a little, delicate white powder, which a breath of wind will blow away. The 1-8 grain powder will affect the human organism as powerfully as ten times the weight of opium. If we were so forgetful of "potencies" as to administer as much, or even one-quarter as much, of the white concentrated powder as of the bulky dark one, we should destroy our patient's life, or at least do great injury to his health. So, if in the use of genuine superphosphate or guano, or ground bones and ashes, we forget their power, and apply too much, or apply them too directly, we endanger the life of our plants.

An experiment made upon corn affords an illustrative case in point. At the time of planting, upon a field divided by a narrow strip of sward land, we directed that on one side a tablespoonful of the mixed bone and ashes should be placed in each hill, and well covered with soil; upon the other, four rows were to be treated similarly, and upon the remainder the hills should receive a double quantity. It is curious to observe the effects. The first field and the four rows are remarkably thrifty. The corn came up well, and has manifested remarkable vigor from the start. On the other hand, the over-dosed corn appeared for a long while as if it had been paralyzed by some wasting disease. It could not bear up under so much of a good thing. More free ammonia was formed at the start than could be appropriated by the tender plants, and many of them perished from over-stimulation and heat, produced by the fermentative changes of the active bodies in contact. The corn that survived is at present growing finely, and will, no doubt, afford a large yield. Now, if this had happened in the course of our regular agricultural labors, and without any understanding of the nature of the fertilizing substance used, it is probable it would have been condemned as a worthless or dangerous article. This has been the case with hundreds of experiments, and is, indeed, a perfectly natural conclusion to reach. But we must learn to reason, learn to have patience, learn the character of the substances we employ upon our lands. We must be careful how we reach conclusions; we must examine closely to see if they are based upon correct grounds. There are well-established principles in agriculture; let us cling to them, and when we get results that are puzzling or paradoxical, we must study causes, and not judge hastily.

Uses of Ashes.—Dry, clean wood ashes are richly worth twenty-five cents a bushel, we think, to any farmer who wants more manure. You can scarcely use them on any crop without very sensible results. A handful thrown around the corn plants at the first hoeing will greatly increase their growth, and give them a highly dark green color. Scattered in the hill before the potato is covered, or about the hill just before hoeing, will have similar results. Sown broadcast on the mowing fields, at the rate of as small an amount as five bushels to the acre, will greatly increase the growth and color of the crop. Besides this, their beneficial results will continue for several years in succession. Strewed over young cabbage plants, squashes, melons, or any of the garden vegetables, such as tomatoes, beets, onions, turnips or carrots, wood ashes not only tend to disturb the insects that infest the plants, but have a decided influence on their growth and quality. All the ashes made on the farm should be collected with care, kept dry and applied to the crop. Nothing could be better for the young orchard. Spreading ashes broadcast over the surface would be more useful than as a mulch for the trees. The roots will soon find it, if spread. It is better to use a moderate quantity annually than to apply a large amount at one time.

Ashes may be safely used in composts of loam, muck, straw or dry fibrous materials; they would tend to reduce them. If in composts, where the droppings of cattle are a portion of the material, the ashes should be applied immediately before the compost is to be used, and the composts be slightly covered by the soil. The easiest and best way, however, is to apply ashes in a dry state and unmixed.—Planter.

Gardening for the Season.

With the middle of August or first of September we reach our "second spring;" and, after removing the debris or remains of our early plants and vegetables, we can open the fall gardening campaign.

Cabbage, cauliflower and other plants, started in summer, may now be transplanted on cloudy or showery days, and it will be well to shade them a little from the hot rays of the sun by pieces of bark, shingles or other simple contrivances. Cabbage seed, to produce plants for winter and early spring, may yet be sown in rich, well-prepared and partially shaded beds; and onions may also be sown at once for transplanting in October or November.

Turnips—if not already well started and growing abundantly—must be put in without a day's delay, making the ground deep, fine and rich. The same remark applies to beets, carrots, parsnips, salsify, etc.; and all these should be shaded a little when they first come up, or the hot sun may kill them.

Celery should be transplanted now, as we directed in a special article some time since; and spinach, lettuce and radish seed may be sown for fall and winter use.

In planting your fall crop of Irish potatoes, sprinkle the whole tubers or cut pieces lightly with slaked lime, if convenient; and use a compost of vegetable mold and wood ashes as a manure.

Ground for strawberry beds and patches may now be grubbed, plowed, subsoiled and cross-plowed; and we will give a special article on the subject of manures, planting, etc., before the middle of October. The plants need not be set before November, but it will be a great advantage to work the ground over at intervals before that time.—Our Home Journal.

Tropical Fruits in Florida.—At all points below latitude twenty-nine degrees on the St. Johns river most tropical fruits succeed perfectly, and with little trouble. The pineapple is grown south of Tampa, on the shores of Biscayne bay, and in the vicinity of Key West; and a friend, writing from Mellonville, on the upper St. Johns, under date of July 31, says that "bananas are now blooming finely here, notwithstanding the freeze last Christmas." The cocoanut grows on the shell-keys and coral reefs at the lower extremity of the peninsula, south of the Everglades—the only place in the United States where this beautiful tree is found.

Housekeepers' Department.

Laundry Polish for Linen.—Add to starch made in the usual way a small lump of white sugar, or a bit of white wax or spermaceti, or a few thin shavings of white soap and a teaspoonful of salt. After the clothes are rinsed in the blue water starch them, and dry on the clothesline; then wring them from cold water, roll up tightly, and let them lie awhile. Iron smoothly in the usual way. Then place the bosom, or piece to be polished, on a board with a single fold of muslin over it, pass a damp cloth over the linen, and polish with an iron made for that purpose, such as may be bought at the hardware or kitchen furnishing stores.

To Put Up Green Corn.—I am a true lover of green corn, and I keep it from one year's end to another, and have it brought to my table at any time when the notion takes me, as fresh and good as when first taken from the patch. Here is the way I work it:

I have the corn shaved from the cob and packed away in a common stone jar, with salt in alternate layers—a layer of corn, say an inch thick, followed by a layer of salt sufficient to cover it, and so on till the jar is filled. Pieces of boards are then fitted over it, and a stone laid on to weigh it down; for a pickle will soon rise, and all the corn must be kept beneath the surface. Cloth or paper is next tied over the mouth of the jar to keep out dust—and that is all of it.

But there will be something more to do when I wish you to use my corn, and therein lieth my secret. It will be too salty for the table, as packed away, of course, and if I soak the salt out in the ordinary way I spoil the whole thing, for the milk and life of the grain go out with the salt. I have it soaked, nevertheless; but the work is commenced by first dropping it into a kettle of boiling water. This cooks the milk in the corn at once, renders it insoluble, after which it may be soaked through as many waters as desirable, without impairing its flavor or virtues in the least.

I have eaten corn four years old kept in this way, and treated as above, and so perfect was it that, had the roasting-ear season been at hand, I should never have suspected otherwise than that it was just from the cob.—J. P. Stelle, in Journal of Agriculture, July, 1870.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR.

A Purely Vegetable Compound

FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF

RHEUMATISM AND GOUT

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered inestimable relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a bold assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above-named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Rawson, Delhi, Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Bradley, Floyd, Louisiana.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to duration of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia, from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

Corona strives to justify its name.

THE CROWN OF SCHOOLS

for the higher education of women, by judiciously combining in its system the special points of excellence found in all other schools. It aspires to superiority in all departments—literary, scientific, æsthetic, domestic and hygienic. The principal has been spending nearly twenty years in studying educational questions and in the practice of teaching, is devoting his whole mind and heart to the task of maintaining not the largest, but the best school in the South. His system of education comprehends such an harmonious development of all the powers of mind, heart and body as will fit the young lady for the faithful discharge of the highest and noblest duties of life.

The methods of instruction are those approved by the foremost educators of the age. The very best aids are employed for imparting real knowledge, such as maps, charts, globes, specimens and apparatus of all kinds. There is no rote—learning of the mere letter of text books—no cramming of the mind with disconnected facts.

Assistant teachers of known scholarship and well-tried aptness in teaching are engaged. In physical science and modern languages instruction is given by the eminent professors in these departments of Cumberland University.

The course of study is very extensive, but is arranged into schools after the plan of the best universities, and pupils are graduated in such schools as they or their parents may elect. Music on piano, harp and guitar.

In the boarding department young ladies enjoy all the comforts of an elegant home. The rooms are large, well ventilated, tastefully furnished and newly carpeted. Fires in rooms whenever wanted. The table is bountifully supplied with wholesome food.

The location is most favorable in point of health, social refinement and religious privileges.

The health and physical development of boarding pupils are promoted by a system of gymnastic exercises, under a competent teacher, with dumb-bells, wands, rings and Indian clubs, without charge.

The expense of boarding and regular tuition is $250 or $200 a year. Extra charges at usual rates. The annual session every begins on the first Monday of September.

This paper has always been well known in this community as

The Very Best Advertising Medium

by which the business men of the city could bring their merchandise, trades, professions, and the like, before country readers. This is easily understood when it is remembered that FOUR HUNDRED PREACHERS, scattered throughout the Mississippi, Alabama and Louisiana Methodist Conferences, are all more or less active agents for the paper; and when it is also remembered that our paper circulates among a large class of people who seldom see any other New Orleans paper.

ROBERT J. HARP,

NO. 112 CAMP STREET, NEW ORLEANS,

AGENT FOR THE SOUTHWESTERN STATES FOR THE SALE OF

GEORGE WOODS & CO.'S

PARLOR And CHURCH ORGANS.

To those who are at all acquainted with the trade in musical instruments, or those conversant with the improvements that during the last twenty years have been made in that most popular of instruments, the Reed Organ, it is entirely superfluous to speak of the reputation or ability of the firm of GEO. WOODS & CO. We will, however, mention, for the benefit of any who may be without information on the subject, that the senior partner, Mr. Geo. Woods, has been engaged in the manufacture of Organs for many years, that he is the inventor of many valuable improvements and ingenious devices, and that his coadjutors in the business are all men extensively known to the trade as being possessed of uncommon skill, taste and experience in their different branches.

In offering our Instruments to the notice of all interested in music, we merely ask a comparison between those of our manufacture and those of others, and briefly mention upon what points in our Instruments we base our claims of superiority to the productions of our competitors in business:

QUALITY OF TONE.

Its Purity, Clearness and Brilliancy, Extraordinary Power,

CAPACITY FOR VARIETY, AND BEAUTY OF EFFECT,

Which is owing in a great measure to the excellence of our famous SOLO STOPS,

VOX HUMANA AND VOX CELESTE,

which differ materially in their construction and effects from other Stops of the same or similar name.

Our MANUAL SUB-BASS; smooth as well as effective in quality of tone.
PATENTED INVENTIONS AND INGENIOUS DEVICES.
Our method of employing SOLO SETS in separate WIND CHESTS.
IMPROVED VALVES AND WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.
THOROUGHNESS OF CONSTRUCTION AND ELEGANCE OF DESIGN.

All material used in the construction of our Instruments will be found to be strictly of the best quality. Our workmanship will also be found to be of a very high order.

The Cases are constructed with a proper regard to the laws of sound, having acoustic chambers at the ends of the case.

The Fronts of Keys are Ivory, and are not of Holly wood.

The Carvings are hand-made.

The Stops are of Ebony and Ivory, engraved by hand.

Special attention is called to these Organs. Price Lists and Catalogues, containing full particulars of the many numbers, sizes, varieties and prices—ranging from $110 to $650—will be mailed to any one on application.

☞ All Instruments will be thoroughly examined and shipped in good order. Therefore parties can safely order without coming to select. Address

The course of instruction embraces every subject of a solid and finished education.

The system of instruction is that of the University of Virginia, at which the President graduated as Master of Arts.

The college buildings are substantial brick structures, commodious, comfortable and elegant.

The grounds have been laid out with exquisite taste, and present an appearance of surpassing loveliness.

All the associations and surroundings are such as to cultivate the taste and refine the feelings.

Abingdon, situated on the Virginia and Tennessee railroad, eight miles from Emory and Henry College, and fifteen from Bristol, amid the mountains of southwestern Virginia, is noted for the beauty and grandeur of the surrounding scenery, a balmy atmosphere, general healthfulness and refined society. Mineral waters abound in its vicinity.

Parents in the South cannot find a place in the United States where the influences are more favorable for the perfect development of the physical constitution, and where educational advantages of a higher order are afforded.

EARTHQUAKES IN NEW ENGLAND.—An important paper on this subject, by Mr. William T. Brigham, has lately been published in the memoirs of the Boston Society of Natural History.

The author gives a list of the well-authenticated earthquakes which have occurred in New England, together with such historic information respecting them as he has been able to collect.

Two hundred and twenty-seven are recorded as taking place between the years 1638 and 1869, and in addition to these, four others occurred before the landing of the Pilgrims, according to the traditions of the Indians.

It appears from this paper that these phenomena have been far more frequent during the winter than in summer, one hundred and forty-eight being noticed during the former season, and seventy-four, or half the previous number, during the latter season.

A large number of these earthquakes were felt throughout New England, some were noticed in Canada, and others had a wider range. Not a few appeared to be confined to narrow limits, and to have a local character.

Mr. Brigham considers that the New England earthquakes indicate three local regions: 1. An elliptical area in Canada, of which the city of Montreal is the western focus. 2. A region around the mouth of the Merrimac river, extending south as far as Boston. 3. An area in Connecticut, embracing New Haven, Lyme and East Haddam.—Churchman.

TWO CURIOUS DISCOVERIES.—Turning from the deplorable spectacle of the fierce fratricidal strife which is devastating the world's fairest capital, it is pleasant to find elsewhere in France traces of the scientific zeal and ingenuity which have made her more illustrious than her victories. All Frenchmen, it seems, are not absorbed in the agreeable effort to cut each other's throats. Here and there throughout that unhappy country are still a few tranquil spirits, who, in the midst of war and misfortune, continue to woo science as earnestly as in times of peace. Of this class is a certain worthy professor of the College of Saintes, in Charente Inferieure. His researches have led him to a discovery which may be of great utility, and is certainly most curious. This is no less than what he himself calls bottling the sun—that is to say, fixing its heat in a closed vessel in such a way as to be used at will. The process is as simple as its results are remarkable. A vase constructed for the purpose, of some material not mentioned, is exposed during a quarter of an hour to the action of the sun's rays. Then it is hermetically sealed with a cork, through which a small hole has been drilled. Before this hole a powerful lens is held, and the imprisoned rays made to converge on the wick of a candle placed at the distance of about a yard from the vase. Almost instantly the candle is lighted. The experiment, we are told, was many times repeated, and always with the like success. As the French journal wherein we find this account enthusiastically remarks, it is prodigious, and may pave the way for very important results. Presently some one will be inspired to find a means of bottling the sun's light as well, so that we may dispense with gas and all other artificial illuminators, and rejoice in perpetual sunshine night and day.

A discovery of probably more immediate practical value is that claimed to have been made by M. Zaliwski, and reported to the French Academy of Sciences at a recent sitting. M. Zaliwski we take to be a Pole, and, if so, he offers an honorable contrast to many disorganizing countrymen who are occupied in ruining Paris. He asserts that a hollow cylinder, of tin, for example, open at the top and sharp-edged at the bottom, properly ballasted and put in a vessel of water, will presently move from west to east. This direction, he states further, never varies, and what is still more curious, the movement becomes readier and more perceptible the oftener the cylinder is used for the purpose. Should M. Zaliwski's assertions be borne out by trial, the experiment will afford an easy and accurate method of correcting the aberrations of the compass on iron vessels. This difficulty, it is well known, has long been a serious obstacle in modern navigation, and the means adopted to rectify it have not always proved entirely safe. A regulator so simple, sure, inexpensive and convenient as that suggested by M. Zaliwski would be of almost incalculable service to seafarers, and, indeed, to humanity at large.—New York Times.

He who calls in the aid of an equal understanding, doubles his own; and he who profits by a superior understanding, raises his powers to a level with the height of the superior understanding he unites with.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have no improvement to notice in the general market since our last report. Sugar has been in moderate request at previous rates, but with trifling receipts the movement has been of limited extent. Very little has been done in molasses. Flour has continued dull at the previous decline. Pork also has been quiet, without any further change in prices. Bacon has shown more firmness and a part of the business has been done at an advance of ¼ to ⅛c.

The weather has continued clear and warm, but the accounts from the country are still discouraging. We hear more general complaints of both the boll worm and the army worm, and of the crop otherwise being unusually unpromising. The reports from the Red river district on Tuesday were decidedly gloomy.

The receipts of new crop to date are only 12 bales, against 94 last year, 212 in 1869, and 476 in 1868.

The river is 13 feet 10 inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the twenty-fifth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales...	1,395
Lake.....	1
Arkansas.....	114
Mobile.....	109
Texas.....	5
Total.....	1,524

On Saturday there was very little inquiry and only one trifling sale was reported. On Monday the demand continued limited and the offerings light, while under an advance of 1-16d. at Liverpool and ⅛c. at New York low middling showed an advance of ⅛c., and other grades ruled in favor of factors. The sales embraced 650 bales. On Tuesday we noticed a moderate inquiry, but most factors had covered up their samples or were asking above the ruling rates, and the business was confined to 450 bales, a part of which was at previous rates and the residue at an advance of ⅛ to ¼c. Strict ordinary sold at 15½c., good ordinary at 16¼c., and as high as 17c. for a desirable list not strict, strict good ordinary to low middling at 17¼c., strict low middling at 17⅞c., and Liverpool middling at 18c. Offers of 18½ were refused for middling; held at 19c.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 1,100 bales.

The receipts at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 1,144,637 bales, against 1,140,998 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 1,102,242 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 856,466 bales to Great Britain, 299,585 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 207,806 to France.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Sugar.—There is little or nothing doing. Small sales are made to the city trade at 9½ to 10⅜c. for common Louisiana, 10½ to 10⅝c. for good common to fair, 11c. for good fair, 11¾c. for fully fair, 12c. for prime, 12¾c. for choice, and 12⅛ to 12¼c. for yellow clarified. Refinery yellow clarified is quoted at 12¼ to 12¾c., and white at 13 to 13½c. ℔ lb.

Molasses.—The small lots coming in now from plantations are very inferior in quality, and consist of remnants of cistern bottom, which are sold at 12 to 18c. ℔ gallon. Fair refinery reboiled is selling at 35 to 40c., prime 50c., choice 60c.; golden syrup 90c. to $1 ℔ gallon.

Pork.—The market has continued dull, without any movement since our last review, and mess sold at $14 to $14.25. ℔ bbl. It is retailing at $14.25 to $14.50.

Bacon.—There has been an active demand since our last review, and the market has ruled higher. The sales on Saturday and Monday embraced 200 casks at 6⅞ to 7c. for shoulders, 7⅝ to 7¼c. for clear sides, 8¼ to 8⅝c. for clear sides, and 14 to 14¼c. for sugar-cured hams. On Tuesday the market was more buoyant, when 200 casks sold at 7⅛ to 7¼c. for shoulders, 7¾c. for clear rib sides, 8⅝ to 8¾c. for clear sides, and 14½ to 14c. for good to choice sugar-cured hams.

Dry Salt Meat is without any movement. Shoulders are quoted at 6c. ℔ lb.

Lard.—The market is dull, with a fair stock on hand. Tierces are quoted at 10¾ to 10½c., kegs 11¼ to 11½c. On Saturday 80 tierces refined sold at 10½c., and on Monday 50 kegs do. at 11¼c. On Tuesday 70 tierces refined sold at 10½c. ℔ lb.

Bulk Meat.—Clear is quoted at 9¼ to 10c. On Monday 75 boxes Western sold on private terms. On Tuesday 21 boxes sold at 9½c. ℔ lb.

Monetary.—Gold, 111¼ to 112.

American silver half dollars, 105½ to 106¼, and Mexican dollars at ½ to ⅝ per cent. premium in gold.

The sales of City Appropriation Certificates include $1,560 on Saturday at 94½, and $2,300 on Tuesday at 91¼.

In warrants we note sales of $1,000 State on Monday at 50.

Clarksville Female Academy,

CLARKSVILLE, TENNESSEE.

THE FALL SESSION of this school opens SEPTEMBER 4, 1871. The Faculty is able and experienced, and the course of study thorough and practical.

The character of the school may be known by consulting the Bishops and leading men of the Southern Methodist Church.

It is located in an elevated, healthy country, and in the midst of a people of cultivation and refinement. It is the first high ground after passing the miasmatic regions of the South.

The school for years has had an average matriculation largely over two hundred pupils, many of whom were from various Southern States.

The expenses of an entire term, for English tuition, board, lights, fuel, furnished rooms, washing and servants' attention, will not exceed $125. Apply for catalogues.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical School Books which should be conformed to the ideas and sentiments of the people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science now, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unsurpassed in cheapness, convenience, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By Charles S. Venable, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

COMPRISES, ALSO,

De Vere's French Grammar, Readers, etc.,

By M. Schele DeVere, LL.D., Professor of Modern Languages in the University of Virginia.

Gildersleeve's Latin Series,

By B. L. Gildersleeve, Ph.D., LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

Carter's Elements of General History,

By Rev. J. P. Carter, A.M., of Baltimore, Maryland.

Holmes' English Grammars,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

LeConte's Scientific Series,

By the Professors LeConte, late of the University of South Carolina.

Johnston's English Classics,

By R. M. Johnston, A.M., late Professor of Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres in the University of Georgia.

To which list other books in other departments will early be added.

Send for our full ILLUSTRATED DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE, which will be mailed free to any teacher or school officer. Liberal terms given for introduction.

VOL. XVII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 7, 1871. NO. 34.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Southwest Pass. Ang. 30.—The steamship Cortes experienced a hurricane on the twenty-fonrth instant. She reports the loss of the steamship Mississippi off Hillsborongh Inlet, Florida. The crew and passengers were all saved by the Cortes, and will arrive at New Orleans to-morrow morning.

The Mississippi, Captain Henry, sailed from New York for New Orleans on the nineteenth instant, with a full cargo of assorted merchandise, mostly dry goods and shoes, valued at $500,000. The vessel and cargo are probably a total loss.

New York, Aug. 31.—The Cnnard steamer Java, which arrived from Liverpool last night, reports that on the night of the twenty-fifth of August, abont eleven o'clock, the saloon being full of passengers, the cry of fire aport was heard; the Java's engines were stopped, and then came a crash that shook the vessel from end to end.

Those who rushed on deck saw one-half of a large vessel on one side and the other half on the other side across the quarter deck. Boats were get ont at once, and after searching carefully abont they returned, having saved one man, from whom it was ascertained that the vessel run down was the Norwegian bark Annita, from Portsmouth to Quebec, with twelve hands on board, seven of whom went down with the bark.

It was for some hours a matter of doubt as to whether the Java was injured or not.

St. Thomas, West Indies, Aug. 22, via Halifax, Aug. 31.—A terrific hurricane, which veered from every point of the compass, prevailed yesterday and last night. An earthquake added horror during the night. Hundreds of dwellings were swept away, and not a house on the island undamaged.

Six thousand people are houseless, one hundred and fifty were killed—thirty corpses were hauled from under the ruins. Vessels were torn from their anchors.

The island of St. Kits is said to be a mass of ruins.

Cairo, Sept. 1.—The steamer Carrie V. Kountz, which left last night for New Orleans, with a full cargo, struck a snag near Wolf Island, below Columbus, and sunk in eight feet of water.

Meridian, Miss., Sept. 2.—The square bounded by Front, Johnson, Rhodes and Commerce streets, was burned this morning, except the savings bank building. Loss, $100,000. The buildings were mostly modern wooden structures. There was very little insurance. A large portion of the goods were saved.

Little Rock, Sept. 3.—The Missouri, Kansas and Texas railroad is completed within five miles of Fort Gibson.

New York, Sept. 4.—The Rev. George E. Trull, rector of Emanuel Church, has adopted a new prayer book, and withdrawn from Bishop Potter's diocese.

Mobile, Sept. 4.—General crop accounts received here by responsible merchants, say the cotton prospects in Alabama and Mississippi are very discouraging—caused by drouth in some localities and too much rain in others, and also suffering from worms. Planters are holding back their cotton for higher prices.

Memphis, Sept. 4.—Cotton reports from Arkansas are very gloomy. The shedding which has been ruining the crops in the uplands since the drouth set in, is now destroying the crops in the bottoms.

Charleston, Sept. 4.—They were four deaths from fever during the twenty-four hours ending at noon to-day. All the cases so far have been unacclimated persons.

Savannah, Sept. 4.—The statement in the New York Herald, to-day, to the effect that the yellow fever existed in this city has called forth the following from Mayor Scriven:

I learn that the New York Herald, of this morning, asserts the existence of yellow fever in Savannah. The statement is wholly without foundation. There is not now nor has been any yellow fever in Savannah the present year, and the city is freer of disease of any kind and healthier than in any previous year. A retraction of the statement of the Herald, so far as Savannah is concerned, is requested.

John Scriven, Mayor.

Montgomery, Sept. 5.—The great industrial exposition of the Alabama Agricultural and Mechanical Association will open October 21 and close November 4, instead of the time heretofore announced. Twenty thonsand dollars is offered in prizes for improvements in all departments of agrienltural, mechanics, arts, mannfactures, etc. Competition is open to Alabama and the world. Invitations have been issued for all classes to participate. Preparations are going on on a grand scale, and ample accommodation will be provided for all exhibitors and visitors.

Charleston, Sept. 5.—The board of health reports no yellow fever deaths within the last twenty-four hours.

FOREIGN.

Berlin, Ang. 30.—Provincial correspondence says no formal treaty has been concluded between Germany and Anstria, bnt they have come to a good understanding as to the maintenance of peace.

Dr. Kirk, of Zanzibar, writes that Dr. Livingstone is still in the conntry west of Tangimyike, and that the Arabs there connt him as a resident in that region. Feeling is manifested toward him. He is recovering slowly hnt safely, and will leave no donht in geographical problem whether Lake Tangarmyka is the real head of the Nile, or empties by the Congo.

Rome, Aug. 30.—The Pope, in receiving the homage of the Papal Guards, said: "I cannot name the day of our deliverance, bnt the time is not remote when we shall issue together from onr prison."

Paris, Aug. 31.—It is reported that the depnties of the left will resign in a body. Conservative journals are satisfied with the progress made for the prolongation of Thiers' powers. The Radical jonrnals blame the government for giving any consideration to the preamble assuming constitntional powers.

Versailles, Aug. 31.—After a feverish debate, the amendment to the preamble assuming constitutional powers, and which eulogizes Thiers' conduct, was adopted by a vote of five hundred and twenty-three to thirty-four. One hundred members abstained from voting.

The discussion of the preamble, whereby the Assembly assumes constitntional powers, proved tumultuous. While Baragnon was speaking, Testelin shouted: "Yon licked the Emperor's boots!"

A violent scene of ten minutes was closed by the president putting on his hat. Gambetta opposed the assumption of constitntional powers, declaring he would not accept even a Republic from the present Assembly. Finally the preamble assuming constitutional powers was adopted by four hundred and thirty-three to two hundred and twenty-seven.

The subject of the dissolution of the Assembly is settled for the present. A caucus held by the extreme left, Gambetta presiding, showed that the party was so divided that they determined to abandon the issue.

Berlin, Ang. 31.—A town in East Prussia, sixty miles from Koenigsburg, of four hundred and seventy-nine inhabitants, had ninety-two cases and forty-eight deaths from cholera.

Paris, Sept. 1.—Thiers sent to the Assembly his first message since the prolongation of his powers. He thanks the Assembly for its expression of confidence; repeats his protestations of devotion to the country, and hopes to succeed in the rehabilitation of France.

Berlin, Sept. 1.—The prolongation of the term of M. Thiers by the French Assembly will greatly facilitate the evacuation of French soil by the Germans.

Versailles, Sept. 1.—The powers of Europe have sent congratulatory dispatches to M. Thiers upon the prolongation of his term.

Advices from the departments say that the people generally approve the prolongation.

London, Sept. 3.—The Herald's special correspondent at Albacete, Spain, telegraphs as follows: By invitation, I accompany the king on a three weeks' tour through the provinces. We started Saturday morning, reaching Albacete at night. We stopped at thirty-six stations and the king was received with tremendous enthusiasm. The king's speaking was of the poorest. He is receiving petitions and winning the hearts of everybody. In a personal conversation, the king assured me that he desired Spain to be well understood in the United States, and that true friendship would exist between them. We go to Valencia to-morrow.

London, Sept. 4.—In Dublin yesterday there was a monster demonstration. There was a vast procession and one hundred thousand people at the meeting in Phœnix Park. Smyth, Butt and Nolan spoke. Resolutions were adopted demanding the release of all Fenians now in prison.

Several collisions took place as the people were retiring. The police drew staves and the people used sticks and stones. The mob was finally dispersed. Many arrests have been made.

The International Conference of the Young Men's Christian Association met to-day at Aldersgate. Among the speakers were Wetmore, of New York; Revell, of Chicago, and Wonnamaker, of Philadelphia, who gave statistics to show the progress of the Christian associations in the United States, and spoke with pride of the labors of the organization.

Berlin, Sept. 5.—The Prussian Cross Gazette says it was decided at Gastein to leave the Roman question entirely to Italy.

Brussels, Sept. 5.—A large number of workmen have struck. They demand a reduction of hours.

Versailles, Sept. 5.—A tumultuous discussion occurred in the Assembly to-day over the motion for the return of the Assembly and seat of government to Paris.

Paris, Sept. 5.—The trial of the female incendiaries was concluded to-day. Four were sentenced to death, one to imprisonment in a fortress and to ten years solitary imprisonment.

The Journal says President Thiers and Chevalier Negro, the Italian minister, have had an angry discussion over participation of the Italian Gastein Conference.

SOUTHERN REVIEW.

To the many inquiries during the last two months respecting the delay of the July number, our friends will find the answer in a card of the publishers in the St. Louis Christian Advocate. The publishers announce that the Review will be out on the first of September. We are in no way responsible for the delay. It was owing, it appears, to "the want of copy from the editor, whose engagements had called him out of town."

From our late connection with the publication, it is proper to state, that we furnished as full and correct a list of the subscribers as we were able to obtain, and forwarded the names to St. Louis early in June. The list has since been revised and corrected by our clerk, who had charge of the books, assisted by the Rev. E. N. S. Blogg, who was selected for that purpose by the president of that company. The names, post offices, credits, etc., were all carefully examined and their correctness duly certified by the gentleman named.

A few names in North Carolina and Georgia were unavoidably omitted, in consequence of the subscription book having been taken from our table at the close of the Conference in Augusta. This was remedied as far as possible by advertising in the Raleigh and Southern Advocates and the Episcopal Methodist. If, however, any subscribers obtained at Greensboro or Augusta, or elsewhere, should fail to receive the Review for July and October, 1871, they will please notify the publishers at St. Louis.

To the Ministry of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

Dear Brethren: That you may efficiently work for Centenary College, as suggested by its worthy president, Rev. C. G. Andrews, I propose that each one hold a centenary meeting in the work, to which we have been assigned, (say about the first Sabbath in November prox.) Bro. Tudor will hold a centenary mass meeting at Carondelet Street Church, New Orleans, on the evening of the first day of November, at which time we will have some speeches on home education: and we hope to accomplish much for the college there. Now, let each preacher in our two Conferences do the same, and although the proceeds from each appointment may be small, still, added together, they will make quite a large amount. Send amounts collected by draft or post office order to Colonel D. C. Hardee, Treasurer of Board, Clinton, East Feliciana parish, Louisiana. Dear Brethren: Don't fail to obtain at least $100 each for Centenary, and as many students as possible.

Yours in Christ,

B. F. White, Agent.

MORE OF THE SAME SPIRIT.

Mr. Editor: A short time since I sent you a paragraph upon the arrogant bearing of "churchmen" at the Military School at West Point. Here is another specimen:

The Virginia Military Institnte is under the management of the same class of men. General Smith is at the head of it. In the institntion are the sons of parents of different denominations. Those who will sing in the choir of the Episcopal Church can have standing permits to meet the choir for practice; those who wish to attend the meetings of the choir of the Methodist Church have to get a permit every time they wish to attend a meeting! Every one can imagine with what inconvenience this would be attended. And here is the reason this course is adopted, to hurry the young men into attendance on "the church."

Indeed the general has descended to direct appeals to induce them to leave their own church and attend his. A noble work this! H.

TEMPERANCE AND ITS ENEMIES.

Mr. Editor: I have for some time thought of snbmitting a few items of news to the Advocate. I have traveled a great deal, have seen, heard and felt much, and scarcely know where to begin. However, the sad results of the war, instead of having the effect of driving our people to the mercy-seat, where Jesus answers prayer, that by a life of humility and piety (as we desired and expected), that the God of nations, the Judge of all the earth, would send us aid and deliverance from the oppressions of our snbjugators, we have become greater sinners, not only forsaking the good way, but actually opposing reformation. Dram-drinking and drunkenness had become so prevalent and making such rapid strides, that the thinking and better part of our citizens became alarmed for the youth of the land, and have reorganized the great temperance societies that, in other years, had accomplished such good and glorious results in saving drunkards, moderate drinkers, rendering public social drinking a reproach, and banishing the decanter from the sideboard; but, astonishing to say, that in a town aspiring to the title of city, not a thousand miles from your city, certain men, who lay claim to be somebody, institute a burlesque and organize a society, whose pledge is: first, that we will drink the best liquers; second, that we will pay for what we drink; third, that we will not treat except at our own homes; and, would you believe it, that men, who should be the guardians of public morals, by precept and example, are among them. It is even so. A conspicuous one is a colonel and editor, another the head of a town or city council, and said to be a member and officer of a church. This all to oppose an infant council of friends of temperance, who already had taken hold of some of the worst drunkards and reformed them. These men are encouraged by the bishop and rector, who refuse even to announce from their pulpit an appointment for a temperance meeting, with the declaration that they are opposed to the institution, and assigning as a reason that they or he (the rector) would have his morning wine and his egg-nog before preaching. God save us from such inspiration, and from such a ministry and succession. The first mentioned company led off, some time ago, in a grand picnic for the Sunday school, and sent an invitation to all the adjacent towns and country for a grand reunion of all socts. It was had at a point on the railroad. The time passed away delightfully. The time to return finds them all at the depot; but the train will be delayed. The scholars, teachers, superintendents and ministers (there are four) are passing off the delay in singing Sunday school songs; but these men have the violence, and now commence the dance and draw off a few, and desire all to participate, but are refused. Now, these men seem astonished that we refnse to another grand display. There has been such a mania for snch things that we could not have a school examination, wedding, or even a religious meeting without whisky and a dance; but these are becoming stale. Now arises another devise of Satan, and these same lead off in the skating rink (I believe they call them); yet the church stands on the rock, and the temperance cause advances. I have written this much to encourage truth, and believing that evil should be held up to contempt, especially in high places; for religion, faith, temperance and charity must triumph. So believes a friend of temperance.

Yours, etc., J. Nicholson.

CENTENARY INSTITUTE.

Mr. Editor: I wish to call the attention, through the Advocate, of the old friends and patrons of the Centenary Institute, Summerfield, Alabama, to the fact that the institution is still on its career of usefulness. Both departments, male and female, are fully officered, and the prospects of the institution were never better since the war. Captain Massey has still charge of the male school—a man well adapted to the place he fills, and has filled for years, to the entire satisfaction of the trustees and patrons, as far as I know, and I need not spend time in any useless commendations of such a man. It is enough to say he is still at his post, and ready to take charge of all the young men and boys who may come, and treat them as heretofore.

The Rev. A. D. McVoy, late of Auburn, Alabama, has been elected president of the female college—a man well known in the State as an experienced and successful teacher. I am happy to say that he is already at his post, actively engaged in making arrangements for the opening session, October 1. I can confidently commend the Centenary Institute to all its former friends and patrons, and most unhesitatingly say to all, who may have sons and daughters to educate, that they will find in this institution moral, religious and literary advantages equal to any in the State or elsewhere.

For further particulars refer to the advertisement in the Advocate or to the teachers at Summerfield.

Truly, etc., A. H. Mitchell.

P. S.—Arrangements have been made for running a daily line of hacks between Selma and Summerfield. A. H. M.

Rev. J. S. McCarver, writing from Springfield, Texas, says: "We are suffering from drouth, no rain for nearly four months, cotton crop cannot reach above one-fifth the usual amount; corn not above half crop. A death-like stillness enshrouds business; we can only move slowly. * * * God's work is graciously reviving all over; our Conference finances will be low, but the increase in numbers will be large, and we are trying to arrange for economical living.

Rawley Springs, Virginia.—This delightful watering place is more than maintaining its popularity. Up to the first instant, the number of arrivals this season, we are informed, had been one thousand six hundred. On the fifteenth of August the company were entertaining four hundred persons. Many invalids have been restored to health, and they are much encouraged.

An Illinois church was carried bodily six miles on a freight car.

The British Wesleyan Conference and the Class Meeting Test.

Early during the present session of the British Wesleyan Conference, the discussion on class meetings, as a test of membership, took place, when the case of Rev. Thomas Hughes was under consideration. It will be remembered that two years ago Mr. Hughes published a book on "The Condition of Membership in the Church of Christ, viewed in connection with the Class Meeting System in the Methodist Body." In this book, he objected to the meeting in class as a "test" of church membership. This book was brought under the consideration of Conference last year, when a resolution was passed declaring that, if his view remained unaltered, he would eventually disqualify himself for ministerial connection with the Methodist Conference, but making him a supernumerary, in the hope that he would have further opportunity for considering the question. The same resolution required that the superintendent of his circuit should make a special report to the present meeting. That report was made on Friday of the first week, and on Saturday, Mr. Hughes was asked by the president if any change had taken place in his own views. Mr. Hughes made a speech of nearly two hours in defense, but the president said it was unsatisfactory, unless to afford convincing proof that his opinions were still the same. Mr. Hughes said he was bound to confess they were unchanged; but in answer to the president he hesitated to say whether he would abstain from all publication of his views. He was given till Monday to make up his mind.

Our London exchanges report that on Monday, accordingly, the question was repeated, when Mr. Hughes said that as to his present intention his mind was a blank. He had not and did not intend to agitate his opinions, or create a schism. Several ministers expressed their dissatisfaction with this answer, but Rev. Luke H. Wiseman, the secretary, said he had a very clear view on the subject, and this was not a case for expulsion. They had seen the spirit Mr. Hughes had evinced, and it was clear that he was no firebrand. He wished his answer had been more definite, but he believed him to be a man of scrupulous honor, and he believed he would do even more than he had promised. He thought that a special report should be made to the next district meeting and to the Conference, being placed, meantime, under a judicious superintendent, and with these safeguards he was prepared to move that Mr. Hughes be appointed to a circuit. The motion was seconded by Rev. John Wesley Thomas, and supported by Rev. James Lowtit. Rev. S. Romilly Hall opposed this resolution, believing that immense mischief had already been done to Methodism by Mr. Hughes. Dr. Jobson expressed similar opinions to Mr. Hall, and moved a resolution making Mr. Hughes a supernumerary, under the care of a judicious superintendent. In the course of a long discussion, Dr. Osborn was, perhaps the most outspoken on the question of retaining class meetings as a test of membership, which is the real question at issue. Dr. Jobson's motion was carried by a majority of two-thirds of the Conference.—New York Christian Advocate.

Extempore Preaching.—At one of the meetings preliminary to the opening of the present English Wesleyan Conference, Dr. Osborn said that he "quite agreed with much that had been said as to the impossibility of retaining their hold on the country if extempore preaching, properly so-called, fell into desuetude. The habit of extempore preaching, he had maintained in the Conference, and should be prepared to maintain everywhere, was vital to Methodism. He who had not the gift of extempore preaching had not the gift upon which Methodism was founded, and by which alone it could be kept up. At the same time, he wished to intimate that there did not subsist in his mind anything like the broad contrast that was indicated by Mr. Downing between learned exposition and powerful preaching. Both were essential. Learned exposition they had always had in connection with powerful preaching. Dr. Clarke was not quite forgotten, nor was Benson. He hoped it would never be supposed that there could not be in the Methodist ministry a combination of learned exposition with powerful application and earnest entreaty and affectionate, faithful expostulation. He trusted these things would be found in combination to the end of time."

EVEN-TIDE.—PERDITA.

Ah! the radiant Day is dying;
Close her blue eyes, drooping low;
Hide them 'neath their cloud lids lying:
Shut the sunray's golden flow!

Ah! the stilly night-time creepeth—
Darkness fold- o'er everywhere—
And each green leaf slowly sleepeth
In the crimsoned, twilit air.

Lo! the breezes drift the shadows
Through dim, floating amber mists,
O'er the tinted, grassy meadows,
Full of blooms by dew-lips kissed!

Thus our hearts, mid folding shadows,
Calmly hush each tired beat
Into silence low and dreamless,
With the daisies on our feet.

Thus they sleep—earth's many loved ones—
Through the twilights of long years,
Till the sweet moss almost hideth
Mem'ries green in fallen tears.

There's the voice whose gentle accents
Once made music in our hearts,
And the dear hand, whitely slender,
Lost its cunning of love's arts.

Ah! they sleep—earth's fairest loved ones—
Low 'neath many a shady hill,
And the slighted hearts, so cherished,
Never feel love's tender thrill!

Hush! the radiant Day is dying;
Close her blue eyes, once so bright;
And her soul, to heaven flying,
Bears some life upon its flight!

Onward, upward, wings the twilight—
Star-white ghost of brighter day;
Open all the ruby portals
Of the sunset on her way!

MINISTERIAL SUPPLY.

MR. EDITOR: This question is now making some stir in the religious papers, and as the writers who touch upon this most important question appear to have different views of the matter, perhaps something from this "outside" part of our State may be acceptable to your paper.

The question as to who, and the qualifications necessary, will not enter greatly into the discussion undertaken by this correspondent; and for the reason that it is our firm conviction that it lies entirely beyond the province of man to decide who shall preach on the one hand, and the impossibility on the other of fixing a standard of qualification in accordance with the divine purposes. We are ready to admit that deep piety and a fair acquaintance with one's own language, joined to knowledge of the world, are requisites which should be insisted upon; but that to deep piety there shall be inexorably attached the absolute knowledge of this and the other department of human learning as a pre-requisite for declaring the truth as it is in Christ, we do not believe. And just here we agree with one of your correspondents that many a man, from the bias of friendship or the lack of sound judgment on the part of those leading the Quarterly Meeting, has been foisted into position in the church, and commissioned to preach, who would have done more good as a simple member.

These things being all true, and their evil consequences seen and felt, are no more to be regretted than the other view, to wit: of men who have ranged the fields where academic honors flourish, and who, for all their mental culture, have done as much mischief, if not more, than those less cultured. Where the one has little you can expect but little, and vice versa. We might compare our sister churches, if it were proper to draw vain distinctions, with our own, and taking their high standard on the one hand, and our less taxing one on the other, and what difference is there in results when the balance sheet is fairly made out? Do we not cover as much ground, and in numerical strength compare favorably? But none of these things seem to us to touch the kernel of the matter. While our time is spent in modifying plans, devising ways and suggesting formulas, the world is buried in sin, and each revolution of the sun hurries into eternity multitudes of precious souls. What, then, is the church's duty? Is it not to take the best material she has, and put it to use in spreading the gospel, even if that material does not stand all the tests invented by human pride? We think so. Our eyes behold the coming storm as well, and see the great desolation hat surrounds us. And because the mutterings of the tempest are heard, and the waving grain stands ready for the reapers, we think the dry discussion of questions, beyond our power to adjust, should be left aside until the whole church of Christ has put the ship of Zion in proper trim to meet living issues, and not lose precious time over dead lions. Look over our State, and if your vision be not obscured you will soon perceive that a trip to China or the isles of the sea is not essential to the discovery of genuine heathen, so far as hearing the gospel is concerned. And when this fact shall be squarely brought before our next Annual Conference, then say whether the churches must first settle who must preach, and what must be the standard of preparation. Ah, my brother, we are too much taken up with the worldly view of the question, and too little imbued with that earnest spirit of sacrifice for Christ's cause. We study more the dress that we should wear than the figure we should present to a godless world. If church history teaches one lesson of wisdom, it is this: that in proportion to the high learning of her ministers, and the exaltation of her standards of learning as qualifications, by so much has her piety been weakened, until heresy of all sorts was the result; and when this took place a reaction followed, leading to profound ignorance and the grossest licentiousness. The simple, unvarnished gospel of Jesus, presented in plain and becoming words by one fully authorized, is the power of God unto salvation. Men desire, however, to ornament it with the meretricious tinsel of world-learning; and just in the proportion that this is done does it become milk and not strong meat. We need men to preach this plain gospel—men who are filled with God's divine spirit rather than with the lore of ages—those who will penetrate the forest wild, and minister to the humble in their house of logs. Your correspondents, perhaps, behold large wastes in their sections of the country, and none ready to supply them; so here can be viewed a field ripe to the harvest, and from which floats the Macedonian cry, "Come and help us;" people who are willing to stop the plow and forego many necessary labors, if the word preach is heard upon the breeze; people whose hearts are not bound to the car of avarice, and whose minds are not befogged in the murky atmosphere of an exalted learning. And shall the church stand still, heed not the cry, and leave their souls a prey to the devil, until such time as in her wisdom she shall have settled the important point of who shall preach, and how much said preacher shall know? We cannot believe it; for when it is told her that, in the highly civilized State of Louisiana, men and women over twenty years of age heard the first sermon of their lives only a few days ago, will not her heart stop its beat, and her cheek crimson with shame?

And yet this is the plain truth. It is stated with pain; but duty compels the statement as a quietus to those who are so great sticklers for standard qualifications. Let us suppose for one moment that Dr. McCosh, a ripe scholar—one up to the highest mark of the standard—completes, publishes and sends forth his contemplated answer to the visionary Darwin, and in that erudite answer slays his enemy—scholarly speaking—what then? Will one in ten thousand of those who have believed Darwin, rather than God, repent, confess their presumption and sin, and return to the Father of Lights? We doubt it; and believe that some mediocre preacher, imbued with the Holy Spirit, would rather gain the victory in such a contest than the profoundest scholar of the day. Where has the learning of Germany led to? Has it not borne the most of her great scholars into the deepest skepticism? And the honorable exceptions, are they not little children in heart, because the power of the gospel taught them true wisdom?

You, my brother, as a watchman on the walls, will, I am sure, give no uncertain meaning to this matter. While there is much to watch over and provide for, let not these duties keep you from looking this greatest of all matters in the face. Urge upon the men who are born of the Spirit to search themselves, to pray over the question of being a herald of the cross. Our church will soon have no officers to lead the hosts of the Lord; and this we conceive to be the great want of the day, and not those things which savor of being over-wise.

INDAMORA

LAKE CHARLES, August 2, 1871.

SELMA DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: The Selma District Conference, Alabama Conference, was held at Spring Hill, Marengo county, August 10–12, 1871. Rev. Mark S. Andrews, presiding elder, occupied the chair. There are eleven charges in the district. Nine of the preachers having these in charge were present—two were absent. Laymen and local preachers were present from seven charges. Religious services were held each morning except one, and each night except one. All the subjects which usually come before such conferences were discussed freely and fully.

The following are among the resolutions adopted:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the District Conference of the Selma district of the Alabama Conference, the sale of spirituous liquors by members of the Methodist Church, to be used as a beverage, is wrong; first, because it is contrary to the teachings of the Bible; and second, because it violates the spirit of the Discipline of the Methodist Church, if not its letter.

Resolved, That the several Methodist preachers in this district be and they are hereby requested to read the foregoing resolution to all of their congregations.

Resolved, That the presiding elder be and he is hereby requested to preach in each circuit and station within the district, upon the duty of supporting the ministry.

Resolved, That we believe it to be the duty of the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, both to the church and the children of the church, to patronize the schools and colleges of our own Conference.

Resolved, That the Alabama Conference, at its next session, be respectfully requested to organize and provide for supporting at least two missions in this district—one in the lower part of the district, to be called Coffeeville mission; the other in the central part of the district, to be called Flat Woods mission.

"Why is it that so few preachers have been and are now being licensed from the several charges to preach the gospel?"

This question was pressed upon the attention of the conference by the elder, and remarks were made upon it by Revs. T. S. Abernathy, Sr., E. V. Levert—two of the oldest members of the Alabama Conference—and by others; after which this resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the first Friday in October be set apart as a day of fasting and prayer that God may call and send forth more laborers into the vineyard.

Orrville, in Dallas county, was selected as the place for the meeting of the next District Conference.

The following persons were elected as members of the next Annual Conference: Levi W. Reeves, of Dayton; T. Ialow, of Peach Tree; Dr. John Bradfield, of Uniontown, and P. G. Wood, of Selma.

The following were selected as alternates: J. R. John, of Selma; B. R. Eppes, of Spring Hill; W. E. Kennedy, of Uniontown, and Rev. George Watson, of Choctaw Corner.

PROF. DAVIDSON, of the Coast Survey, says that Mount Rainer, a peak of the Cascade range, in Washington Territory, is definitely ascertained to have an elevation of fourteen thousand four hundred and forty-four feet. California is now trying to discover a peak within its borders higher than this, and thinks it has it in Mount Whitney.

THE poor of London are becoming poorer. Year by year, owing to improvements in which the poor do not share, and to the progress of railroads, from which they derive no benefit, the rents of the worst houses in London are rising, while the deterioration of those who are forced to occupy them is rapidly increasing.

"WE ARE not told to develop our individualities—we are told to bear fruit."

DANCING.

MR. EDITOR: A few evenings ago a minister stated in a temperance speech, in one of our little towns, that in his "opinion there was but one greater evil in the Christian world than drinking ardent spirits as a beverage, and that was dancing." The statement was entirely unexpected, and has led your correspondent to take the subject into consideration. After mature thought, I am absolutely overwhelmed at the greatness of this very popular evil:

1. At least four-fifths of the drunkenness found among the middle and higher classes owes its existence to the associations of the dance, and ninety-nine hundredths of the drunkenness among females of this class is owing to the associations of the dance. This one item makes it the greater evil of the two. Being the prolific cause or occasion of a large majority of the drunkenness of the better classes of society, makes it as a social evil far greater than if it only affected the lower classes; but when we learn that it is the prolific occasion of nearly all of the drunkenness of females of this class, it becomes an enormity indescribable. Again, more young men are led to filch from the employer's drawer, from this than any other cause. Hence a majority of thieves (from this class of society) owe their existence, as thieves, to the customs and influences of the dance. The young man lacks a quarter or a half dollar to make his outfit for the dance, and he takes it, intending to replace it; honor is lost, integrity gone, the first step is taken, and ruin follows. Again, the surroundings of the dance have been one of the most fruitful sources of bankruptcy known, on account of the excess of vanity in dress. The dance has been the occasion of as much premature disease, physical suffering and early death as any other evil in civilized society. The manner of dress, the excessive heat and fatigue, together with the frequent imbibing of impure drinks and keeping of late hours, have been the causes of unnumbered cases of pulmonic affections, which have not only entailed suffering on the individual, but has entailed mortal disease and slow torturing death upon countless thousands of innocent ones. Again, the dance has produced untold and unmeasured sorrow, by sowing family discord, and giving occasion for jealousies between husbands and wives. Again, there are probably in the Christian world one-half million prostitutes. Of that number there are annually about thirty thousand that fall from this class of society, and we find that nearly all of these make the fatal step in the dance. Again, I find, after careful inquiry, that there are more young persons of this class who fatally postpone union with the church and a religious life from the love of the dance than from any other one cause. Again, the circumstances of the dance, with their effects, have proven the great barrier to vital piety, a growth in grace, and high attainments in purity and holiness in the membership of the church of God. "By their fruits ye shall know them." The church which most practices dancing is the least holy, and has made the least progress where all denominations have been placed on equal footing. Again, dancing comes nearer being "Satan in the garb of an angel" than any other evil; as a consequence it is more difficult for the unconverted to see the evil in it, and thus it becomes the greatest obstacle in the way of the advance of pure Christianity among men. But, says one, can we not engage in the private dance at home, without incurring guilt or danger? Let us see. The children learn to dance, the parents and friends admire and praise, the children become vain of their accomplishments, and desire to be seen. The tempter comes, the door has been opened, and the children eagerly go forward, possibly to ruin. The more safe way is not to place the children in the way of temptation. Confining the influences of the dance to the middle and higher classes of society in the Christian world, we see it the great evil of the day. It also does its dread work in the more unrefined classes of society. Since impure Rome has seen the "round dance," so dreadfully impure, and since we see the fearful results the dance occasions, shall we not raise our voice of warning? Let us remember that the dancing of a damsel was the occasion of John the Baptist's being beheaded. Young ladies of America, remember that, under the excitement of the dance, Herodias' daughter was equal to the task of bearing John's head, all bleeding, in a charger.

FELICIANA.

JACKSON DISTRICT CONFERENCE,

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: The fifth District Conference for Jackson district was held at Sharon, Madison county, Mississippi, July 27, 28 and 29, 1871, Rev. H. H. Montgomery, presiding elder, in the chair.

The roll being called, all the stations and circuits were found to be represented by pastors and lay delegates except two, represented by laymen in the absence of the pastors. The religious exercises were conducted by the chairman. John T. Cameron was elected secretary, and Rev. A. B. Stewart assistant secretary. The introductory sermon was delivered by Rev. C. G. Andrews. Committees were appointed on the various subjects before the conference.

The Sunday school cause throughout the district is in a growing and flourishing condition, using almost entirely the literature of our church. Owing to the want of church buildings of our own, some of the Sunday schools are union in name, though using the lesson papers, Little People, etc.

The spiritual condition of the church, as to attendance on the public and social meetings, ordinances, family religion, etc., was searchingly inquired into, with results generally satisfactory and encouraging in many of the charges, while in others the attendance upon the social meetings is, to say the least, indifferent; numerous accessions in some of the charges, and all hopeful for the future. Bro. J. T. Cartiss read an excellent essay on the subject of ministerial education, and also one on the establishment of an orphans' home in the district. Bro. W. L. C. Hunnicutt read an essay on Sunday schools, and was requested to forward a copy to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and New Monthly Magazine for publication.

In response to a communication from Bro. Thomas Reid, president of the Ministerial Educational Society, the sum of $940 was subscribed, payable in ten annual installments, bearing interest at ten per cent.; and a resolution adopted that every member of this conference be a committee of one to raise all they can for the objects of the association, in notes to be made payable to Rev. C. G. Andrews and his successors in office.

The financial interests of the district were referred to a committee of one from each charge in the district, who reported the following:

The committee appointed to agree upon and report some plan of finance in all the charges in the district have had the same under consideration, and respectfully report the following: That the stewards, at their first meeting, ascertain the whole amount of expenditure required for the station or circuit for the year; that a list of all the membership and contributors to the support of the gospel be made, and the amount so ascertained to be assessed according to ability and willingness, and every charge so divided into convenient working districts, and a committee of ladies and gentlemen appointed to call upon every person willing to give, and solicit a promise from them that they will systematically and regularly pay a certain amount every week, month or quarter, thereby getting the whole amount at or before the end of the year.

The plan so reported was adopted, and a resolution passed expressing unqualified disapprobation of the course of some of our charges in waiting until the close of the year to bring in the support of our pastors, and recommending that the above plan be sent to the Board of Stewards in each charge in the district.

On the subject of missions the following preamble and resolution were adopted:

WHEREAS, It has been ascertained, during the inquiries on the subject of missions, that there is much territory within this district which should be occupied; therefore,

Resolved, That this conference request the Annual Conference to supply the demand, if possible, by establishing missions.

Thomas Green, E. C. Pastell, D. C. Langford and John T. Cameron were elected delegates to the Annual Conference, and M. J. McKie, Guilford Nicholson, W. G. Kearny and G. W. Galloway alternates.

The next District Conference will be held at Clinton, Mississippi.

The conference, by resolution, unanimously tendered their thanks to the citizens of Sharon and vicinity for the kind and hospitable entertainment of its members during its session. The thanks of the conference were also tendered to the superintendent, teachers and pupils of the Sharon Sunday school for the entertainment afforded by singing, etc. Preaching at eleven A. M. and eight P. M. during the session of the conference, which adjourned on Saturday evening, July 29. The religious services were continued for several days, and there were a number of accessions to the church.

Previous to adjournment the conference requested the secretary to forward, with the above synopsis, the following preamble and resolutions, adopted at its session of 1870, with a request that they be published:

WHEREAS, There is evidently in many parts of the country a serious and hurtful misapprehension with regard to the position of the Methodist Episcopal Church South on the subject of dancing; therefore,

Resolved, 1. That it is the sense of this District Conference that not only are all public balls and dances to be avoided by Christians as sinful, but that private and social dancing ought to be discouraged by all proper means as of dangerous tendency.

2. That it was not the intention of the General Conference of our church, by any change which it may have authorized in our Book of Discipline, to approve or countenance dancing, they believing and intending it to be prohibited by the rule forbidding such diversions as cannot be used in the name of the Lord Jesus.

3. That we adopt the sentiment of the late address of our Bishops on this and kindred subjects as our own.

JOHN T. CAMERON, Sec'y.

THE KING AND THE PRINCE.

Many years ago, it is said, there lived a certain king, who had a deep sense of the value of his soul, and of the danger he was in as a sinner. He often meditated profoundly on the day when the Lord Jesus shall come to judge the world; and his thought was: "How shall such a sinner stand before him?" For he knew something of the heinousness of sin, and he knew not that the blood of Jesus Christ is a full and sufficient atonement for the sins of the whole world, and that "whosoever believeth in him is justified from all things, from which he could not be justified by the law of Moses."

This king was one day sitting alone, meditating on his lost condition and on the day of his final account, when his brother, a gay, light-hearted courtier, entering the room, was desirous to know the cause of his sadness.

"O brother!" said the king, "I have been a great sinner against God, and know not how to die, nor how to appear before God in judgment."

His brother made a jest of these expressions, and tried to persuade the king not to give way to such melancholy thoughts. To this the king made no further reply at the time; but that night he sent the public executioner to sound the trumpet before the prince's door.

It was the custom in that kingdom, at the period of which we write, that, when a man was to be executed, the public executioner came and sounded the trumpet at his door.

The prince, hearing the sound of the trumpet, sprang from his bed, and, seeing the messenger of death before his door, hastily rushed out, and entering the king's presence, earnestly besought him to say wherein he had offended, and why he was to die.

"Alas, my brother," replied the king, "you have never offended me! And is the sight of my executioner so dreadful? Then shall not I, who have so greatly offended against God, fear to be brought before the judgment-seat of Christ?"—Gosse's Narratives.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 7, 1871.

THE NEW PREACHER.

At a pleasant country station,
Full of eager expectation,
Sat a waiting congregation,
At chapel one Sunday morn.

The sun poured in a flood of light,
Which fell on heads by time made white,
On sunny curls and eyes of light,
That lovely Sunday morn.

There sat the young and beautiful—
There sat the good and dutiful—
The aged and the sorrowful—
That Christian Sunday morning.

There for the first, with form and feature
Resembling much a fellow-creature,
Within the pulpit their new preacher
Appeared that Sunday morn.

He spoke with freedom, zeal and power;
To him it was a blissful hour;
Twelve, struck the clock above the choir,
That did the pince adorn.

Some lingered at the close of meeting,
To give their brethren friendly greeting;
I've not the power of repeating
All that was said that noon.

For butcher, baker, lawyer, teacher,
People of every trade and feature,
All criticised the humble preacher
That they had heard that morn.

The lawyer said: "He'll not suit me;
No flow'ry strains, nor fineney,
No logic, or philosophy,
His sermon did adorn."

An old man said: "He spoke too low—
My hearing is not good, you know—
Besides, he reads too much; and so
I cannot like the man."

A sister said: "He is too tall,
His hands too large, his eyes too small:
I do not like his looks at all;
They've sent us the wrong man.

"And then his wife, depend upon it,
She'll not suit here with that gay bonnet;
I'm sure she had a flower on it,
And she our preacher's wife!"

Another pious soul sincere,
Who gave full fifty pence a year,
Said to his consort fair: "My dear,
I never in my life

Did go to chapel to criticise;
But this vain man (he wipes his eyes,
And in a lower tone he sighs)
I never will support."

But there are some both wise and good,
A blessing to the neighborhood,
Who spoke as Christians always should,
With Christian charity.

O could the wind have talked and heard,
Each idle, criticising word:
"The servant's not above his Lord,"
Methinks 'twould sadly moan.

Useless attempt to please mankind;
Fault-finders you will always find—
Though all the virtues be combined
In any great divine.

THE OTHER SIDE OF THE WORLD.

In traveling through China I have gathered a number of items showing the difference between the Chinese and ourselves. Some of these items may have an interest for such of my young readers—and I trust they are all such—as desire to know what is going on in the world we live in.

By way of introduction, then, when two Chinese meet, instead of shaking hands with each other, they stand at a distance, and each one shakes his own hands, putting them together and making a churning motion. It is not respectful to take the hat off on going into the house of a stranger; but a stranger, on being introduced to you, considers it a mark of politeness to inquire your age. This inquiry was made of me many times while in China. This offers ladies and gentlemen a fine opportunity to tell the truth.

Men and women dress very much alike, except the hair, the men shaving off all but that on the crown, which they braid into a long cue, hanging down the back to the feet. They braid silk into it, to lengthen it out. The women do up their hair in a fantastic way, sticking it together with some compound which seems to be a mixture of grease and wax.

A fashionable Chinese woman's shoe is from an inch and a half to two inches in length. I have procured a pair which I saw the lady have on, about an inch and three-quarters in length.

In writing a Chinese never uses a pen, but a soft brush instead. This brush is attached to a long stem like a wooden pencil, and is held in the fingers perpendicularly. The ink is kept in a hard cake, and rubbed on a stone with water as it is wanted.

A Chinese book begins at the backside, and instead of the lines going across the page horizontally, the first line runs down at the right hand side of the page to the bottom, and then another commences at the left of this, and so on until the page is full. The title of the book, chapter or page is placed at the right hand of the leaf. Only one side of the page is printed, it being made of bamboo wood, and very light and thin. To provide for this, the paper is so folded that every leaf is double, so that in turning over the leaves, both sides are printed, but the leaves are double. Any marginal notes, instead of being at the bottom, are at the top of the page, where there is generally a wide margin.

There is no such thing as orthography in Chinese. Each character is a word by itself, and no man in the world can write a Chinese word by hearing it pronounced. The same word has the same meaning in all places, but may be pronounced wholly different in different provinces of the empire so that the people of one province cannot converse with those of another.

There are upward of fifty thousand of these Chinese characters, and every one of them represents a word of one syllable. There is no such thing as polysyllables in Chinese, but often two words are put together in a name, like our compound words. In all such cases the accent is on the second word, as Heng-keng, Pe-king, Foo-chow, Can-ton, etc.

White is worn as mourning, and must never be seen at a wedding. I have seen men come on board to do business with the white silk braided into their long cue, in addition to being dressed in white as mourners. At a wedding the bride wears a red vail, and the bridegroom has red silk braided into his hair.

Engagements of marriage are never made by the parties concerned, but by the parents, who employ a third person, called a "go-between," who looks up suitable matches and reports to the parents of each party respectively, and is paid a fee or a commission.

All wives are purchased of the parents, and in multitudes of cases the parties married never see each other until the husband lifts the vail after the wedding ceremony. As the result of the state of things here described, there is not much real conjugal affection among the Chinese.

In China dressmakers and milliners are men, and men do the washing and sprinkling down the clothes, by taking their mouths full of water, and blowing it on the garment to dampen it.

In Chinese schools there are no questions and answers as with us, but the pupil commits a given lesson to memory, and, when time comes for recitation, walks out on the floor directly in front of the teacher, either singly or in a class, as the custom may be, then faces about with his back to the teacher, and rattles off the lesson at a railroad speed.

In writing their names the Chinese always write the surname first, instead of the Christian name, as with us.

Instead of long dresses, the Chinese men and women wear long sleeves, reaching six or eight inches beyond the tips of the fingers.

A Chinese woman, instead of kissing her child as a way of showing her affection, smells it.

In China divorce is accomplished by selling the wife. The greatest possible revenge is for a man to kill himself, as a means of punishing the one who has wronged him. Such an event terribly frightens the surviving party, as he expects the spirit of the deceased, according to his threat, to return and torment him.

It is considered very praiseworthy and very meritorious for a wife, on the decease of her husband, to hang herself. Monuments are erected to such in the north of China, and perhaps in other places, and the event is accompanied with great rejoicing and hilarity.

The Chinese, instead of knives and forks, use chop-sticks in eating their food, or rather putting it into their mouths. These chop-sticks are about ten inches in length, and the size of a common wooden pencil, made of wood or ivory. Both sticks are held in one hand, one of them very much as we hold a pencil in writing, and the other with the lower end between the second and third fingers, and the upper between the thumb and forefinger, like the first. In this way they use the sticks with great dexterity, picking up articles of food as with a pair of tongs. While to the uninitiated this is about as awkward an apparatus as can well be imagined, the Chinaman will take a small fish-bone out of his mouth or pick up any little thing with as much facility as we would do it with our fingers. The Malays, on the other hand, use neither knives nor forks, nor yet the chop-sticks, but pitch in with their fingers. Rice, fish and cabbage, with greasy gravy covering all, is conveyed to their mouths with their fingers. They use only the right hand in eating, and are little more cleanly than the swine. Part of our crew is made up of these Malays.

A story of close management is told about a Yankee who lately settled down in the West. He went to a neighbor, and thus accosted him: "Wal, I reckon you hain't got no old hen nor nothin' you'd lend me for a few weeks, have you, neighbor?" "I will lend you one with pleasure," replied the gentleman, picking out the very finest one in the coop. The Yankee took the hen home, and then went to another neighbor and borrowed a dozen eggs. He then set the hen, and in due course of time she hatched out a dozen chickens. The Yankee was again puzzled; he could return the hen, but how was he to return the eggs? Another idea. He would keep the hen until she had laid a dozen eggs. This he did, and then returned the hen and eggs to their respective owners, remarking, as he did so: "Wal, I reckon I've got as fine a dozen of chickens as you ever laid your eyes on, and they didn't cost me a cent, nuther."

When Sir Walter Scott was urged not to prop the falling credit of an acquaintance, he replied: "The man was my friend when friends were few, and I will be his, now that his enemies are many."

A WORD ON READING.

"We boys love stories." Of course you do. I like them myself, but the danger is that with such a multitude of exciting, sensational ones as are sold now-a-days, you will read nothing but stories. And that would be "paying dear for the whistle," would it not? If for the sake of books that have not the slightest foundation in truth, nor, indeed, in the probable, written only to amuse, not more than a single grain of wheat hidden in a whole page of chaff, you lose all relish for a higher and better style of reading, you do yourself a grievous wrong.

I am not condemning you to dry, dull books. Indeed I am not. My own young days are not so far away but I know quite well what you want. But only think of the books that are waiting to take you all over this great world of ours; up into the arctic seas; down below the equator, showing you all the strange forms of life in those tropical regions; into the depths of the sea, and pointing out the still stranger forms of life there; whole volumes of travel and adventure, that will add to your stock of knowledge, as well as enlist your eager interest; and histories without end, that will charm you like a fairy tale, if you only give them a chance; taking you through not the world merely, but through the past centuries, showing the grand discoveries and dreadful struggles which have made the world what it is now.

Then think of the stirring tales of real heroes, who have fought the battles of life and came off conquerors; have struggled through a boyhood of poverty and trial and temptation into a noble, resolute manhood. Isn't there enough in such examples as these to interest? Doesn't it set your blood tingling to think what others have done and what you may do?

Now a word about the newspapers. I always feel hopeful of a boy who reads habitually the daily or weekly papers. I set all such down for live, wide-awake boys, when I see them taking such an interest in the current news of the day.

But I wait first until I see to what part of the paper they turn most eagerly. If, as the sheet is unfolded, they run over the telegraph column to find out what is passing in other countries, as well as in our own, then I know that there is an intelligent interest. Their ears have been open to the discussions among the older members of the family, and the mind has been at work, too. There is no excuse for ignorance now. When all the nations of the earth are knocking at each other's doors, we may learn what we will.

If I see the eye brighten over some noble deed of charity to the poor and suffering, then I am glad; for I know there is a generous spark down in their own hearts that shall yet kindle into a flame of its own, and gladden others some day with other noble deeds.

But if I see them with eager interest reading the horrible details of crime and murder, hope dies out of my heart, and I turn away with real pain. It is a crying evil of our day, this publishing in such minuteness these loathsome details of crime. I see no end or purpose of justice to be answered by it, but only fearful harm. Your young hearts should turn in instant recoil from such brutal tales.

Boys! if the public journal, that should be a school of better morals, spreads this snare before you, do not walk into it. It will blunt all your finer feelings, and familiarize your mind with forms of cruelty and sin that otherwise you would never come in contact with. Every one knows that anything made familiar to the mind loses half its deformity. Never suffer yourself to read one of these articles. If your eye catches the startling heading, pass it instantly by. Do not fill that mind of yours, which should be all manly and noble, with these dreadful pictures of sin and guilt.

I have said nothing about those poisonous books—low and vulgar—that sometimes find their way secretly into some boy's pocket. I trust there is no need to caution you against these. Never, never read anything you would blush to have your mother or sister see. Read! but pray be careful what you read.—Hearth and Home.

Protestant and Catholic Pastors. Much that is said about the assiduity of the Romish priests in visiting their sick parishioners, and of the way they put the Protestant pastors to shame in this particular, has no foundation in fact, but is one of the imaginative fancies of penny-a-liners. The servant girls in our families may be sick and in trouble for weeks and weeks without the priests coming near them. The poor parishioners seldom find their reverences seeking them out when they are in want or when they meet with accidents. Only last week a good Irish girl, whose friends live in the city, and whose family are scrupulous in attending to religious duties, said to us that their priest never came to see them, even when they were sick. "If we send for him he won't come till we get a certificate from the doctor that the sick person is going to die." It is true that the flock is looked after to see that none stray away to the Protestant field, and that they come to confession and pay the various assessments. But sympathizing pastoral ministration of the shepherd, or visits to find out and relieve their sorrows, the poor Romanists, according to their declarations, do not receive from their priests to any great extent.—Congregationalist.

MANAGEMENT OF CHILDREN.

There is a tendency, we think, at the present day, to put children too forward, not so much for the sake of showing off their extraordinary merits to an admiring world, as from the better motive of early accustoming them to the conversation of grown people and the usages of society, and of inspiring them with confidence, ease and self-possession: No doubt those results are very valuable; but the mistake which many people make is in forgetting that children are something like dogs, which require to be very well trained before they can safely be recommended to the familiarity of strangers. And it is to be remembered that the moment children cease to respect any of the grown-up people with whom they associate, not only is the whole benefit of the intercourse lost at once, but real injury is inflicted on the moral tone of the child. For this reason children should be brought as little as possible into the society of men and women who cannot command their respect; while of those who can, the influence should be hedged round by all the numerous impalpable barriers which judicious parents know perfectly well how to interpose between children and the most popular and careless of their adult playfellows. The confidence which well-bred children repose in an eligible stranger, without being either rude or troublesome, is charming to everybody who has any natural taste for their society.

But closely allied with the mistaken license allowed to their children in matters like the above, is the disposition to laugh at, and thereby to encourage, all traits of singularity, oddness or affectation which children may exhibit, as marks of genius, which ought not to be repressed. Of all the dangerous errors into which parents can fall, this, in our opinion, is the worst; for nothing so soon hardens into second nature as juvenile eccentricity; and few things are more injurious to success in life than marked oddities of manner and gesture when they reach the point of grotesqueness. The majority of the world agree with Mr. Peter Magnus; they don't see the necessity of originals. And what is more, so many "originals" are only sham ones, after all—that is to say, their singularity is merely a bad habit which they can't shake off, and is only very partially innate. When you see a child doing anything unlike other children, anything queer, surprising or uncouth, however comic or however clever it may seem, never laugh at or applaud it. Children, naturally very self-willed, and with real natural peculiarities, can soon be broken of such tricks, if treated with absolute indifference. But once let the idea find its way into their brains that such sallies, naught though they be, are regarded as marks of genius, and the mischief is done.

To come back to the point from which we started—the management, namely, of young children—there is one thing to be laid down: let there be no divided rule in a house. Don't let the children see that the father means one thing and the mother another in their bringing up. They see the difference, if it exists, in a moment; and when they do, farewell to all wholesome parental influence. Husbands and mothers may talk too freely before their children, forgetful of their rising intelligence. And, indeed, nothing is more common than to get a wink from the head of the house, implying that you are to be on your guard before Johnny or Tommy, who is listening open-mouthed to your witty narrative, while he himself the next moment will offend against his own precautions in the most brazen-faced manner by plunging headlong into your domestic controversy, in which, to speak metaphorically, knives are freely used on both sides. Macmillan's Magazine.

God is no doubt pre-eminently our Father in heaven, but he is also, be it recollected, our Father on earth, the ever-present and all-pervading Lawgiver of creation, both in its moral and physical aspects.

If the stars should appear but one night in a thousand years, how would men believe and adore and preserve for many generations the remembrance of the city of God which had been shown!

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The value of the church edifices of the Episcopal Church in New York city is placed at $7,500,000, exclusive of the ground on which they stand. This is about $1,500,000 more than the Roman Catholics, and $3,000,000 more than any Protestant denomination.

The Christian Herald estimates the immersion population of Middle Tennessee—including Calvinist, Missionary, Separate and Primitive Baptists—at twenty-seven thousand. The field, however, it characterizes as inadequately worked up. The Baptists are not strong in the cities and towns. More organization is a desideratum.

Baptism of Chinese Converts.—On the tenth of May the large Wesleyan Methodist church in Melbourne, Victoria, was filled with a deeply interested congregation, assembled for the purpose of witnessing the baptism of three Chinamen who had recently turned from the worship of "dumb idols" to the service of "the living God."

Micronesia.—This is the name given to a portion of the Central Achipelago, in the Pacific ocean, and includes the Kingsmill Group. This group lies on both sides of the equator, and consists of fifteen principal islands, having a population of about sixty thousand. A most prosperous Christian mission is established here, and many have embraced the truth as it is in Jesus.

The Congregational National Council will meet at Oberlin, Ohio, on Wednesday, November 15. The basis of representation has already been announced, but may as well be recapitulated. It consists of one delegate for every ten churches in a local conference, one also for a fraction of ten greater than half of ten; one additional delegate for each general association of churches, and one for each ten thousand church members.

The death of Dr. Mansel, dean of St. Paul's, deprives the English Church of one of its brightest ornaments, and the world at large of a strong and vigorous thinker. No man living has done so much to fix the tone of thought in the church as he, in conjunction with his master, Sir William Hamilton. It is by his work, "The Limits of Religious Thought," in which he applies the philosophy of Hamilton to religion, that he will be mainly remembered. Christian Witness.

The Roman Catholic boasting disappears under any fair show of figures. New York is claimed as a papal town, yet according to the Archbishop's figures their property is worth only $5,400,000. The Episcopalians alone have $7,500,000; Presbyterians, $4,550,000; Reformed Dutch Church, over $2,000,000; Methodists, ditto; Baptists, $1,750,000; and the Jews even $1,500,000—more than a quarter of the Roman Catholic property. The Protestant property is $20,000,000, or almost four times that of the Romanist, and including only evangelical sects. The papists can quote Paul: "Where is boasting, then?" Is it excluded by the law of faith? No, but by the law of works.

The College of Cardinals.—During his pontificate, Pius the Ninth has witnessed the deaths of nearly a hundred cardinals, and has all but twice renewed the Sacred College. There are alive to-day only nine cardinals who were presented with their hats by his predecessor, Gregory, and the youngest of these is seventy-five years of age. Several others are more or less infirm; especially Cardinals Billiet, Barnabo, Quaglia, Asquini and Barili. Twenty-two hats—an unusually large number—are just now vacant; and the members of the Cardinalate now at Rome and belonging to the Curia are only twenty-eight in number, of whom three or four are reduced, more or less, to a state of inactivity by age or sickness.

Giving up their Idols.—Mr. Timpany, a missionary among the Telooguos of India, writes to the Macedonian: "During the past two months twenty have been baptized—among them some men of promise. One was a priest, and, unasked, delivered up to me his heathen gods. He is a very intelligent man." Rev. Mr. Jewett, of the same mission, writes: "One of the converts received yesterday was a young priest of a Mala village. He delivered to us five brass idols, and a cup of holy water which he inherited from his forefathers. Tens of thousands have worshiped them. He is a fine, tall youth of twenty years. The Lord may call him to preach the gospel." He writes in a more recent letter: "We have prayed for converts; they have come in by the hundreds."

The Roman Catholics of England are making heavy claims upon the British government for educational aid. Estimating their proportion in the home population of the empire at 1,800,000, they reckon 300,000 children who are entitled to the privilege of primary day schools. For these young pupils two thousand women and one thousand men—in every case Roman Catholic—are requisite. To secure this staff an annual increase of one hundred mistresses and fifty masters is demanded. The entire State support asked for includes: a capitation grant for 300,000 scholars; also other grants, (1,) on the results of examination, (2,) for pupil teachers, (3,) for night schools, and (4,) in support of training colleges; and school pence paid out of the rates for children attending Roman Catholic day schools. The female Catholic teachers are obtained from the sisterhoods, the Sisters of Notre-Dame being specially singled out for this work.

Methodism Not Successful in Cities.—Rev. D. D. Lore, D. D., sketching San Francisco, which city he recently visited, says: "The various Christian denominations are well represented in this city. The Methodist Episcopal Church has eleven places of worship. The majority of them are small. Howard Street Methodist Episcopal church is the best and most valuable church building owned by us. The next best is the First Methodist Episcopal church, recently erected. It is not a large, yet a very pretty church edifice, and stands on the spot where the first church was erected. Although our denomination has the largest number of places, except the Presbyterian, which has twelve, we are not strong in membership or position in San Francisco. As in all other cities and centers of population, there is some hidden cause which prevents our maintaining the advance taken by us as the pioneers in all new fields. We were first in San Francisco; we are far from first now. This result is so universal that it should start thorough inquiry after the cause by those who watch over the general interests of the church. We have long since reached our conclusion in regard to it, and freely publish it. We believe it is found in connection with the frequent change of our pastors."

A full report of the Augsburg Synod, (Israelites,) which met in Germany on the eleventh ultimo, was recently published in the New York Herald. The session was mainly occupied in bringing to an orderly decision many questions of ceremony affecting the practical affairs of modern Judaism. The results reached were as follows: 1. In marriage an exchange of rings is allowed. A person who does not observe all the Jewish rites may yet be a lawful witness at a marriage. Weddings are permitted during Omer, and between the first and ninth day of Abh—superstitions beliefs to the contrary notwithstanding. A widow may marry after her child by her first husband is a year old. Civil marriages are legal, though religious ceremony is to be desiderated. The non-observance of Chalizah (fifth book of Moses) is no impediment to the marriage of widows. A certificate of death issued by a competent authority sufficiently establishes the identity of a person, and on this proof a widow may re-marry. A male child born of a Jewish mother is entitled to all Jewish privileges, even if not circumcised. The use of any or every kind of vehicle and playing on the organ are permitted on the Jewish Sabbath. The eighth and final session closed with the passage of a synodic manifesto, the main points of which are condensed below: 1. The Augsburg Israelite Synod declares that Judaism, having passed through several phases of development, has now arrived at a highly important juncture. The spirit of the true knowledge of God and of veritable morality more and more pervades the nations, and is embodied in their social condition, in art and science. 2. While the substance and aims of Judaism remain unalterable, the vast changes which have taken place in the convictions of mankind require a renovation of its forms. 3. Judaism has never recognized a contrast between faith and knowledge; it is therefore entirely in conformity with its inmost principles, and with its reverence for the past, if it now aims to remove, in a spirit of progressive enlightenment, that which is antiquated and obstructive. 4. The synod purports to be the organ of this movement. It will prevent the loosening of the ties which bind together their Israelite brethren, and will promote the interests common to all. 5. Its only power is the power of truth, of serious conviction and firm purpose. The synod is well aware that, with means such as these, it will surmount all impediments and ultimately secure the victory. 6. The synod is not a party. It does not intend to divide the brethren, but vouchsafes freedom of opinion to all. Aiming at the preservation of Judaism by harmonizing it with the present time, it hopes to accomplish a work of reconciliation.—Christian Union.

A boy eight years old, in one of our public schools, having been told that a reptile "is an animal that creeps," on being asked to name one on examination day, promptly replied: "A baby."

THE AUTUMN GATHERING.

The last of summer and the beginning of autumn is the time with us "when kings go forth to battle." In our Southern Conference things are most favorable for camp and protracted meetings. The fervid heat begins to abate, and the lassitude of the past months yields to the cool nights and bracing breath of the fall. It is more a season of leisure for man and beast, and the country people, especially, can afford to gear up their teams and spend a week or two at a time in attending the appointed services. The weather is usually favorable for out-of-door gatherings. A grove or a bush arbor, with a good spring at hand, are the most that is needed for a basket meeting, while the camp meeting can be ventured with the cheapest and most temporary arrangements. There seems to be something in the very atmosphere, the electrical adjustments, the meteorological conditions, peculiarly favorable to serious thought and deep religious impressions. The brown fields, the changing forests, the maturing harvests, and the hazy skies solemnize the mind, and put the soul in sympathy with the appeals of the gospel. Every season, doubtless, has its voices of truth and instruction. "The glories of the circling year" are manifold, and shine in each chapter of the volume which issues annually from the hand of Providence. The accepted time of salvation is always, while life and opportunity continue; and we should deprecate that habit of faith and effort which adjourns the expectations of immediate fruit to any set time or endeavor.

But there is reason in the special and extraordinary means resorted to at this season, and they have always been wonderfully blessed. The message of autumn is that of ingathering. Now everything is maturing. The corn is ready for the crib, the cotton is opening its snowy flakes, and the sugar-cane is growing sweeter and riper every day. The flowers and fruits of the summer have perished with the using; odorous, luscious, beautiful and refreshing, they are gone, and have given place to the more substantial and more enduring bounties of the year. There is a call, not boisterous it may be, but clear and emphatic, to save that which must be soon lost forever. The nuts are dropping in the forest, the precious staples are waving signals of distress to the loitering laborer. The brooks are swelling, the summer birds are songless, and on the wing for other climes, and many forms and sounds of insect life are rapidly disappearing. "We are going" is the farewell voice of the leaves, the birds, and the insects; going, but doubtless to return, even as man departs to live again, and also to come back flushed with the glories and triumphs of a better resurrection. It is thus that there is a gospel in the season which harmonizes with the endeavors put forth to bring in the spiritual sheaves. Nature and grace work together to this end as at no other time, and preachers and people derive peculiar inspiration from the sombre but beautiful phenomena of nature. The harvest is not passed, but it is passing. Whatever of advantages the season has will soon be beyond improvement, and the winter, with no store of gracious comfort, will be rendered more bleak and cheerless by the remembrance of wasted opportunities.

In this latitude, the set time to favor Zion has ever been at this season, and our people should go up to the feast of tabernacles with a strong and earnest faith. No appointment should fail of a protracted meeting, for by holding them good is always done, and not unfrequently a revival flame is kindled, which spreads throughout the circuit or district. The revival of camp meetings is a fact of great significance. If they were a necessity in new and sparsely settled countries, they are a grand utility in every community. They have been organized upon a large and permanent basis throughout the North and West, and we rejoice that the conviction of their importance is growing in the South. They are needed for the cities, and for old communities, even more than for the frontiers, in some respects. The novelty, the freshness and the seclusion are most grateful to the denizens of towns and cities, and are good for soul and body. The good done will more than repay the expense and trouble, and in rural neighborhoods, camp meetings can be held without great and burdensome cost. Let everything be plain, simple, rustic, and guarded from the encroachments of outward show and extravagance. Our Southern groves are the very places for them, and our fall season the most propitious. These favoring conditions call us out from our well appointed churches and from the religious routine of the year to the open air, and to worship amidst the inspiring surroundings of nature.

In all of our efforts during the season, we should not lose sight of the special end, the sanctification of believers, raising them to a higher and more devoted Christian life, and the immediate conversion of sinners. The preaching, the praying, the singing should be directed to this result. The preacher should not attempt to embrace subjects, which are sometimes necessary and admissable, but keep to the point of an ever-present salvation. Prayer need not go over the whole ground of warranted supplication. The condition of the Jews, the far-off heathen, the affairs and welfare of the nations, the widow and the orphan are to be prayed for, but not with particular emphasis in a protracted meeting. There are a great many edifying hymns that can well be dispensed with on such occasions, and some very agreeable tunes that do better service elsewhere. Keep the preaching, the praying and the singing to the single point of awakening and converting sinners, and of arousing believers to the necessity of a deeper spiritual life. It is the time for gathering, not so much for plowing and sowing now; not so much for building up, but for the use of the sharp gospel sickle. Whatever we have been during the year, let us be reapers now, and work with might and main, because the time is short. This autumn, with its brown face and withering herbage, and falling leaves, is linked with the last call of the gospel to thousands of impenitent souls. It is the preacher's last opportunity to pluck the brand from the burning, and to pull the perishing out of the fire. Fruitless, hitherto, they have reached another harvest, and are not yet consumed. But "every tree that beareth not fruit is hewed down and cast into the fire" at last. It is a time to dwell much upon the mission of the Comforter, and to claim the promise of the Father. It is a time to examine the grounds of our belief in the Holy Ghost, and with united and importunate prayer to seek the baptism from heaven. It is this which will qualify the church for her great work, and will send up from every quarter the tidings of deep and powerful revivals. Let us, with one accord, pray for the Holy Ghost.

EUROPEAN CORRESPONDENCE.

GENEVA, August 14, 1871.

MY DEAR STEWARDS: Rome must again claim our attention; but again I am restrained from those meditations in which I could, indeed, indulge almost as well at home as here, but which my recent observations would multiply, so as that, through very despair of reaching their conclusion, I must not begin their utterance.

Go with me without the walls for a few moments. (Aside.)—What stolidly practical things these guide-books are; how they do take the romance out of things! Illustration: I have just referred to mine for exactness' sake as to a point of locality, and I will quote part of the paragraph that I wanted, as follows: "About midway on the unattractive route, a small chapel on the left indicates the spot where, according to the legend, St. Peter and St. Paul took leave of each other on their last journey. (Omnibus in the afternoon every half hour, from the corner of the Palace Venezia, six soldi; fiacre one and a half—two francs.) But at last, is there is not in the practical parenthesis, that closes the above paragraph, a latent sarcasm, a fitting comment on the incredible legends and stupid impostures in which Roman Catholic mythology abounds? Everybody that writes of Pagan Romanism, as it is seen in Italy and elsewhere on the continent, has to tell of the sacred marvels that are shown in the churches, or rather basilicas—let the heathen name stand. I have seen wonderful things enough to do me good, believing their story the rest of my days, e. g.: the block on which John the Baptist was beheaded, the chains of St. Peter, the impression of the Saviour's feet on the stone where he met Peter fleeing from Rome. I cannot occupy precious paper with more of these absurdities.

But I was taking you to see a remarkable specimen of church architecture just without the walls of Rome. The church is called St. Paul's without the walls. I omit the poverty, also outside the walls, that is in part the expense of the magnificence of which I am about to write. The church is a marvel of beauty. I had seen magnificent pavements and ceilings and decorations and high altars in many churches of Europe, but had taken all calmly, nor ever been very considerably transported. But the church of which I speak, St. Paul's, impressed me as even colossal St. Peter's did not. St. Peter's is great in size and architecture, but St. Paul's is a colossal gem. It were vain to attempt any description of it to the imagination; but a bare hint of the appearance of objects, distant and unseen, is often all the satisfaction which imagination demands, and enough may be said for that purpose. Rome is truly a city of churches, and St. Paul's is the diamond in the setting, fittingly made up of St. Peter's, Santa Maria Maggiore, the Laterau Basilica and other churches: all grand, imposing, and many of them full-jeweled, like the costliest watch. The exterior of St. Paul's is plain, unpromising, rough, ugly, which serves a good purpose, rather than otherwise, to heighten the effect of the interior opened the first time to an observer's eye. Entered, an immense hall, three hundred and eighty-six feet in length, receives the visitor, vacant of pew or stool, and thus revealing to advantage its perfect proportions. Its floor is a tesselated pavement of marble of various colors, of exquisite workmanship and taste. The delicately carved ceiling of stone corresponds with the pavement. Its aisles are colonnades formed by eighty columns of polished granite, in four parallel rows. Its walls are paneled with alabaster, porphyry and others, the rarest, most beautiful marbles of every rich and varied hue, that the quarries of Rome, Greece and Egypt could be made to surrender. The high altar is supported by four columns of Oriental alabaster. Now add to all this ornamental mosaics in elegant profusion, and you have one vast mosaic of a temple, to which it would seem the spirit of worship ought to be native and congenial. Æsthetically considered, weighty and massive as is the interior, so perfect are the proportions, so harmonious and entertaining the beauty, as that the contemplative, so far from feeling oppressed with magnitudes, is conscious of a lightness and an elevation, as though he were floating in mid-air, the blue sky now inviting a higher ascent, and again the green earth soliciting his nearer approach.

The Vatican, the Pope's residence, is the most magnificent palace in the world. Absurd as the sacred marvels of Rome are, there is no imposture in the marvels of art, painting and sculpture which the Vatican contains. The "Transfiguration," by Raphael, was all that I had time for, and I was there all the time that was allowed.

But speaking of the Vatican, his holiness demands our first respects. I did not see the Pope. He considers himself a prisoner. He sees rifle beads drawn upon him if he dares to walk in his garden in the cool of the day. The boundary line of his dominion and Victor Emanuel's is at the very threshold of the Vatican. The Italian guards of the latter and the Swiss guards of the former can and do easily converse with each other, without stepping from their respective posts a foot. Rome is the capital of the Italian kingdom now, but the affairs of Italy do not appear to be settled. The Roman question is still a question. Rome is quiet, but not serene. Even to a foreigner, catching the sentiments of the people, half by guess, the agitation of the public mind is most apparent. The faithful—that is, the strictly Catholic population—will not believe but that the Pope's original authority will soon be reclaimed, and more firmly than ever re-established. They regard him as in Christ's place, and in his present situation they see the exact parallel of our Lord's in the adversities of His life in the flesh. For example, and the story that follows is interesting as well as necessary to illustrate the parallel: In the days of Pope Leo the Twelfth, fifty years ago, a band of robbers was the terror of a portion of Italy. They eluded arrest; they were caught by guile—we might say holy treachery. A priest approached their haunt under a flag of truce. They conferred with him; he promised them pardon and liberal pensions and safe escort to the frontier, if they would leave the country, never to return. They agreed, and were escorted as far as Civita Vecchia, where, in violation of the priest's engagement, they were surrounded and thrown into prison. In prison they lingered and died, one by one, until at King Victor Emanuel's late visit to his capital, only seven of a band of forty or more still survived. Among these was the robber chief himself, Antonio Gasparone, seventy-seven years of age, and his youngest surviving comrade was only ten years younger. Upon their own solicitation they were pardoned by the king, and released after forty-six years of imprisonment. They are now at large, their days and deeds of iniquity done, and are provided for at charitable asylums. What now say the Italian Catholics? What one said to me, with whom I conversed: Barabbas is set free; Christ, in the person of his vicegerent on earth, is imprisoned. It is not difficult to see something else, viz: That the days are passed in which a robber, without mercy, can only be put down by a Pope without faith. A revolution in Rome, at least a revolutionary outbreak, though it will be hopeless, is far from unlikely. Protestant predictions about a doomed Pope are rife and multiplied; but all is with God, for "who hath known the mind of the Lord or who hath been his counsellor."

A word of personal concern, and this will cease to tax your patience. Dissuasive considerations, urged from the first of my sojourn in Europe, and culminating at Naples, have prevailed, and forced me reluctantly to relinquish the idea and hope of attempting the Holy Land at this season of the year. This, therefore, finds me at Geneva, which is not a little cramped-up canton town of Switzerland, but a city of spaces and expanses, and enterprise and watches. The sermon in the English church yesterday was on the widow's mite—a begging sermon. A stranger from Geneva happens in, say at Carondelet Street Church. The pastor preaches for a special collection. The stranger objects: "These Methodists are always begging." Would I have been right to charge the Episcopalians with begging everlastingly, from the accidental circumstance of happening in yesterday at the time of a special collection? Nevertheless, it is the sin of Methodists that they do not beg more. There ought to be a special collection every Sunday.—Giving more, the people would get more, from God, in every way.

DAVID G. HUMPHREYS.

David George Humphreys, whose obituary I undertake to write, deserves our notice on many accounts. His family, his surroundings in life, his character, his hardships and triumphs interest and instruct us. He was born on the Hermitage Plantation, situated on the bank of the Bayou Pierre, Claiborne county, Mississippi, May 17, 1794, and died at the same place, January 11, 1871, having lived seventy-six years, seven months and twenty-five days.

The family from which he descended is a numerous, and, I may say, illustrious one.

Ralph Humphreys was a cavalier of Wales, whence he was driven to Ireland, and his descendants to America. One branch of the family settled in Connecticut, one in Pennsylvania, and another in Virginia.

Colonel David Humphreys, of Connecticut, was aid-de-camp to General Putnam, and afterward to Washington. Major General A. A. Humphreys, of Pennsylvania, and others of the family, distinguished themselves in the late war between the States.

From the Virginia branch descended David H., of Kentucky; Perry W., of Tennessee; James, of South Carolina; Absolom, of Georgia; John, of Virginia, and Ralph, of Mississippi.

Ralph Humphreys, the grandfather of David G., married Agnes Wilson, niece of James Wilson, a member of the Convention of 1787, which adopted the constitution of the United States, and one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence.

In the spring of 1788 he boarded a flatboat, with his family, descended the Monongahela, Ohio and Mississippi rivers, landed at Natchez on the tenth of September, and settled in the winter of that year at Grindstone Ford of the Bayou Pierre, Claiborne county, Mississippi.

George W. Humphreys, son of Ralph and father of David G., married Sarah, daughter of Major David Smith, a descendant of the Huguenots, who distinguished himself in the Creek war.

In 1791 he settled on the Hermitage Plantation, where David George was born. The county was then a wilderness; the settlements few and far between. Majestic trees and thickets of cane covered the land, and savages roamed the forests. Their only highway was the Bayou Pierre to the great Father of Waters; their vessels of navigation—rafts, canoes, skiffs and flatboats. This was long before steam was known as a propelling power. Their articles of trade were oak staves. Amid these scenes of rural wildness, George passed his boyhood and became inured to danger and hardship. Schools there were none; books and papers scarce. Not much of letters could be learned under these circumstances, but as his father and kindred were educated, he was not without instruction. He acquired, therefore, that discipline of mind and that knowledge which fitted him for a successful and happy life.

In his early manhood, twenty-two years of age, he married Mary Coburn, daughter of Samuel Coburn and Margaret Bussuet, with whom he lived, and whose heart beat in unison with his own for fifty-five years. Industrious, enterprising and frugal, property accumulated. He saw that he could be rich, and his heart began to be set on riches. "Then," said he to me, "was the time of my danger. Worldly feelings grew stronger; avarice began to awaken as property increased, and sordid temptations beset me. But that feeling is gone; I do not think I am avaricious now; with my substance I wish to honor God.

He united with the church at a quarterly meeting, held by Dr. E. M. Drake, in Port Gibson. The exact time and place of his change of heart he could not tell. He knew that old things had passed away, that he loved God, the word of God and the house of God, and that he had peace within and the hope of heaven. He became a diligent reader of the Bible, a constant worshiper at the home altar, a regular attendant at the house of God, and a liberal supporter of the church and of benevolent institutions. I think he gave more for religious and educational purposes than any other person in the vicinity of his home.

Twenty-seven years he was president of the board of trustees of the academy, and I do not know that he ever failed to attend a meeting.

As a man of business, he was diligent and careful, and maintained a boundless credit during his life. His hospitality was free, large and unostentatious; his friendship, warm, earnest and unchanging; his conversation, chaste, good-humored, instructive. I never found him in low spirits, and never heard him complain. In sickness and in health, prosperity and in adversity, he maintained tranquillity of mind. In politics he took no active part; never aspired to office, though his kindred aspired to offices of trust and honor. He sought no public place, while many others of the Humphreys family adorned the bar and the pulpit.

Mr. Humphreys was a Southern planter of the highest type, without pride or pretension; a gentleman by nature and by practice; a Christian by the grace of God and the mercy of Christ, "diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." The prime of his manhood was elegant; his latter years, serene; his end, peace. He honored God and God honored him.

Fort Deposit—Alabama Conference.

FORT DEPOSIT, ALA., Aug. 31, 1871.

MR. EDITOR: The secretary of our late district meeting, which convened in this place on the tenth instant, will furnish you, I suppose, a synopsis of its proceedings for your columns. Suffice it for the present to inform you, that, though the attendance was smaller than we had anticipated, the exercises were very interesting; to me at least, of a solemnly impressive character. We hope for great good as the result.

Our religious exercises, during and since the close of the conference, were attended with the power of the Holy Spirit, and the blessing of the Great Head of the church. Our dear Bro. Shores, our most excellent and laborious presiding elder, remained with us a week after the conference closed, preaching the word, and laboring with the mourners, of whom we had as many as twenty-five at the altar at one time. A goodly number professed conversion, and fourteen joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South. And they are just such a lot of members as would do credit to any body of professing Christians, and we pray that they may be steadfast in the faith, and zealous in the service of the Lord through all the remnant of their days on earth.

The church has been considerably revived, and deep impressions were made upon many minds and hearts around us. Oh! for still greater displays of the divine goodness in our midst, as there are yet many precious souls to be converted and sanctified, and made fit for the kingdom of heaven. To God be all the praise and glory for His grace and mercy in Christ Jesus our Lord.

Truly and fraternally yours,

F. L. B. SHAVER, P. C.

RAMBLING NOTES.

Under this heading, Dr. T. O. Summers, Jr., is writing some entertaining letters to the Nashville Christian Advocate. We make such extracts as our space permits from the letter of August 10, written from but not about New York city:

The geology of the country between Cincinnati and Baltimore is very interesting indeed. We passed through the Silurian formations and rocks of undetermined age. At the Ferry, nature seems to have done her best in rolling and tumbling together huge masses of rock, which stand on either side, frowning at the rapid rush of the waters of the Potomac. When we crossed the bridge the rain had ceased, and a beautiful rainbow was glittering on the Maryland heights, and all was quiet along the Potomac that night.

We spent Sunday in Baltimore. Of course we went to see Superintendent Magruder's Sunday school, of which we heard so much at the convention in Nashville. Our very cordial greeting was attended with an apology for the small attendance, as a large division of his army of little ones had gone into summer quarters. But there were a good many there notwithstanding, and we were regaled with some delightful singing. After the opening of the school, Dr. Morgan made a very interesting little speech, followed by an earnest prayer. We heard Dr. Huston preach in the morning on Heb. xi, 1. A storm coming up from the bay cut the doctor short in the midst of an interesting discourse. A great camp meeting was on foot for Annapolis Junction, from which you will no doubt receive reports. I do not know but that it would be better for you to pull up stakes in Nashville and return to your old home. You certainly live fresh in the memory of your old parishioners, many of whom crowded around me at the close of the evening service, to hear from you, and of you, and they all bade me carry back their blessings and their prayers. Southern Methodism has a strong hold here. May the Lord prosper them more and more abundantly!

It will be seen that the young professor of chemistry in the Southern University is making his hands tributary to his work at Greensboro:

We left Washington at five o'clock in the afternoon, and arrived at Philadelphia that night at twelve. While at breakfast the next day Dr. J. H. McQuilkin, professor of physiology in the Philadelphia Dental College, called on me and invited me to dine with him. The doctor is a thoroughly scientific man, and a prodigious worker. His microscopic investigations have furnished valuable contributions to the profession to which he belongs. In addition to his large practice and professional duties, he edits the Dental Cosmos, a large and valuable scientific journal, published by S. S. White. After dinner, we went to the Dental College and examined the buildings, apparatus, etc. It is certainly very complete in all its arrangements, and enjoys a well-deserved reputation, both in Europe and America, for superior educational advantages. After tea, the doctor carried me around to the regular meeting of the Academy of Science, of which he is a member. We had the pleasure of hearing the great Leidy demonstrate some specimens of interest, which had been presented to the academy. He is a very clear speaker, and has none of the dictatorial Huxleyism about him whatever. Prof. Cope, the author of the "Hypothesis of Evolution," followed with a few additional remarks upon the same subject, and gave evidence of great scientific ability. After the adjournment of the academy, Prof. Cope carried me up stairs and showed me some geological specimens from Alabama, and asked me to send him, from time to time, anything that I might find in my geological investigations around Greensboro, promising in exchange, duplicate specimens for the cabinet of the Southern University. I also met with Dr. George H. Horn, who is making collections of Coleoptera, and as I am going to the land of bugs, I engaged to send him specimens in alcohol. Prof. Cope kindly promised to assist me in making my classifications, he being engaged at that work all the time in the academy, which is said to possess the largest and most valuable geological collection in the world. Their ornithological collection is absolutely bewildering. We also had some conversation with Prof. Leidy. Speaking of Owen's last work, "The Anatomy of the Vertebrates," I asked him what he thought of the revolution in the theories of the great anatomist, who once had thus formulated the opinions of the scientific world: "Man is the sole species of his genus, the only representative of his order." He replied: "It is well that he did revolutionize his opinions on this point. I cannot imagine how he could have ever made such a foolish statement.' So you see the drift of the scientific mind of the present day. Uniformitarianism seems to be the pole-star of all their investigations.

The next morning Dr. Carson, professor of materia medica in the University of Pennsylvania, carried me through the medical department of the University. The educational advantages of Philadelphia are certainly very fine. The collections in the large museums of the city furnish to the student unbounded opportunities for actual investigation in all branches of science. Dr. Carson is a grand old gentleman. I spent several delightful hours in his company. He spoke with much affection and esteem of Dr. Callender, superintendent of the Tennessee State Lunatic Asylum, and professor of pathological psychology in the University of Nashville. He said: "Callender was the best student I ever saw; I tried my very best to stump him on his examination, but he answered every question promptly and fully. He is a noble fellow, and I love him from my very heart. When he bade me good-by he took me by the hand and said: "God bless you!" I had respected him before; I loved him then. Before leaving Philadelphia, of course I went to Independence Hall, and saw the old cracked bell that once rung notes that will never again sound forth on our air. It might as well remain cracked forever, for its mission is ended. I was delighted with Philadelphia, and was astonished to find it so much larger than New York. There are forty thousand more houses, and the people live much more comfortably and with much less expense. I left the Quaker City at three o'clock in the afternoon, and arrived at New York at six, passing through some fine towns and a beautiful country.

THE Spectator of the seventeenth of August announces the arrival of Bishop Keener on the Pacific coast:

We are pleased to announce the safe arrival in Sacramento, by the overland train of Saturday, the twelfth, of Bishop Keener, whose coming to this coast has been anticipated with much interest by all our people. He occupied the pulpit of the Seventh Street church, morning and evening of the following day, to the edification and spiritual profit of many. His discourses were clear, forcible, practical expositions and applications of Scripture truth. The morning sermon was one of the most lucid, concise and satisfactory presentations of the faith which justifies the soul, and the work by which faith is made perfect, to which we have ever listened. Those who have itching ears, and go to church to be entertained with fanciful, frothy, amusing novelties, such as were once confined to the theater and the circus, but of late years are common to places of worship, so called, will not admire Bishop Keener's preaching. While such as not only "endure," but love "sound doctrine" upon which the soul may feed, and develop into healthy vigorous Christian maturity, will hear him gladly and pronounce him one of the ablest gospel preachers they have heard.

The Bishop's health is good, and his former slender form has expanded to a much nearer approach to the ordinary Episcopal standard than in his earlier years. He thinks our previous representation of his working capabilities, overstated and misleading; but we spoke of him as he was when we labored with him twenty years ago. With the pressing necessities of the work now before him on this coast, and the disposition of our preachers and people to make the best possible use of Episcopal labors when they are accessible, the danger is not on the side of less, but of more than he can endure.

He left on Monday, the fourteenth, by the inland route, for Oregon, intending to spend the short time intervening between this and the meeting of the Columbia Conference in visiting such parts of that work as the brethren may indicate, and time will permit.

Let the prayers of the whole church accompany him on his rugged journey and exhausting labors, that his health may be preserved, and his visit to this coast may be made a great blessing to every part of our Zion.

BISHOP DOGGETT.

We are deeply pained to hear of the family afflictions of Bishop Doggett. We sincerely hope and pray that the sick may soon be restored to health. The Richmond Christian Advocate of August 31 says:

Bishop Doggett has not been able to attend any District Conference this summer or any other meetings outside the city, on account of the serious illness of his eldest daughter. It is uncertain whether he can leave home for his conference in the West. The church will not fail to remember the afflicted family of the Bishop at the throne of grace.

Married.

At the Presbyterian church in Brandon, Mississippi, on the twenty-ninth of August, by Rev. G. W. Chatfield, Mr. HOWELL H. BATTE and Miss MOLLIE G., daughter of General Robert Lowry.

Obituaries.

A mother in Israel has fallen. MRS. RACHEL CHARLTON is no more. She breathed her last at the residence of her son, William Charlton, near Clinton, Mississippi, on the sixteenth of July, 1871.

The deceased was born in Sumner county, Tennessee, October 13, 1791. At the age of sixteen she was united in holy wedlock with James Charlton, with whom she lived in the enjoyment of conjugal felicity, that "only bliss of Paradise that has survived the fall," for forty-eight years, or until the thirty-first of August, 1855, at which time she was left a disconsolate widow. A few months after the decease of him who had been so long the partner of her toils and the sharer of her joys, she bade farewell to the place of her nativity—the sacred spot endeared to her by all the sweet reminiscences of childhood's halcyon days, and all the cherished memories of wifehood and motherhood—and came to spend the evening of life with those of her children whom the vicissitudes of time had domiciled in Hinds county, Mississippi. Here she received that respect and those delicate attentions—sweet evidences of filial regard—which are so pleasing to age, and which children properly trained in youth never fail to render to a superannuated parent; and enjoyed perhaps as much of earthly happiness as usually comes to those whose way of life has "fallen into the sere and yellow leaf," and whose strongest chords of earthly love death's ruthless hand has severed.

She was the mother of thirteen children, eight of whom survive.

Although a model of morality and integrity in all the varied relations of life, Sister Charlton did not find "the pearl of great price" until she had nearly passed the prime of life. It was in the fall of 1829, while attending a camp meeting at Cane Campground—then included in a circuit of which Rev. Fountain E. Pitt, was pastor—that she was enabled to feel her sins forgiven. She then joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, and from that time forward, during the remaining forty-two years of her earthly pilgrimage, she was over the same firm, earnest, devoted Christian—a most exemplary follower of the meek and lowly Jesus. Much might be said of the many heaven-born graces that adorned her spotless character, but we deem it sufficient in this brief sketch to call attention to those two superlative virtues, which shed a brilliant luster over her whole life, and diffused a heavenly radiance in every circle in which she moved. We allude to her unwavering faith in Christ as her only hope of salvation, and her meek submission to the will of God under the darkest dispensations of His providence. When the Remorseless Conqueror, Death, had blighted her fairest prospects, crushed her fondest hopes, and swept away the objects of her warmest love, like Job, she bowed in meek submission, and gave praise to Him whose high prerogation it is to give or take away; and even when enduring the severest bodily afflictions, not a word of murmuring or complaint ever escaped her lips. In bearing afflictions, she made the Son of Mary her model; she often spoke of his severe sufferings and his unexampled patience and resignation, and expressed the deepest regret at her lack of conformity to his blessed example.

For a long while before her exit from the scenes of earth, she was enabled not only to contemplate the King of Terrors without an emotion of fear or regret, but even to look forward to the day of her dissolution as the happiest of her earthly pilgrimage. And yet, she was not one of those who spend the hours of affliction in fruitful longings for release from this fleshy prison in which we dwell; she ever evinced a patient willingness to await the Master's call, however long it might be delayed, and however much she might suffer. When, at last, the messenger arrived, she hailed him with unfeigned delight. Retaining her consciousness to the last, she remained calm and placid while the surging billows of the dark river were heaving around her, and when she had outridden the storm, even as she neared the Heavenly coast she spoke sweet words of cheer to the weeping watchers on the mundane shore. Some such death-bed scene Pollock had in his mind's eye, when he compared the dying Christian to the "Morning star which goes

Not down behind the darkened West, nor hides
Obscured amid the tempest of the sky,
But melts away into the light of Heaven."

The subject of this sketch, Bro. THOMAS APPLEWHITE, was born in the State of North Carolina, December 21, 1801. In 1831 he was happily converted to God; which enabled him to embrace fully the glorious light and liberty of the gospel. Immediately on receiving this precious faith, he united with the Methodist Episcopal Church; in 1833, he moved to the State of Georgia, and in 1856 he came to Louisiana. Here he made a large circle of acquaintances, and drew around him many warm and devoted friends. Bro. Applewhite served the church faithfully as class leader, almost from the commencement of his religious life, and for a series of years he was superintendent of Sabbath schools also. He magnified his offices by his fidelity and his deep and earnest devotion to the cause of Christ. He was emphatically a self-sacrificing and cross-bearing Christian; a uniform and constant attendant upon the services of the Holy Sanctuary; ever ready to assist with his songs of praise, his earnest prayers, and flowing tears. Many a time has the writer experienced a kind of inspiration in preaching on witnessing the glistening tear or hearing the earnest expression: "Bless God," or the jubilant shout: "Glory Hallelujah." He was also as ready to respond with his means in the most generous manner to the calls which the church, from time to time, made upon him. He was severely attacked with gastric fever or irritation of the stomach about the last of July, and died August 16, 1871, aged sixty-two years seven months and twenty-five days. He seemed deeply impressed, from the commencement of his sickness, that his dissolution was fast approaching. He conversed freely on the subject of death, and assured the writer, together with the numerous friends who visited him, that his peace was made with God. He had nothing to fear when the mortal conflict came. The sting of death was extracted by the conquering faith which he exercised in the blood of the Lamb. And as his mortal vision was closing to all things earthly, his moral pathway loomed up even to the perfect day; and his last articulate expression was: "Glory hallelujah."

Thus has passed away one of the good men of earth, rich in good works, and full of faith and the Holy Spirit. He leaves an aged and devoted companion and seven children, and many friends to mourn his loss.

"Our friend is restored to the joy of his Lord,
With triumph departs,
Him speaks by his death to our echoing hearts:
'Follow after,' he cries, as he mounts to the skies,
'Follow after your friend
To the blissful enjoyments that never shall end.'"

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.—The following tribute of respect was offered and adopted in our third Quarterly Meeting Conference, in memory of Bro. THOMAS APPLEWHITE, deceased.

Preparatory to entering upon the business of our third Quarterly Meeting Conference, Minden district, Louisiana Conference, the roll of members was called and one was not, Bro Thomas Applewhite, who, for a long series of years had faithfully served the church as class leader and Sunday school superintendent, having gone to his reward in heaven.

In the inscrutable providence of God, Bro. Applewhite ceased to labor and to live on the sixteenth ultimo, at his own residence in Webster parish, Louisiana, in the sixty-third year of his age, surrounded by a most affectionate family and weeping friends. He was a man universally esteemed by those who knew him, and exemplified in his daily walk the religion which he professed. During his illness he gave the most satisfactory evidence of his acceptance with God. Living or dying, he was resigned to the will of the Master, and he died as he lived—a Christian hero. Therefore, be it Resolved, That while we, as a Conference and a church, deeply regret the loss of Bro. Applewhite, yet we sorrow not as those who have no hope.

Resolved, That we earnestly condole with the aged and afflicted widow and her orphan children.

Resolved, That a suitable obituary be prepared, and that it, with these resolutions, be sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

Resolved, That a copy of the above proceedings be furnished the family, and the resolutions spread upon the book of record for this Quarterly Conference.

The Celebrated Argyle Bitters.—From one end of the country to the other these unrivaled Bitters have received certificates of their efficacy and health-giving properties, without solicitation from their proprietor or agents.

As a counteracting malarial poison, as a good family medicine, as a tonic, pure and lasting, as a delightful, gentle stimulant of the vital functions, as a preventive and cure of dyspepsia, they stand firm and unshaken in their reputation.

In malarious latitudes, in damp climates, they have no parallel in the many worthless decoctions, with far-fetched and farcical names (too numerous to mention), and passed off upon an innocent and unsuspecting people as valuable medicinal agents, but which, like "Dead Sea fruits, turn to ashes on the lips," and result in disgust and loathing, wrong and injury.

For fifteen years and more, these Bitters have found a place in the bosoms of thousands of our most industrious and respected mechanics, lawyers, doctors, the clergy, and are the boast and pride of the farmer and planter—the bone and sinew of the land.

They are now offered for sale at reduced prices. se7 1m

IT IS THE INVENTION of a Kentuckian, on the Fulling Mill principle, and is operated by rocking.

Washing of clothes is so simplified by this machine that either a man, woman or child can do the work, and do it well.

It will thoroughly WASH, RINSE and BLUE one hundred (100) ordinary Pieces of Clothing in forty-five (45) minutes, without the LEAST WEAR of the clothing, the breaking of a button or the pulling of a thread.

The most delicate Fabrics can be washed with it without the least injury.

While it washes, it bleaches likewise.

It will wash blankets, and give them a new appearance and feeling.

Its construction is so simple it will last for years with care, and cost less than wash tubs in the aggregate. Any one can repair it, as there are no cog-wheels or cranks to replace.

☞ Price, $12; with Little Giant Wringer, $18.

The LITTLE GIANT WRINGER requires no adjustment to wring either a collar or a blanket. It can be used independent of the machine, if desired. Price, $7.

I would ask attention to the following note of the Rev P. M. Goodwyn, of the Louisiana Conference, addressed to the editor of this paper:

"MR. EDITOR: Among your new advertisements I notice one of the 'Woman's Friend Washing Machines;' and if you will allow me I will say a word or two in regard to it, for the benefit of any who might like to have an outsider's opinion of it. Walking down Camp street some days since, I noticed one of these machines in front of a store, and, interested as I always am in everything that promises to be labor-saving and useful, I stopped to examine it. My first thought was: Here is the true principle on which to construct a machine for washing clothes. A day or two after, having consulted my good wife, I ordered one sent to my house; and having had it tested most thoroughly, under my own eye, I do not hesitate to say that its performance comes fully up to all that Mr. Thompson, the proprietor and manufacturer of it in this city, claims for it. The machine does its work, and does it well, in the time specified in the advertisement; and if the person managing it is active in handling clothes, and putting them through the 'Wringer,' it will be found that the job of washing is one that is soon over with.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE.

THE TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL SESsion of this school will begin on the FIRST MONDAY IN AUGUST, 1871. The entire expense for board and tuition, for forty weeks, will be $150. The board is of the best description that the country affords, being furnished by the steward from his own farm and prepared by the hands of his own family. We had boys from five different States last year, and not a word of complaint was ever made on this point, which is often the subject of just complaint at boarding schools. The fare is peculiarly grateful to Southern boys, who require a more generous diet when they change their climate.

The manner of governing the school is paternal, as the entire exemption from temptations in the surrounding country renders the discipline easy. The institution is under the care of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, but under my own control. The young men attending the school last year were, without exception, moral and religious. Young men preparing for the ministry may receive tuition free, and in certain cases can obtain lower rates of board. Regular services are held in the College Chapel.

The location of the school is near Madisonville, Monroe county, East Tennessee, in the midst of a fruitful and beautiful country, and surrounded by a thrifty and intelligent population. No negroes live in the neighborhood, all the laborers in the fields and servants in the families being white. The citizens of Monroe county were true to the South in her late struggle, and have adhered to Southern churches.

Students arriving by the East Tennessee and Virginia Railroad will get off at Sweetwater, forty miles south of Knoxville, whence they will find conveyance to the college, seven miles distant.

Our post office is Madisonville, Tennessee.

F. M. GRACE, President.

P. S.—1. Families from the South will find good board in the neighborhood, and a delightful summer retreat at White Cliff Springs, sixteen miles distant from Madisonville. For information on this point parties may address D. A. McKenzie, Steward of the college. The health of the country is proverbial.

P. S.—2. Younger boys may be safely sent to this school, as all are under the immediate oversight of the principal, both when in school and when at the boarding house.

The Child's Corner.

THE GOOD OLD SWISS LADY.

In a nice little house—
Not built on the sand—
Lived a good old lady
From Switzerland.
The house it was neat,
Oh! quite clean and sweet,
Not a speck of dirt to be seen;
And the brass knocker winked,
And the window-panes blinked,
At each glance of the sun, I ween.

But the good old lady—
Now gone to her rest—
The language of Switzerland
Ever loved best;
Of "Merricany" she mastered
A short phrase or two,
And one of those phrases
Was: How do you do?

On a bright, dewy morning
In June, or before,
Was a cricket match played
Near the old lady's door,
And an unlucky ball
Came driving and dashing,
A clear, bright window-pane
Crashing and smashing.

She rushed to the window
And put her head through,
With her "Ha boy! hi boy!
How d'ye do! How d'ye do."
And roaring with laughter,
The cricketers cried:
"I'm quite well, I thank you,
How are you? How are you?"

THE COWSLIP-BALL.

The grass and the meadow flowers stood tall in the fields, and haying time was drawing near.

"Life is short," said a Dandelion, addressing his companion flowers. "We are ornamental; the human race love to gaze on us; but they are such a grasping, utilitarian set that, because they think they can get a little more pecuniary advantage out of us when we are dead and dried, to work goes the scythe, and down we must go!"

"Down we must go!" echoed the Daisy. "The human race forget all we have done for them in our lifetime; it, however, is a satisfaction to remember it one's self."

"I wonder, now, which of us is of the most importance to mankind?" said the Buttercup, and it was perfectly evident, from the tone in which he spoke, that he was satisfied it was himself.

"Perhaps each flower would kindly name his particular line of usefulness," said the Daisy, "and then we shall be able to judge—the Buttercup, for instance?"

"I have a great gift," said the Buttercup modestly. "If I am held up to the cheek of a little child it is at once apparent whether he has a predilection for butter or not. If such is the case, I cast a yellow glow on his face; if not, I make no sign."

"Hum!" said the Dandelion; "is that so very useful?"

"Eminently so," answered the Buttercup. "Let us imagine a case. Suppose the farmer yonder misses a pound of butter from his dairy, he has only to summon all the children of the village about him, and hold one of us up to their faces in turn, and it would be at once apparent who was the guilty party."

"I doubt if that would go down in a court of law," said the Dandelion quickly.

"Possibly not," replied the Buttercup; "but we are not all lawyers!"

This remark seemed unanswerable, though the Dandelion felt sure there was a weak point in it somewhere; so he began to talk about himself.

"I am of a curious, mechanical turn of mind," said he, "which I endeavor to use for the benefit of mankind. When my yellow petals fall off there comes in their place a ball of white fluff, which acts as a clock. School children have only to blow on it, counting each puff to find out what time it is. Thus, you see, they never need be late for school, if they happen to find one of us on the way."

"That depends upon whether you keep the same time as the school clock," said the Buttercup, and the Dandelion felt that his yellow friend was too much for him; so he changed the conversation again.

"What can you do, Daisy?" he asked.

"Mine is a very important mission," said the Daisy. "I am gifted with a wonderful spirit of divination in affairs of the heart. Suppose a young girl wishes to find out if her lover be faithful to her. She consults me. Not only in England, but in all parts of the world I am looked upon as an oracle. In France, in Germany, in Italy, in Australia even, where everything goes by the rule of contrary, and my petals are lilac instead of white. One by one young lovers of all countries pluck them off, murmuring words in their own language; and whatever sentence lingers on their lips, as the last petal falls, they know to be the truth."

The Daisy paused, and looked up to see what effect her statement had made. The Buttercup and Dandelion were evidently impressed, for they made not a single remark on the subject.

"Now, Cowslip," said the Dandelion, "hold up your head, and tell us what you can do."

Now this was not kind of the Dandelion, for he knew perfectly well that the Cowslip was incapable of holding up her head.

"Alas!" said she, "I am a very ignorant creature. I can tell no one, least of all the human race, anything that they did not know before; but little children like to play with me, and sometimes make me into pale yellow tea."

"Ha, ha, ha!" laughed the Daisy, and the Buttercup, and the Dandelion; "what a gifted creature the Cowslip is! She can make pale yellow tea!"

When the Cowslip heard this scornful laugh she drooped her head lower and lower, and large tears fell from her yellow eyes on to the grass beneath, and the blades whispered:

"How salt the dew tastes this morning!"

In the old manor-house near there lay a little child ill with a fever; she moaned and tossed on her bed while her mother sat beside her.

"Shall I read to you, my child?" said the mother.

"No, thank you, mother. I want to go out, and help Jenny at the farm feed the chickens."

"But you are too ill, my darling."

"Then ask Jenny to come and see me. I want her. She'll tell me about the things outside."

"Your uncle, the professor, is coming to see you," said the mother; "and he's so clever; he'll tell you such wonderful stories. You'll like that, won't you, dear?"

"No, thank you, mother dear. I don't like clever people when I'm ill. I want Jenny."

Meanwhile a young girl from the farm-house was hurrying through the meadow in search of flowers. She passed by the daisies and the buttercups and the dandelions, and chose out all the cowslips—our little friend among them. Her heart bounded as she found herself chosen, and she bid farewell to the spot of grass which her tears had made greener than all the rest of the field. The young girl sat down under a tree, and strung all the cowslips together into a large ball, so fresh and fragrant, and with it she made her way to the old manor-house, and begged admittance to the sick child's room.

"And right glad to see you Miss Nellie'll be," said the housekeeper; "she's been asking for you all this morning."

So Jenny and the cowslip-ball visited the darkened room. The child raised herself in bed.

"Oh! Jenny, I am so glad it's you," she cried; "and what a delicious cowslip-ball!" The small, feverish hands clasped the fragrant treasure, and Jenny sat down by the child, and soothed her with her simple country talk.

When Jenny left the room the mother whispered:

"Your visit has done my child good; she has taken more notice of that cowslip-ball than of all the fine books and toys I have got for her." Jenny's eyes brightened as she made her courtesy.

"I had nothing else to bring the dear little lady, ma'am," she said.

"Mamma," said the child when Jenny was gone, "isn't it a sweet ball? When I press it against my face I could fancy I was out in the meadows."

The heart of our little friend, the Cowslip, was filled with thankfulness when she heard these words.

"Then I am really of some use, after all," she thought.

Little Nellie was never to play in the fields any more. The next day the fever left her, but so weak and tired that she sank quietly into a long, sweet sleep. Rare hot-house flowers were scattered over her by loving hands; but no one liked to remove the withered cowslip-ball which lay on the bed beside her; so it was placed in the little coffin and buried with her.—Beata Francis, in Good Words for the Young.

"MY GOD, WHERE ARE WE GOING!"—At an early hour in the morning a few of the citizens of the town and vicinity of G—— might have been seen hastening toward the depot. A run of twenty minutes brings the dashing train to a bridge, sixty feet below which, as in a channel cut through the rock, runs the now swollen waters of Lee's Creek. The recent freshet had undermined one of the principal piers. There is a fearful crash, and, as the coaches fall through the awful space, one is heard to exclaim: "My God, where are we going!"

Whether these words were uttered by lips devout or profane, will probably never be known. A moment longer and the wreck is in flames, and so dreadful is the burning, that of the twelve or fifteen persons fatally involved, the charred remains of but few could be identified even by their friends. My God, where are we going! Reader, where are we going? We are going!

Another incident in connection with this same railway disaster—for these are facts, as the writer has occasion to believe. Amid the wreck some coin was spilled upon the floor of the broken car. As the fire progressed one poor sordid soul was seen gathering the pieces of gold in his hand. Whether he escaped, or whether he was overtaken by the flames and perished, grasping his treasure in his fist, we know not.—The United Presbyterian.

The Farm and Garden.

Cultivation of the Huckleberry.

We have been furnished, says an exchange, with the following interesting article from the pen of Prof. Balls:

It was scarcely supposed, until within a few years, that any of the several species of huckleberries were susceptible of improvement by cultivation, or that a hybrid of value could be produced by crossing one variety upon another. This, however, after various experiments, has been accomplished by a gentleman residing in Stafford county, Virginia; and has been pronounced by Mr. Philip R. Freas, of Germantown, Pennsylvania, Mr. Horace Greeley, and other celebrated pomologists, as one of the most important discoveries of the age.

Botanists and explorers during the Seminole war discovered, in the swamps of Florida, and limited to a few locations, a species of Vaccinnium, which could hardly be called a huckleberry. It was fully as large, often larger than the fox grape, having an acrid taste, but a most fragrant perfume, and containing a large per centum of juice.

Capt. Tucker, of Fernandina, Florida, of world-wide celebrity as a pistol shot, who was attached to General Taylor's staff, brought from Lake Ocke-cho-bee some of these plants to Virginia. They were easily acclimated in Stafford county, and were preserved there until six years ago as curiosities in gardens; when Fountain Rose, Esq., ascertaining that they were really a variety of Vaccinnium, conceived the idea of crossing them by the usual method, on the small sweet huckleberry, so common in our woods. An account of Mr. Rose's experiments would scarcely interest the reader; results, therefore, will only be given.

The acridness of the Florida berry was entirely wanting in the new berry, and the sweetness of our small berry retained, with the size, juiciness and flavor of the Florida species. From a bushel of these hybrids Mr. Briggs last year produced over five gallons of wine, which surpasses that made from currants and wild grapes. After fermentation, the wine contains as much alcohol as Sherry. The aroma of the new fruit cannot be equaled as a flavoring essence for ice cream and custard. Mr. Rose produced on one square in his garden, say the twelfth of an acre, thirty-nine bushels of the "Osceola huckleberries," as he has dubbed them. The plant is easily propagated from suckers, grows to the height of thirty inches, and stands four feet six inches apart in rows.

What revolution or innovation this new fruit is to effect in wine-making, it is difficult to calculate; but it is not improbable that it will seriously affect the cultivation of the Catawba grape, now so extensively used for that purpose. Some of the plants have been sent to G. Thorburn's establishment, and to Mr. Greeley, New York; and Philip R. Freas, of the Germantown Telegraph, has been appointed agent for the sale of a limited supply in the vicinity of Philadelphia. The latter gentleman has now some hundred suckers growing finely in his garden, which will produce fruit in 1872. The color of the berry is a deep purple, exceedingly brilliant, and, as already stated, as large, if not larger than the fox grape.

It is predicted that the cultivation of this fruit will make Stafford the richest county in the State of Virginia, not excepting Frederick or Loudon.

LONGEVITY OF THE PEACH.

HOW TO EXTEND IT.

Though horticulture is steadily advancing in the South, and a rapid reform from the older modes of culture and propagation is taking place, still we see very little notice taken of the peach. A change is very much needed in regard to the selection of more suitable stocks or seedlings to work the peach on. In parts of England the peach stock is entirely discarded, and the plum generally used to prolong the longevity of the trees. I have some experience in the adaptability of the peach on the plum; the roots are free from the borer, and the trees in a better state of health, and almost adapted to all kinds of soils. The peach can be successfully grafted on the plum. I would recommend the old system of "saddle-grafting," which is performed as follows: The crown of the stock is cut with a keen knife, in the shape of a wedge; the scion is prepared by inserting the knife at the end of the scion, as if cutting out a bud by drawing it upward, with the edge of the knife inclined in about half way the thickness of the scion and the length that is required; the scion is turned over, and drawing the knife upward the same length as on the other side, all the pithy wood drops out, and the two sides that form the saddle are, in comparison, like buds with all the pithy substance taken out. Care must be taken in fitting both the barks of the scion and stock. The great cause of so many failures in grafting the peach is owing to its soft, pithy nature; but this can be overcome by the mode here stated. This mode of "saddle-grafting" is somewhat different from the old way, by splitting the scion and paring the sides. This is very tedious and slow, while with two draws of the knife the scion is prepared. The stocks should be one year old, and when a few hundred are grafted they are tied in small bundles and packed in damp sawdust. By spring they will be well united and may be planted out in nursery rows.

I have seen the peach growing on the plum in Kentucky, which was grafted some thirty years ago by an old English gardener. I have never seen a more healthy tree; it showed no signs of decay or insects. The variety was the old Teton de Venus. It had fruited finely and free from rot. I am confident that our Southern horticulturists do not pay proper attention in the selection of stocks. Likely it is a little more expensive. But good, healthy trees, on good stocks, will always sell at a good price, and pay the propagator well. The peach is the poor man's fruit, and there is not the least doubt but it is as profitable as any other variety.—J. P.; in Our Home Journal.

ROSES AND ROSE PESTS.—Annually, as summer comes and the roses begin to bloom, we are beset with inquiries what to do for the rose slug, the little fellow who eats out all the green, and leaves the leaves beautifully skeletonized. Nothing is more easily kept down. Watch for their first appearance and crush them; a few minutes on each plant will do. The rosebug is another troublesome thing on flowers; they are easily shaken off into a bowl of water. All through the garden, hand-picking and watchfulness will be found the best remedy for all the larger class of insects. Speaking of roses, we suppose all our readers may know that the flowers of the perpetual kind should be cut away as soon as the petals are faded. The buds then push out again, and flowers come from the new growth.

Rare roses are increased by layers, buds and cuttings; layers are made of the strong growths as soon as the wood gets a little hard; a slit is cut in the upper side of the shoot to be layered, and is bent down into rich soil. Everything roots sooner in rich than in poor soil. The cut used to be made on the under side, but they are then liable to break on bending down. Budding is done by taking out a piece of bark of another kind, and then tied in. It is nice amusement for ladies, and any florist can explain the process to those who do not know.

Budded roses are not very popular, owing to the tendency of the kinds used for stocks to throw up suckers, which, unless the intelligence of the grower is equal to keeping them off, in the end kills all the kinds budded on them. Rose cuttings are generally easily raised by those who know a little about it. In proportion as one becomes a skillful florist, the failures to strike rose cuttings increase. Almost every one who puts in a few "slips" of half ripe wood into a pot of earth, and sets the pot under a shady fence, succeeds; but as soon as he or she "knows all about it," they can't strike roses. Here, at least, is an encouragement to the new beginner.—Gardener's Monthly.

FRUIT CULTURE.—Old Errors Corrected.—1. Instead of "trimming up" trees, according to the old fashion, to make them long-legged and long-armed, trim them down, so as to make them even, snug and symmetrical.

2. Instead of manuring heavily in a small circle at the foot of the tree, spread the manure, if needed at all, broadest over the whole surface, especially where the ends of the roots can get it.

3. Instead of spading a small circle about the stem, cultivate the whole surface broadcast.

4. Prefer a well-pulverized, clean surface, in an orchard with a moderately rich soil, to heavy manuring, and a surface covered with a hard crust and weeds or grass.

5. Remember that it is better to set out ten trees, with all the necessary care to make them live and flourish, than to set out a hundred trees and have them all die from carelessness.

6. Remember that tobacco is a poison, and will kill insects rapidly, if properly applied to them, and is one of the best drugs for freeing fruit trees rapidly of small vermin, and is better used in this way than to make men repulsive and diseased.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

WILLOW LEAVES FOR YEAST.—A correspondent of the Journal of Agriculture states that the leaves of the common basket willow (salix nigra) make an excellent yeast, if treated in the same way as is usual with hops. "The discovery," he says, "was made in my family last summer, and after a thorough trial I was convinced that nothing is equal to it, as it rises much quicker than hops—in half the time—imparts none of that hop flavor so disagreeable to some, and, in fact, makes better bread every way. The thing is well worthy the attention of every good housewife; and lest some should hesitate in consequence of not knowing the medical properties of the willow in question, I will add that it is a healthful tonic, from which no harm can possibly arise."

KALSOMINING VS. WHITEWASHING.—The inconvenience of the ordinary whitewash is that it rubs off with the slightest touch. Many receipts are afloat to prevent this disadvantage of using simply suspended lime. The kalsomining process is simple, cheap, and forms a fine finish. The following is the process: Soak four ounces of fine white glue in one quart of warm water for twenty-four hours; then add a pint of water, and place the vessel that contains the glue into a vessel of boiling water, until the glue is perfectly dissolved. Put five pounds of good Paris white into a bucket, and add hot water enough to make it of the consistency of cream. Add to it the glue water, and mix thoroughly by stirring. The beauty and success of the result depends much on the application of the compound. It should be put on evenly with a good brush, no streaks being left. The consistency may be properly produced by the addition of hot water. Two coats should be given, and, if well done, it is equal to any other more expensive finish. Paris white is common chalk that has been ground to fine powder and thoroughly washed. It is a cheap article.

A TRAVELER was relating that he saw in the course of his travels in Japan a church a thousand feet long. A friend checked him as he was going on, and the traveler added, "and two feet broad." Everybody laughed at this absurdity, when the story-teller flew into a passion, and exclaimed: "It's my friend's fault; if it hadn't been for him I'd have made the church square!"

AN EARLY SETTLER of Indiana planted two trees in front of his cabin, saying to his wife that they should be the trees of their lives. In 1834 the one named after the man fell, and he survived it but a month. Recently the woman's tree died, and she lived but a day or two longer.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR.

A Purely Vegetable Compound

FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF

RHEUMATISM AND GOUT

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered inestimable relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Rawson, Delhi, Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Bradley, Floyd, Louisiana.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to durat on of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia, from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

CORONA.

CORONA STRIVES TO JUSTIFY its name,

THE CROWN OF SCHOOLS

for the higher education of women, by closely combining in its scheme the best points of excellence found in all other. It aspires to superiority in all departments—literary, scientific, aesthetic, domestic, hygienic. The principal, after spending twenty years in studying educational questions and in the practice of teaching, devoting his whole mind and heart to the work of maintaining not the largest but the best school in the South. His system of education comprehends such a harmonious development of all the powers of mind, heart, body as will fit the young lady for the careful discharge of the highest and lowliest duties of life.

The methods of instruction are those approved by the foremost educators of the land. The very best aids are employed for teaching real knowledge, such as maps, charts, globes, specimens and apparatus of all kinds. There is no rote—learning of the mere words of text books—no cramming of the mind with disconnected facts.

Assistant teachers of known scholarship and well-tried aptness in teaching are engaged. In physical science and modern languages instruction is given by the same professors in these departments of Cleveland University.

The course of study is very extensive, is arranged into schools after the plan of the best universities, and pupils are graduated in such schools as they or their parents elect. Music on piano, harp and guitar.

In the boarding department young ladies enjoy all the comforts of an elegant home. The rooms are large, well ventilated, handsomely furnished and newly carpeted. Fires in rooms whenever wanted. The tables are bountifully supplied with wholesome food.

The location is most favorable in point of health, social refinement and religious privileges.

The health and physical development of boarding pupils are promoted by a course of gymnastic exercises, under a competent teacher, with dumb-bells, wands, clubs, Indian clubs, without charge.

The expense of boarding and tuition is $250 or $260 a year. Extra branches at usual rates. The annual session begins on the first Monday of September.

AGENT FOR THE SOUTHWESTERN STATES FOR THE SALE OF

GEORGE WOODS & CO.'S

PARLOR And CHURCH ORGANS.

To those who are at all acquainted with the trade in musical instruments, or those conversant with the improvements that during the last twenty years have been made in that most popular of instruments, the Reed Organ, it is entirely superfluous to speak of the reputation or ability of the firm of GEO. WOODS & CO. We will, however, mention, for the benefit of any who may be without information on the subject, that the senior partner, Mr. Geo. Woods, has been engaged in the manufacture of Organs for many years, that he is the inventor of many valuable improvements and ingenious devices, and that his coadjutors in the business are all men extensively known to the trade as being possessed of uncommon skill, taste and experience in their different branches.

In offering our instruments to the notice of all interested in music, we merely ask a comparison between those of our manufacture and those of others, and briefly mention upon what points in our instruments we base our claims of superiority to the productions of our competitors in business:

QUALITY OF TONE.

Its Purity, Clearness and Brilliancy, Extraordinary Power,

CAPACITY FOR VARIETY, AND BEAUTY OF EFFECT,

Which is owing in a great measure to the excellence of our famous SOLO STOPS,

VOX HUMANA AND VOX CELESTE,

which differ materially in their construction and effects from other Stops of the same or similar name.

Our MANUAL SUB-BASS; smooth as well as effective in quality of tone.
PATENTED INVENTIONS AND INGENIOUS DEVICES.
Our method of employing SOLO SETS in separate WIND CHESTS.
IMPROVED VALVES AND WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.
THOROUGHNESS OF CONSTRUCTION AND ELEGANCE OF DESIGN.

All material used in the construction of our instruments will be found to be strictly of the best quality. Our workmanship will also be found to be of a very high order.

The Cases are constructed with a proper regard to the laws of sound, having acoustic chambers at the ends of the case.

The Fronts of Keys are Ivory, and are not of Holly wood.

The Carvings are hand-made.

The Stops are of Ebony and Ivory, engraved by hand.

Special attention is called to these Organs. Price Lists and Catalogues, containing full particulars of the many numbers, sizes, varieties and prices—ranging from $110 to $650—will be mailed to any one on application.

☞ All instruments will be thoroughly examined and shipped in good order. Therefore parties can safely order without coming to select. Address

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

MARTHA WASHINGTON COLLEGE,
ABINGDON, VIRGINIA.
The College of the Holston Conference.

THE TWELFTH ANNUAL SESSION of this well-known institution will begin OCTOBER 1, 1871, and continue forty weeks.

FACULTY.

R. W. JONES, M. A., of the University of Virginia, President.

Rev. W. G. E. CUNNYNGHAM, D. D., Professor of Moral Philosophy and Belles Lettres.

Miss MAGGIE J. TUCKER, Preceptress.

Miss ANNIE M. RHODES, Drawing and Painting.

F. L. FUNK, Professor of Music, with a full corps of assistants in each department.

Board and English tuition, for term of twenty weeks, from $95 to $105.

No extra charge for Latin or Greek. Charges for the other branches moderate. All charges to be paid in advance.

The course of instruction embraces every subject of a solid and finished education.

The system of instruction is that of the University of Virginia, at which the President graduated as Master of Arts.

The college buildings are substantial brick structures, commodious, comfortable and elegant.

The grounds have been laid out with exquisite taste, and present an appearance of surpassing loveliness.

All the associations and surroundings are such as to cultivate the taste and refine the feelings.

Abingdon, situated on the Virginia and Tennessee railroad, eight miles from Emory and Henry College, and fifteen from Bristol, amid the mountains of southwestern Virginia, is noted for the beauty and grandeur of the surrounding scenery, a balmy atmosphere, general healthfulness and refined society. Mineral waters abound in its vicinity.

Parents in the South cannot find a place in the United States where the influences are more favorable for the perfect development of the physical constitution, and where educational advantages of a higher order are afforded.

For catalogue or any additional information address the President or

DRILL OF THE MILITARY SCHOOL.

Located in a quiet, healthy country, so far distant from town as to place the young men beyond the manifold temptations which ordinarily attend college life.

The students all board in the Barracks, and are kept under right military discipline. There are no temptations to extravagance or dissipation.

This school has combined the discipline of the camp with the comforts and pleasures of home life, which can hardly be found elsewhere.

SPONTANEOUS IGNITION OF COAL.—The spontaneous ignition of coal when piled in large heaps, as well as under other conditions, has been carefully investigated by Prof. E. Richters, of the Mining School at Wahlenburg. He states that all coals absorb oxygen, though with different degrees of intensity; and although this in itself is insufficient to ignite a mass of coals, it must be remembered that this absorption produces in a shorter time a much greater and constantly increasing degree of heat. This latter increase is due to the fact that elevation of temperature is the cause of increased absorption of oxygen, which itself causes a still further evolution of heat. By heating three different kinds of coal for a fortnight, at a temperature of 158 degrees to 176 degrees Fahrenheit, Richter found that they lost as high as 3.6 per cent. of their heating power. The same effect can be produced by heating the coal for three or four days only, at a temperature of 220 degrees Fahrenheit, and in a few hours the same can be produced at 300 degrees Fahrenheit. This loss of power must be ascribed to oxydation introduced or rather inaugurated by the absorption of oxygen.

NOVEL DENTISTRY.—An English dentist, Mr. Coleman, has suggested a novel method of dealing with carious teeth. Instead of operating on the tooth in the usual way he removes it from the mouth, cleans it of all decayed and diseased parts, treats it to washings of carbolic acid, fills it and then returns it to the socket. Out of fourteen cases treated in this manner he has been successful with nine. Startling as the new idea may seem, it is already receiving favorable attention from other dentists, and may make considerable of a revolution in the practice of dentistry. We have had a practical experience in this matter, which is in point. Some years ago a bungling dentist, in attempting to remove a decayed tooth, took out the adjoining sound one instead. The carious tooth was then removed and the sound one replaced in its own socket. A still further blundering perpetuates the reminiscence, for the tooth was put in back side foremost, and yet took a firm hold, which it still retains. There are methods for deadening the pain in extracting teeth either by general or local anæsthetics. We have known of a simple local application, and that not by freezing, which entirely does away with pain without affecting the consciousness of the patient. With such appliances at hand, and the filling done outside of the mouth, dentistry may become shorn of its terrors.—Christian Union.

THE TASMANIAN DEVIL.—An English magazine gives an account of an animal found in Van Dieman's Land, of which brief mention has already been made. If all that is said of it is true, it must be the most uncanny creature of the brute kind that walks or leaps on the face of the globe. Mr. Leakey, the writer, seems to exhaust the dictionary in his search for words adequate to the subject. The animal is of the marsupial family and about the size of a dog. It is glattonous and sluggish, and will gorge itself with food and then sleep heavily; but the slightest provocation or resistance of its will puts it into an ungovernable fury, so that it acts like a veritable fiend. It is irritable to the last degree, and in its senseless fury will rush at anything, be it a mastiff or a barn door. The sense of fear does not seem to exist among its instincts, and so long as a shred of its body remains alive to fight, it will neither give truce nor quarter to the object of its wrath. It has no regard for inequality of battle, but will fight anything, anybody and any number indifferently until its life goes out with an infernal snarl. It has a diabolical face, a look of sarcasm by the drawing down of the lips, and eyes of uncompromising ferocity. Even if taken young, nothing can soften its character; it will never learn to make friends with its guardians or not to be surly, but will fight with the bars of its cage, and usually dies in some mad struggle with them. Its growl is incessant, and Mr. Leakey even credits it with swearing. In striving to explain such a character it has been suggested that hunger in its case may amount to positive pain, or that it may be a branch of the marsupial family that has inherited insanity. It is proposed to try the creature with the rocket, which no known beast, not even the ferret, will face. If it will face this the proof of insanity will be strong. In hearing such an account we are reminded of the striking language once used by Prof. J. D. Dana in regard to the lower animals: "He (man) sees his own debased appetites and fierce passions in full exhibition among the brutes, that he may learn to call them beastly and brutal, and become the more conscious of his fall as the depths are discovered to be even lower than the natural level of the animal."—Christian Union.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The commercial year has commenced with some symptoms of revival in several branches of the wholesale trade, and a better demand for our leading staple, stimulated by the crop accounts and the general tenor of Liverpool and New York advices. Operations, however, have been restricted by scant supplies, a considerable portion of the stock unsold being held by factors above the ruling rates. The business, nevertheless, has been to a fair extent, and factors have enabled to establish an advance of ⅛ to ¼c.

The crop accounts continue decidedly discouraging. The worms are reported nearly everywhere, and although as yet they have done serious injury only in a few instances, there is a general apprehension that in the next week or ten days their ravages will prove disastrous. The general aspect of the crop, moreover, discourages hopes of even an average yield, the plant being in many cases remarkably unfruitful and nearly everywhere unpromising. In opposition to these accounts an occasional report comes in of a favorable character, but the general effect of the news has been to make most persons reduce their estimates to 3,000,000 bales or less.

The river is 13 feet 10 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the thirty-first ultimo:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	1,564
Lake.....	5
Mobile.....	8
Texas.....	20
Total.....	1,597

On Saturday the demand was more general and 1,100 bales changed hands at figures showing no quotable change but a general tendency in favor of factors. On Monday buyers came forward with continued spirit and took 1,350 bales at stiffer rates, showing an advance of ⅛c. in good ordinary and the better qualities. On Tuesday the demand was quite active but operations were again restricted by the high pretension of factors, many of whom asked still higher prices. The sales nevertheless summed up 950 bales, a considerable part of which was at prices indicating a further advance of ⅛c. Average good ordinary sold as high as 16¾c. and strict at 16⅞, 17 and 17¼c., the last for "Orleans." There was some inquiry for new crop, trifling lots of which sold on the basis of 19c. for middling.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 3,550 bales.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary.....	14⅜ to 15⅜
Good ordinary.....	16⅛ to 17⅛
Low middling.....	17⅝ to 18
Middling.....	18½ to 18¾

SUGAR.—The demand is confined to the city trade, and sales are being made only in a job way at 9 to 9¾c. for common and good common Louisiana, 11¾c. for fully fair, 12c. for prime, and 12½c. for choice.

MOLASSES.—What little is coming in now from plantations is very inferior in quality, and consists of remnants of cistern bottom, which are sold at 12 to 18c. ₱ gallon. Fair refinery reboiled is selling at 35 to 40c., prime 50c., choice 60c.; golden sirup 90c. to $1 ₱ gallon.

PORK.—There was an active demand on Friday, the first instant, and 1,000 barrels mess were sold, in several lots, at $13.87½ to $14 ₱ barrel. On Saturday, the second instant, there was no movement, and on Monday, the fourth instant, only a lot of 75 barrels mess was sold at $14. On Tuesday the market was dull, with mess offering at $14 ₱ barrel, and no sales. It is retailing at $14.25 to $14.50.

BACON has been in good demand, with a light stock on hand since our last review of the first instant. The sales of the first, second and fourth instant, (Friday, Saturday and Monday,) embraced 250 casks at 7⅜ to 7⅝c. for shoulders, 7¾c. for clear rib sides, 8¼c. for clear sides, and 50 tierces sugar-cured hams at 14⅞ to 15c. Choice sugar-cured hams are becoming scarce, and are quoted at 15 to 15½c. On Tuesday shoulders and sides were in light supply, and in request at 7½c. for shoulders, 7⅝ to 7¾c. for clear rib sides, and 8¾ to 8⅞c. for clear sides. Ordinary sugar-cured hams are dull at 10 to 14c.; but choice are scarce, and command 15 to 15½c.

DRY SALT MEAT is without any movement. Shoulders are quoted at 6c. ₱ lb.

LARD.—The market is dull, with a fair stock on hand. Tierces are quoted at 10 to 10¼c., kegs 11 to 11¼c. On Friday 45 tierces refined sold, in two lots, at 10⅛ to 10¼c., and on Monday 60 tierces do. at 10¼c. On Tuesday 50 tierces refined sold at 10⅛c., 75 kegs kettle rendered at 11c., and 100 kegs refined at 11¼c. ₱ lb.

BREAKFAST BACON is quoted at 9½ to 10c. ₱ lb.

MONETARY.—Gold, 112½ to 112¾.

American silver half dollars, 106¾ to 107, and Mexican dollars at 1¾ to 2 per cent. premium in gold.

The only sales of bonds reported are $2,500 Jefferson City eight per cents on Friday at 73; $1,000 City tens on Saturday at 92¾; $1,000 do. on Monday at 92½; and $3,000 on Tuesday at 92½, and $2,500 at 92¾.

The sales of City Appropriation Certificates include $1,700 on Friday at 94¾, and $3,000 at 94¼.

CLARKSVILLE, TENNESSEE.

THE FALL SESSION of this school opens SEPTEMBER 4, 1871. The Faculty is able and experienced, and the course of study thorough and practical.

The character of the school may be known by consulting the Bishops and leading men of the Southern Methodist Church.

It is located in an elevated, healthy country, and in the midst of a people of cultivation and refinement. It is the first high ground after passing the miasmatic regions of the South.

The school for years has had an average matriculation largely over two hundred pupils, many of whom were from various Southern States.

The expenses of an entire term, for English tuition, board, lights, fuel, furnished rooms, washing and servants' attention, will not exceed $125. Apply for catalogues.

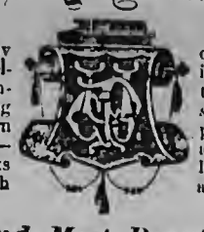
"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical,

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,



An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching thought and feeling of the Southern people—which should present the facts of history and science—should not be offensive to the people—which should present only are now issuing a complete series by the eminent Southern scholars of School and College Text-books and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. MAURY, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simplicity of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in the selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

FOREIGN.

London, Sept. 6.—An explosion occurred this morning in a coal mine near Wigan, in Lancashire. Some fifty persons were in the seam of the mine at the time of the catastrophe. It is feared all have been suffocated by the foul air. A party who were sent down to ascertain the condition of the men buried alive are still in the mine, and have, it is thought, perished. The neighborhood of the disaster is thronged with relatives and acqnaintances of the supposed victims, and scenes of the most heartrending description are taking place. Details of the harrowing event are awaited with great anxiety.

Eighteen thonsand emigrants left Mersey for America during August.

Constantinople, Sept. 6.—The Grand Vizier, Aalie Kibrosli Pacha, is dead.

Lonnon, Sept. 7.—The German Bishops, in secret conference at Fulda, omitted high mass. The omission is considered significant of earnest business.

The cholera is beginning to abate in the Baltic provinces of Prnssia. Only a few cases have occurred in Paris. The cases now under treatment are said to be different from Asiatic cholera. Anxiety throughout Germany is decreasing.

Versailles, Sept. 7.—There was an animated debate in the Assembly to-day npon the bill introduced by M. Ravinet, providing for the return of the Assembly to Paris. The reporter of the committee, M. Creranne, said the effect of the bill was decentralization, which he claimed would injure order and safety.

Louis Blanc and Leon Say warmly advocated the cause of Paris, and warned the Assembly that Paris, in ceasing to he capital of France, will become the capital of riot.

Salzburg, Sept. 7.—The Emperor of Austria, with a brilliant snite, received the Emperor of Germany and Prince Bismarck. The emperors engaged in conversation for fifteen minutes, after which they attended a grand banquet.

Glasgow, Sept. 7.—A large meeting was held here in snpport of the strike at Newcastle. Resolutions were adopted favoring the enactment of a law making nine hours a days work. The meeting passed off quietly and orderly.

Paris, Sept. 7.—It is intimated that the relations between the Italian minister and Napoleon render his position here untenable.

The Assembly have passed a bill imposing the burdens of the war upon the whole nation, and providing for the immediato distribntion of one hnndred millions of francs among the sufferers from the Commune.

Thiers and Bazaine had an hour's interview. Negotiations for the evacnation of France by the Germans are not going smoothly.

London, Sept. 8.—Trausmansdorf, who is a partisan of Dr. Dollinger, has been appointed German embassador to Rome. This appointment produces a deep feeling of discontent in the Vatican.

Rome, Sept. 9.—The Pope has sent a letter to M. Thiers congratnlating him upon the continuance of his term of office.

The Papal Journal of to-day, contains a severe criticism upon Napoleon.

The Alfieri Society threatens to burn the Vatican. Precantions have been taken against such a crime; but in case an attempt should be made, and anarchy should ensne, the person of the Pope will be protected by the flags of foreign ombassadors.

London, Sept. 11.—The press of Frankfort deny that negotiations for peace, between Germany and France, have been transferred to Versailles, and assert that Count Von Arnim and the other negotiators will soon return to Frankfort and resume their conference, now that certain questions of principle have been settled.

Pesth, Sept. 11.—The Emperor Francis Joseph has written a letter expressing disapproval of the attitude of the episcopacy on the promulgation of the decree of papal infallibility. Bishop Jeckelfalnsky has accordingly announced his submission to his sovereign's command.

Paris, Sept. 11.—The evacnation by the German troops of the four departments contiguous to Paris will be completed on the thirteenth. Negotiations have commenced in relation to the evacuation of the whole of France.

Valparaiso, Aug. 12.—The yield and exportation of coal this year from Chili has been extraordinary. A serious fire has occurred in this city. Several severe storms have occurred in the southern part of the country. Smallpox has broken out in the southern towns.

DOMESTIC.

San Francisco, Sept. 7.—California has gone Republican by from three thonsand to five thousand majority. The entire State ticket is elected.

The resnlt in San Francisco is in doubt as to mayor, bnt the prospect now is strong that Alvord, candidate of the tax-payers, is elected.

Charleston, S. C., Sept. 6.—Five fever deaths are reported for the past twenty-four honrs.

The cool weather is having an unfavorable effect upon the sick, bnt there are hardly any new cases.

Washington, Sept. 8.—The Statistical Bnreau has made an official statement of the tobacco orop for the year ending July 1, 1871, which shows: Prodnotion of smoking tobacco, 30,500,000 pounds; chewing tobacco and snnff, 64,500,000 ponnds; cigars over 1,250,000 ponnds. Importation of leaf tobacco over 8,250,000 ponnds; cigars, 789,926 pounds.

Over 7,000,000 barrels of fermented liquor were prodnced during the year. The opinion of the bnreau is, that the consumption of malt liqnors has increased and the consumption of whisky has decreased during the year.

Louisville, Sept. 8.—A collision occurred at eleven o'clock P. M., between two passenger trains on the Louisville and Nashville railroad, at Randolph Station, about eight miles from this city. One person was killed and two others fatally injured: their names are Mr. Bnchanan, of Ashville, North Carolina; Dr. James Thomas, of Rome, Georgia, and Mr. Griffith, of Nashville.

The train bound South ran into the coach next to the rear one of the train from Memphis and Nashville as it was going up on the side track.

Kingston, Jamaica, Sept. 9.—There was a hurricane on the twenty-first ultimo. At Ortignan Island every estate was damaged. The loss is immense. Five churches were prostrated on Tatala Island, eight hundred houses and forty estates were destroyed on St. Kitt's Island. The growing crops were destroyed on the Island of Saba.

Lexington, Sept. 11.—A terrible murder was committed last night at the residence of John Harper, owner of the race horse Longfellow, near Midway, Kentucky. Jake and Betsy Harper, brother and sister of John Harper, had their throats cut by some unknown person. The object of the murder is supposed to have been for the purpose of robbery. Some negroes, living within a few feet of Harper's residence, know nothing of the occurrence until this morning. No clue has been obtained to the perpetrators of the bloody deed.

Three of the negroes living on John Harper's place have been arrested as the murderers of Jake and Betsy Harper. Blood was found on their shirts, and the evidence against them is very strong. Other negroes employed on the place are missing, and it is believed they are implicated in the horrid affair. A party of citizens are in search of the missing negroes.

Memphis, Sept. 11.—A train on the Mississippi Central railroad ran off the track below Grenada, yesterday, upsetting the engine, killing the engineer and badly wounding the fireman.

Washington, Sept. 12.—The President has left Long Branch for a Western trip.

The Ku-Klux Committee reassembles to-morrow. It is proposed to send sub-committees to Mississippi and Tennessee.

It has transpired that Controller Connolly, of New York, on the thirteenth of August, transferred half a million of registered bonds to his son-in-law.

San Francisco, Sept. 12.—Booth's majority is 5,400.

Houghton is elected from the first district by 2,874 majority. Coughlin and Sargent, in the second and third districts, are elected by large majorities.

Augusta, Me., Sept. 12.—Indications here, derived from a careful footing of the returns received to noon to-day, are that Perham's majority will be nearly 11,000. The exact official majority for Perham last year was 8,238.

In the Senate, with the Lieutenant Governor's casting vote, the Republicans have one majority.

The House stands: 51 Republicans, 22 Democrats, 1 Independent.

Portland, Me., Sept. 12.—Election returns, as far as received, indicate a Republican majority of eleven thousand.

CARROLL PARISH, LOUISIANA.

Mr. Editor: Others have shown in this field, and we are now gathering the rich, ripe harvest. We held a two days' meeting at Hollywood church, near the Arkansas line, the latter part of last month, and the resnlt was eleven accessions to the church. The spirit of divine love was very considerably made manifest. Bro. Thomas Reanan (local preacher) was with me, and performed excellent dnty. He will probably offer himself to the Conference at its next session, to be received on trial, and, if admitted, will make a worthy member.

Our third Qnarterly Conference took place at Oak Grove, Carroll parish. By prearrangement, we commenced the meeting on the Wednesday preceding. The presiding elder, Bro. B. F. Alexander, was with us at the onset and till Sabbath afternoon, and did some remarkably fine preaching. On Sabbath morning, before the sermon, he made a money speech for the preacher in charge, and raised abont the amonnt by subscription and cash apportioned to that point. We all regretted his departnre, but the fight went on, and the result, as far as known, was nineteen additions and twenty-one conversions. The meeting lasted a week, and was one of the happiest I ever saw. Nothing occnrred, so far as I knew, to disturb the harmony; the world was respectful, the seekers anxious and the whole church in a blaze of glory.

We feel greatly indebted to the dear local brethren for invaluable services.

A spirit of revival is exhibiting itself all over my work. "The harvest" to be gathered "is indeed plenteous, bnt the laborers are few."

James E. Bradley.

Floyd, Carroll Parish, August 30, 1871.

Georgetown Circuit—Mississippi Conference.

Mr. Editor: I feel grateful to the good Master for the manifestation of His presence, as seen and felt at two appointments upon my circuit.

Pleasant Grove enjoys the treasure of two real class leaders, and a live Sunday school superintendent. At this place I held an eight-days' basket meeting, and at its close twelve souls stood up, professing to have found peace with God, ten joined the church, and the whole church membership testified to God's reviving presence. The Sunday school superintendent had the pleasure (on the Sabbath following the close of the meeting) to greet a happy band of young pilgrims, all in the church militant, and nearly every one converted. We left the altar crowded with weeping penitents at the close of the eighth day. "Bethesda" has, likewise, felt it was good to wait upon the Lord.

The meeting here lasted six days, resulting in conversions, three; additions, four; while many weeping ones we had to leave uncomforted. The church was greatly comforted and revived.

Several of the Lord's embassadors labored with me at both meetings, hence the results. May the Lord abundantly reward them. Bro. Linfield, of Crystal Springs station, bore the burden and heat of both meetings, greatly to the edification of ministers and people. May the Lord spare him long to the church! I find a great improvement in family religion on my works since spring. Morning and evening sacrifices give testimony of faith in Christ. I am sorry to say, though, some seem able to live without family prayer. I am striving to present to the Master "a church without spot or wrinkle," or any such thing.

Robt. B. Downer, P. C.

Nothing should be reckoned bad, or called an evil, if God sent it; whatever He sends is good.

THE BLACK HAWK CAMP MEETING

Mr. Editor: Did you ever hear of a camp meeting in town? We closed one in this village last night, at midnight, of great interest. Our venerable brother, H. Williamson, a year ago, demonstrated the practicability of camp meetings, by having one on Tallahatchie river. This year, our District Conference was a glorious camp meeting at Bethel, Attala county, Mississippi. The brethren in attendance caught the spirit, and began planning for camp meeting on several circuits. Black Hawk took the lead. The pastor, Bro. K. A. Jones, had the hearty co-operation of his church, who joyfully followed their beloved shephord. They all worked with a will, and put up an immense arbor for preaching. The vacant houses, shops and college buildings were occupied as tents by the people from abroad. Bro. Jones is a fine manager of a meeting. The meeting started well, progressed well, and ended well. The church all over the circuit is greatly revived, indeed, a fine revival at Sweetwater, the week before, prepared the way for this. Sixty joined the church. Seventy-five were converted. Thanks be to God.

W. P. Barton.

September 7, 1871.

Montgomery District.—The Conference of this District has just closed. The reports of pastors show that about three hundred have been added to the church on application. The following are the delegates elect: J. H. Harris, Rev. John G. Motley, E. T. Glenn and H. C. Armstrong. Alternates: George N. Gilmer, J. E. Cobb, H. M. Crowder and W. C. Hurt.

W. Shapard.

From Belton, Texas.—The Rev. W. R. D. Stockton, while writing on business under date of the sixth instant, communicates the gratifying intelligence that a protracted meeting is in progress in Belton, attended with encouraging results. Several had been converted, and there were many penitents.

St. Louis District Camp Meeting. The St. Louis Christian Advocate of the sixth instant says:

The St. Louis District, or Marvin Camp Meeting, was held last week, the services closing on Thursday night.

The regular attendance upon the meeting was not so large as we hoped it would be, but was quite as full, as could have been reasonably expected. The weather a part of the time was very unfavorable. It is estimated that at least four thousand persons attended the Sabbath service.

There were about forty conversions, and a large number of cold and backslidden professors were reclaimed and reinstated in the love of God. The revival in the church was not less demanded, nor will its results be less decisive of permanent good than the conversions of sinners.

Western Conference.—The Western Conference commenced its second session August 30, at Council Grove, Kansas. Bishop Marvin presides in the absence of Bishop Doggett, who is still detained at his home in Richmond, Virginia, by the illness of his daughter. A telegram, received from Bishop Doggett on the twenty-eighth ultimo, stated, we are informed, that he expected to attend the sessions of the Conferences in Missouri.

Since the above was put in type we have received a note from Bishop Marvin, who says:

"Conference is moving off finely. The brethren have had a good year almost everywhere. With a few exceptions they are in high spirits. There has been a very encouraging increase within the year. Bros. Stateler and Blackwell are here from Montana, demanding a dozen preachers. We will make two districts in Montana. Dr. McFerrin is with us and in a first rate mood.

"Rev. Joseph King was elected secretary, and A. N. Bailey assistant secretary."

We had requested the appointments to be sent by telegraph. We regret that they do not reach us before going to press.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

TRANSFERS WANTED.

The San Francisco Spectator complains that no transfers have as yet been sent to the Pacific coast. We can fully sympathize with the Spectator. Louisiana is needy, as much so, probably, as California. We give the most of the Spectator's article, hoping that those in the larger Conferences who may not have a mind to come to Louisiana, will go to the aid of our work on the Pacific:

Among the most mysterious, inscrutable and perplexing problems of our life has been, and is, the failure of the church to strengthen her forces on this coast. The languishing condition of the church, resulting mainly from the insufficient supply of competent men, has caused the ceaseless cry for help in every available way known to us, and to the only source from which help could come, extending as it has through a period of twenty years, presents an instance unparalleled in the history of the church. The most distressing feature of the case is the utter failure, even after these long, wearisome, wearing years, and the expenditure of so much earnest effort to secure the needed assistance or even to arrest and fix the attention of any considerable part of the church upon this matter of such deep solicitude here, and of such vital importance to the whole church.

Indeed, it seems utterly impossible for us to get the ear of our people beyond the mountains, so as to get this matter properly before them. When Bishop Keener was appointed to take charge of and visit this work, knowing his readiness of comprehension and efficiency of action, we felt hopeful of results, feeling assured that he would have the full benefit of the experience, counsel, influence and cordial co-operation of his associates of the Episcopal college, who have previously visited and are acquainted with this work. To give all the aid possible to this last effort to move what seemed to be immovable, and to bring the men to this coast who seem determined not to come, we wrote numerous private letters and have also presented our necessities as clearly and forcibly as we were able in a series of articles through the Spectator. But these, like the numberless previous efforts, running through the whole period of our existence on the coast, have resulted in nothing. Rev. Darney Ball, said to be an able, experienced and valuable man, was transferred in March last, by Bishop Pierce, from the Baltimore to the Los Angeles Conference, and will be out in time to attend the approaching session of that body. But of the five or six men, who had promised and were relied on to accompany Bishop Keener to this coast not one came. Furthermore, we are informed that when the determination of these men to transfer and move west was known, all possible influences were brought to bear by the leading men of the respective Conferences to which they belong to keep them where they are.

The circulation of the Spectator in the Conferences east of us is limited, yet it is sent to all of our Bishops, and in exchange to all the papers published in the interest of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. We had hoped through the assistance of these to get the subject of which we are writing before the church. But if one of the prominent organs of the church has copied, or even referred to one of our articles, or uttered a single word to call attention to the necessities of this work, it has escaped our notice. Perhaps they have more important interests to engage their attention. At any rate, so far we can judge, those to whom we have so long and imploringly looked, never appeared more deaf to our entreaties, or more indifferent to our necessities than now. With unfaltering faith in that God, to the interests of whose church our feeble but unflagging energies have been, are and shall be consecrated, we dismiss this subject and abide the result.

The famine in Persia is more terrible than previously reported. Twenty-seven thousand deaths have taken place in Ispahan alone, from starvation. The condition of the province of Mozanderan is still worse. The rice crop is a complete failure, and the cattle plague, smallpox, typhus fever and cholera prevail.

A sermon of four words on the vanity of earthly possessions—Shrouds have no pockets.

A SHIPWRECKED SOUL.

Did you ever hear the cry: "A man overboard?" In the silence and darkness of midnight it is a sound to thrill one's nerves, and echo in memory for a lifetime.

I was once upon a steamer when this terrible cry rang through the vessel, waking nearly every sleeper, and starting men and women out of their berths as from a horrible dream. There were the hoarse shouts of command; the sudden cessation of the huge engine's beating and throbbing; the rattling of chains, as hurrying hands lowered the boat; the splash of oars for a few seconds; and then all was still. How still! No one ventured even a whisper, as every ear was strained to catch some returning note of hope from the boat swallowed up in the darkness.

A half hour passed, and then one and another began to say sadly: "It is too late!" Yes, it was too late; and presently the voices of the men were heard, as they slowly neared the vessel, and then filed reluctantly over its side, answering in low, despondent tones to our anxious inquiries, that they could find no trace of the lost captain; for search during their absence had revealed that an officer of the army was the missing man.

There was one of the deck-hands, a fair-haired, blue-eyed young man, who had helped to lower the boat, and had stood leaning against the guards till its return, who seemed to feel as if the general sadness at this mournful event was a thing rather to be contemned, and who, in speaking of his companions' ineffectual search, used very flippant and profane language. "What's the use of whining?" said he, with an oath. "He'll find good society and shipwrecked men enough down there in the seaweed, I'll warrant."

"My son," said an old man who stood by, laying his hand on the youth's shoulder, "a drowned body may seem a slight thing to you; but how about a shipwrecked soul?"

The young man started, and his cheek flushed, as the awful solemnity of the question realized itself to him. His offensive indifference was evidently the result rather of thoughtlessness and subjection to bad influences than of a hardened conscience.

The group standing near delicately withdrew, and left the two by themselves. It was "a word in season." For the remainder of our voyage no oaths were heard from that young man's lips; and there was a subdued manner about him, so noticeable that we could not but be hopeful that he was learning to know the only "way" by which the voyager to eternity may escape the awful shipwreck of the soul.—Gospel Watchman.

Charles Scribner.—This eminent publisher and excellent man, we are pained to say, died in Lucerne, Switzerland, on the twenty-sixth of August, aged fifty years. His health has been very delicate for many years past, and he was on a foreign tour with his brother and brother-in-law, when he was attacked with fever and died on Saturday last. Mr. Scribner was born in this city, educated at Princeton, studied law, and, on account of his health, turned his attention to the publishing business, in which he attained and deserved the highest success. His taste was good; his conscience enlightened; his principles sound; his resources ample, and he gave his whole soul to the useful and honorable work in which he was engaged, issuing only such books as he believed would be for the benefit of the public. He was an humble, gentle Christian, a kind-hearted, pleasant man, and affectionate friend.—New York Observer.

Death of the Rev. Peter Taylor. Many hearts, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, will be pained at the announcement of the death of the Rev. Peter Taylor. This sad event took place, as we are informed by a note from the Rev. D. H. Marimon, of the Vanceburg circuit, at a quarter past four on the morning of the twenty-second of August. Bro. Marimon says that Bro. Taylor was born in Lancashire, England, February 28, 1809. He joined the Kentucky Conference in 1834. He died in the full assurance of hope. We trust that we shall receive a memoire of this excellent minister. His removal will be deeply deplored by his brethren of the two Conferences in Kentucky, by whom he was much beloved and esteemed as a holy man and a good preacher, of the true Wesleyan stamp.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1871.

HE LEADS US ON.

He leads us on,
By paths we did not know,
Upward He leads us, though our steps are slow.
Though oft we faint and falter on the way,
Though storms and darkness oft obscure the day;
Yet when the clouds are gone
We know He leads on.

He leads us on
Through the unquiet years;
Past all our dream-land, hopes, and doubts, and fears
He guides our steps. Through all the tangled maze
Of sin, of sorrow, and o'er clouded days
We know His will is done;
And still He leads us on.

And He at last,
After the weary strife—
After the restless fever we call life,
And the dreariness and aching pain—
The wayward struggles which have proved in vain.
After all our toils are past,
Will give us rest at last.

A PRAYER.

BY G. H. BARNES.

Father, when the amber morning
Lighteth up the sable awning
Night o'erspreads, with light adorning
Ocean, sky and land—
With its earliest pencilled ray
Help me, prayerfully, to say:
Father, guide my feet to-day;
Closely clasp my hand."

Saviour, when the dusk of Even
All the beams of Day has driven
Through the sunset ports of Heaven,
Down the distant West,
May I count each duty done,
Count another victory won?
Shield me till the morning sun;
Give me peaceful rest!"

SELF-CONSECRATION.

It is never to be forgotten that true religion puts its stamp on the individual man. Separating him from the mass, like gold from the ore, it impresses on his soul the image and superscription of God; he is brought into personal communion with Jehovah. From this communion life flows, in a full, gushing stream upon his heart and quickens the whole man. He has root in himself. On the diligent cultivation of this root the beauty and vigor of piety depend. "Keep your heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life." Each Christian must receive this stamp; in the mind of each the image of God be seen; on the forehead of each the mark of the Lamb be written, and in the heart of each the spring, fed from the fountain, well up to everlasting life. Hence arise obligations common to all Christians alike, obligations pertaining to their very condition and inseparable from it. Every one, who claims the Christian name or breathes the vow of discipleship, is bound by these obligations, and cannot break them off but by ceasing to be a Christian. There must be, in every case, a personal consecration. How direct is the command: "Follow thou me!" How marked the apostle's formula of discipleship: "Giving first yourselves unto the Lord." The whole man, body and spirit, must be laid on the altar; every power and faculty be consecrated to God. Every disciple, for himself, makes of himself the offering. The Jew of the olden time devoted to the altar the choicest of his herd and of his flock, but the Christian brings a nobler gift. "Here, Lord, I give myself away." How solemn the vow! "I am the Lord's; property, time, talents, influence, all are comprised." But why speak of these when I myself am no more my own, but devoted unreservedly to God. Consecrated by a solemn vow, I can never cease to be a hallowed offering. My own heart prompted the gift, my own lips breathed the vow, my own hand signed the deed, and I gave, "'twas all I had to give," myself unto God. "One shall say I am the Lord's, and another shall call himself by the name of Jacob, and another shall subscribe with his hand unto the Lord, and surname himself with the name of Israel." Not the church alone is sacred, but each individual Christian thus hallows himself. The church is a collection of hallowed vessels; on each separately is inscribed: "Holiness to the Lord." The church is a glorious temple, built up of individual Christians, each fitted and polished by the hand of the Great Builder. "What! know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, which is in you, which you have of God, and ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price; therefore, glorify God in your body and in your spirit, which are God's." How far we fall short of this perfect consecration, and how easily we excuse our imperfect service! Yet God asks no more than He gives To each He comes in the full affection of a heart, large enough to embrace them all, and but seeks a like measure in return. To each He comes the perfect Saviour, and from each but asks the undivided heart, as freely given to Him as He gave Himself to suffering and death to purchase our redemption. Have we so consecrated ourselves? Do we daily live as thus dedicated: Not our own, but God's? How full of significant meaning the question: Am I the Lord's; really, truly, unreservedly His, now and forever?

"SHE HATH DONE WHAT SHE COULD."

The grateful deed her hand has wrought,
Where'er the gospel is conveyed,
Like balmy gales with odors fraught,
In purest light shall be displayed.

Touch'd with like zeal for every woe,
Sisters in every clime shall rise
To emulate her deeds below,
And share her bliss above the skies.

To grief's sad house and couch of pain,
With hasty steps shall they repair;
From lowliest act shall ne'er refrain,
One pang to ease or sorrow bear.

The orphan's tears they wipe away,
Break proud oppression's cruel rod;
And thus religion pure display,
And undefiled they walk with God.

Lured by the Shepherd's gentle call,
His tender lambs to Him they guide,
That when the storms of life shall fall,
Within His fold they safe may hide.

Their hands shall pluck from life's fair tree
The balmy leaves for sin's deep wound,
And scatter with profusion free
Till health and life and joy abound.

To distant climes they haste away,
And heathens tell of Jesus' love;
The shades of death are changed to day,
Light beams on earth like that above.

Thus mercy's deeds have they performed.
And what they could they still shall do;
Their life with every grace adorned,
And heaven on them shall God bestow.

A CONTRIBUTOR.

Sectarianism and Church Unity.

MR. EDITOR: Allow me a brief space in your columns, that I may have an opportunity of making myself understood by the author of an article in your paper, who signed himself "Unitas." There would be little cause of controversy between us had he entirely understood me, or had he, in his verbal criticisms, been less hypercritical. That misconception of my meaning may be entirely owing to my own obscurity, and hence this effort to make amends. Unfortunately, human language is often ambiguous, and different writers use the same term with different significations; in such cases the author's evident meaning must be considered, which meaning is generally obvious on consulting the context.

In the article reviewed, the term "Sectarianism" was repeatedly used as opposed to "a corporate unity," and the writer's meaning should have been determined by that opposition.

There may be two distinct corporations without any difference of laws, doctrines, modes of government or worship. The Northern and Southern Methodist Churches are two such cases; so, also, two incorporated cities.

It is true that the following sentence was used: "The work of sectarianism is to destroy the sectarian spirit," an expression so obviously paradoxical that the writer had no fears of its being misunderstood. The meaning of which paradox is: That the division of the church will, eventually, result in the destruction of that intolerant spirit which has its highest forms under the shadow of a "sole universal church."

Witness, for instance, the history of the Roman Catholic Church. Was there any tolerance while she remained the sole church? If the different bodies of Christians could be again united, that history would repeat itself. A priestly hierarchy, proud, intolerant, oppressing conscience, would again place its foot upon the necks of emperors. The Inquisition would resume its awful work and locate its "Gehennas" in the public squares of our cities. Corruption would first creep in, then intolerance. If there was but one church, its power over conscience would become limitless; this power would tempt bad men into the ministry, in order to make use of that power to secure wealth and aggrandizement. They could not be assailed as in the case of a number of sects, watching each other, and clamoring against the very germ of corruption as it appears in a sister body.

But it seems to me of no use to go into a detailed argument to prove that this would be the result of a church united under one government. It must be obvious to one who has traced the history of the Roman Catholic Church, and who considers that human nature is the same now as in the times of the apostles, who founded the primitive church.

The history of Christianity, since its division into different bodies, has been the history of the progress of tolerance.

It is true that the word of God teaches tolerance, as "Unitas" says, but God makes use of instruments to spread his various truths. Sectarianism has been the instrument for destroying bigotry. It is furthermore true that there is, and always has been, a great deal of intolerance among the sects, but God, who makes the wrath of man to praise him, has evolved, out of the strife of sects, the steady growth of the great spirit of toleration.

Out of battles grow mutual respect, and upon mutual respect is founded friendship and tolerance.

The "village oracle," puffed up with a sense of superiority over rude and rural competitors, and swelling with the most arrogant conceitedness, comes back from an experience of metropolitan polemics humbled in his estimate of his own abilities, less assured of the certainty of his own opinions, and respecting the talents, sincerity and opinions of others. Under a united church controversy would not occur; not because men would not differ in their interpretations of Scripture, but because it would not be allowed. Under the sole dominion of Rome, the Waldenses differed from the church, and Rome, with her mace of iron, crushed the controversy. Under the blighting and materialistic idea that it is a sin to divide the corporate church, which is an error most mischievous in this day, the intolerant spirit grew and fattened.

Under that idea the awful conflicts of the Arian and Athanasian became necessary; the religious wars of France sprang out of it; while the flames that consumed Huss were lighted by it. Under that utter misconception of the nature of the Christian church, the famous decree of the council of Constance, that "no faith is to be kept with heretics," had its birth. And what shall we say more to prove that, as long as Christians believe it to be a sin to divide the "body" of Christ into "different folds, yet having the same shepherd;" as long as they say, "there can be but one true church corporate," so long will there be, while human nature remains depraved, religious strife and a bitter intolerance.

For instance, what churches are now most arrogantly intolerant? I answer: Those who believe it a great evil to divide the visible body of Christ—the Roman Catholic, the High Church Episcopalian, and the High Church Baptist.

What churches are most tolerant? The Methodist and Presbyterian, who believe that the visible church unity may be broken, and yet consist with the attainment of all the ends of the establishment of Christ's church.

"Unitas" thinks sectarianism did not cause these effects. I used the term cause in its often-accepted meaning of "occasioning."

He thinks God was charged with doing evil in the expression: "Sectarianism is the order of God." In the first place, it is denied that the division of the churches' corporality is an evil.

It could not be logically inferred from the expression used by C. C., without a distortion of the language from its obvious meaning, that God taught Arminianism to some and Calvanism to others. "God's ways are not as our ways;" "God makes the wrath of man to praise him."

He himself says: "I will bring a sword upon you," though often that sword which He sent was held in the hand of malice, robbery and red insurrection; and yet no one thinks that God charges himself with doing evil that good may come.

We believe that Providence separated the Lutheran from the Romish Church. We hold that Providence thrust out Methodism from the pale of the English Church. Did God do evil? Yet good has come.

"Unitas" sits in hypercritical judgment upon the use of the term "necessitate" in the expression: "Inherent and educational differences in human minds necessitate different beliefs," etc. It is obvious that an absolute necessity was not intended. We, Arminians, believe that human crimes are not absolutely necessary, and yet who would object to such an expression as the following: "As long as human depravity and ignorance remain as now, so long will innumerable crimes necessarily follow."

But, Mr. Editor, I will not take up your space with any more definitions. Twenty-seven years ago, under Providence, the Methodist Episcopal Church was divided into two branches. We believe that immense good has followed that separation in the South. It is true, that much rancorous and jealous feeling has incidentally attended the separation, but that the good has vastly overbalanced the evil. We think this separation is the "order of God," without charging Him with creating the puritanic and fanatical spirit of persecution in the hearts of our Northern brethren, which directly caused it.

They now and then reach forth their hands through the pale of separation and say: "Come back." Our answer has been: "Cui bono." We are no superstitious adherents to the old effete, intolerance breeding, Romish idea, that it is a sin to be separated. We are doing our work. Go and do yours. Peace be with you. Pray, in which of these bodies is the most intolerance? Which one wishes to "disintegrate" the other? Which one has shown the most brotherly love and forbearance, and which has the greatest zeal to occupy vacant churches?

Finally, Mr. Editor, we repeat: Sectarianism has accomplished, as an instrument in God's hands, a glorious work. The death-knell of High churchism, that awfully distorted conception of the true nature of Christ's church, has been sounded.

The old ship of Zion, which has carried so many over the sea of life in safety, without regard to the spiritual condition of its occupants, by the sheer strength of its corporate timbers, is now at Rome—a rotting hulk. She was badly damaged in the last war; before many years it will not be possible to keep her afloat.

Allow me to call the attention of "Unitas" to the fact that the word "co-operate," in the original article, was a misprint. It should have been "corporate."

Allow me, also, to thank him for his critical manipulations, as they have compelled me to an unusually diligent consultation of Webster.

Few Thoughts on the Duty of the Church to Educate Young Men for the Ministry.

BY REV. JULIUS T. CURTISS.

NUMBER ONE.

MR. EDITOR: It is not my purpose to advocate the idea of making the ministry a profession, and thereby bidding for young adventurers into this great and responsible enterprise by holding out to them the inducement of an education. No, not by any means. But I do propose to advocate the idea that, under certain conditions, it is the imperative duty of the church to educate young men for the ministry. That this duty is imperative, when properly considered, I am persuaded none will attempt to deny. It is, to my mind, a question that will not admit of debate. And it does seem to me that the great and incalculable importance to the future success and prosperity of the church, of an educated ministry, is very apparent. It has always occurred to me that, under our peculiar itinerant system of spreading Scriptural holiness and truth over the land, it was much more necessary and important that our ministry should be educated, than that of any other branch of the Christian church. All other churches are congregational, they have a settled pastorate, and, as they are supplied with the gospel by a very different system from that of ours, if they have an uneducated man among them, he must look out for himself, and find a congenial element in which to labor. But, according to the true spirit and intention of our general, distributing, itinerant system, it is quite different. But practically it is nearly so with us. It is very clear that our preachers are not distributed according to the spirit and intention of our great and grand itinerant system. Why are not some of our uneducated preachers appointed to our city stations? They are good men and useful. Simply from a want of adaptation to these important positions. They are uneducated men; that is the great trouble. And the appointing power is compelled to supply the entire work, according to these circumstances and difficulties. And who will say that our itinerant system sanctions or authorizes any such thing?

And, therefore, our grand distributing, itinerant machinery has always been running against a heavy friction; which has very materially disturbed its movements and that progress and rapid advancement, which it might otherwise have made. It does seem very clear to my mind that we, as a church, do not see and understand the situation as it really is. I am fully satisfied that, with all the boasted intelligence and education of the ministry of some of our sister churches, we have a larger number, by far, of thoroughly educated ministers in our church than can be found in any other; and we will throw in our uneducated men. But that does not relieve the difficulty at all. Our educated men are not distributed out enough. In other words, every minister should be an educated man. I am tired of hearing it said: "Your ministry are not educated like ours." We must take this reproach away by instituting a higher standard of ministerial education. Our church has suffered greatly for the want of it.

We have heard it remarked, and seen it stated, that we must have men adapted for all kinds of work; we must have men to suit all classes of the work. No one will attempt to controvert that idea as it reads; but no error is more fatal than that contained in the spirit of the remark, and nothing is more fatal to that diffusive itinerant system in our church. There is no man, I am persuaded, so blind to the truth, that would say that an uneducated man can do better, more good among an uneducated people even, than an educated man.

We are then informed, with quite a show of triumph, that a great number of our ablest and most useful men were unlettered, uneducated men, and that they attained to great distinction and renown in the church; and that they were "diffused" abroad, too; filled any and every important station and position in the church. Well, so they did. But were the people as well educated then as they are now? Was there as great a demand for an educated ministry then as now? But how long, will you tell me, was it before they gained their great distinction and renown? How long did it take them, studying and toiling, in the far background, and being "diffused abroad" upon large, poor circuits and missions, before they were able to take rank with the foremost and the best, and claim these positions and honors? And would you say that a man of them could not have succeeded almost infinitely better and sooner than he did, if he had had the advantages of an early, thorough education? Then here comes shooting up a hissing, sputtering little sky-rocket, and, exploding, leave the startling fact on record that our Lord chose ignorant, unlettered men, poor and mean, for his apostles, to preach and disseminate his gospel. Now, that these apostles were poor—were not of the aristocracy, of the high and the noble, but were of humble birth—I will not stop here to question. But I do not think that any man is authorized to say, from the Scriptures, that they were illiterate, unlettered men at all. I am satisfied that Matthew knew something about books. He was a custom-house officer. Luke was an educated physician. But it is absolute folly to pursue such puny, silly arguments against an educated ministry further.

Some churches have always made the ministry a profession, and they educate men for it, as they do for the law, medicine or any other calling—making an education a necessary and essential prerequisite to a call to the ministry; while others have recently waked up, from the long slumber of indifference, to see the great importance of an educated ministry. They are now trying to meet the stern demands of the times, and they are doing their utmost to place their ministry ahead of all others in intelligence and education. And you will find it to be true that all churches, who reduce this high and holy calling down to the level of the other professions, seek to impress the people with the intellectual, and not the spiritual qualifications of their ministry. And some of them seek to impress the people, everywhere, with the idea by their large supply of self-esteem and "pushability," with the addition of newspaper puffs and laudation societies, that wisdom and intelligence will die with them; and they succeed far beyond what many of us think or believe. Whether they are better educated or not they succeed largely in making the people believe they are, and it amounts to about the same, with them, as if it were so.

Now we must avoid that rock. We must steer clear of that fatal error of degrading the ministry, by making it a profession and opening the door for the offering of strange fire upon the altar. That our ministry should be educated, none will or can deny. But the trouble is, how are we to do it? Shall we take up young men indiscriminately and educate them for the ministry, in hoping that they may sometime become ministers? That will never do at all. Here is an educational aid association, with a fund contributed by the church, for the purpose of educating such young men as are called to preach, or that say that they are. Now do you propose to aid a young man when he comes forward and simply says: "I am called to preach, and I want you to help me?" If so, there is very great danger of misapplying that fund. Now, how and upon whom do you propose to bestow your aid? This is a very important question for you to consider. The object of all this interest on the subject of ministerial education is to raise the standard of education to meet the demands of the times, and not to open a chance for rivalry between the ministry and the law or medicine. If such should be the case, there are many young men who desire and pine for an education, who would be induced, for the sake of it, to impose upon the church, and there would be no remedy.

PROF. HUXLEY, the retiring president of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, has been succeeded by Sir William Thomson, who, on taking the chair, delivered an address of an elaborate type, telling what science had done during the year, and concluding thus:

"I feel profoundly convinced that the argument of design has been greatly too much lost sight of in recent zoological speculations. Reaction against the frivolities of teleology, such as are to be found, not rarely, in the notes of the learned commentators on Paley's Natural Theology, has, I believe, had a temporary effect in turning attention from the solid and irrefragable argument so well put forward in that excellent old book. But overpoweringly strong proofs of intelligent and benevolent design lie all around us, and if ever perplexities, whether metaphysical or scientific, turn us away from them for a time, they come back upon us with irresistible force, showing to us, through nature, the influence of a free will, and teaching us that all living beings depend on one ever-acting Creator and Ruler.

FOURSCORE.

Her hair is white and her eyes are dim,
But her life is like a quiet hymn,
Chanted low at the close of day,
When the light is fading away.
And she sits in her corner, knitting, knitting,
While her busy thoughts are flitting, flitting
Over the fourscore years that are fled,
Recalling the distant and the dead,
The faded hopes and the vanished joys,
Broken and lost like her childhood's toys,
Yet woven into a life's varied maze
With many a shining thread;
And with memory's retrovorted gaze
Over the years that have sped their flight,
She sees that the dark on life's tapestried wall
Was as needful as the light.
As she sits in her corner knitting, knitting
The gray and delicate links that fall
From her shining needles, each one fitting
Into a perfect whole,
She thinks how from deeds as noiseless and small
Groweth the wonderful wed of life,
And the stature of the soul.
The children's children throng around her,
Fair faces and locks of gold;
For many a chord of love has bound her
To the new as well as the old.
A peaceful present, a busy past,
Rich with the blessing of God,
Their lights and shadows together cast
Over the long, long pathway trod;
Then opens the boundless future before her,
With its "trembling hope" of bliss,
The higher life that shall soon restore her
The loved and lost of this:
And the holy light of the land immortal
Beams on that time-worn face,
As her steps draw near to the heavenly portal,
The goal of the earthly race.

THE PRIEST AND THE BOY.

A father asked the priest his son to bless,
Who forthwith told him he must first confess.
"Well," quoth the boy, "suppose, sir, I am willing,
What is your charge?" "To you, 'tis but a shilling."
"Must all men pay, and all men make confession?"
"Yes, every man of Catholic profession."
"And who do you confess to?" "Why, the Dean."
"And does he charge you?" "Yes, a whole thirteen."
"And do the Deans confess?" "Yes, boy, they do Confess to Bishops, and pay smartly too."
"Do Bishops, sir, confess?" If so, to whom?"
"Why, they confess, and pay the Church of Rome?"
"Well," said the boy, "all this is mighty odd.
And does the Pope confess?" "O, yes, to God."
"And does God charge the Pope?" "No," quoth the priest,
"God charges nothing." "O, then, God is best.
God is able to forgive, and always willing;
To him I will confess, and save my shilling."

PERVERSENESS.

BY O. J. VAUGHAN.

"And ran greedily after the error of Balaam for reward."—Jude 11.

We have grasped the character, we have almost drawn the moral, when we have thus apprehended the meaning of the one word "error." It is the synonym of "perverseness." It is the opposite of rectitude. It is the opposite of that singleness, simplicity, unity of view and aim, which God makes the characteristic of saintliness, the condition of progress, of attainment, of grace. "I came out to withstand thee, because thy way is perverse before me." "The light of the body is the eye; if therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light; but if thine eye be evil, thy whole body also shall be full of darkness." And "if the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness"—the darkness of duplicity, of self-deception, of hypocrisy, of the life-lie!

My brethren, in vain were the history of Balaam written in the Bible, read year by year in the churches, if we leave him as a remote, obsolete, unreal, half-imaginary man—if we take no pains to set him "evidently" before our mind's eye, alike in the brighter and in the darker traits of his character and of his life. He too, unwilling we may be to think it, was a man of like passions as we are; he, too, had his innocent childhood, his developing youth, his gradually shaping and forming self, his opportunities as well as his trials, his efforts after good as well as his lapses and relapses into evil; he, too, is—let the thought have its solemn import and weight—was, and therefore is, and therefore shall be; like us, being born, he is still looking for judgment!

Mark then in him, as in a real person, these special points of interest. Place the better first.

Balaam had a religion. Not of Israel, he knew and he worshiped Israel's God. Like Melchizedek, like Job, like many an unrecorded nameless man (doubtless) scattered here and there on God's earth, Balaam had received from tradition, or had elaborated for himself, by such arguments as St. Paul deemed sufficient, that belief in "the Eternal Power and Godhead" which marked him off, absolutely, from the world of polytheists and idolaters. To have kept his faith pure, in a God-multiplying, God-corrupting age, was something.

It was more, to be a worshiper of the God thus known. There are men among us, in a Christian age, who have a religion indeed, but no worship. Strange, frightful, condemning inconsistency! Not only to "hold the truth in unrighteousness"—over-masteriug passion, involuntary infirmity, might account for that—but to believe in a God, and not to worship—not even to seek, not even (like lost spirits) to tremble before him—who shall excuse this? Balaam believed, and therefore worshiped.

You may say, it was an insincere worship. You may say, it is a strange plea for worship to propose to us Balaam's. I cannot agree with you. Something did come of Balaam's worship. Balaam would have been a more wicked man still, if he had not diligently worshiped.

Look at the history. We are apt to read the Scripture narratives as though the one only question were—was the person in question, on the whole, righteous or wicked? This is not our business. Judgment is God's. We have to weigh actions, and to estimate consequences, one by one. We hold no such doctrine—we find no encouragement for it in the Bible—as that of apotheosis and apodiabolosis—one man all good, another man all evil; and, therefore, we say even of Balaam, we say it of Pilate, we would say it, if we could, if Scripture gave us any opening for it—perhaps Scripture does give us just one opening for it—even of Judas: "This was right and that was wicked," leaving it to God to pronounce sentence upon the soul and upon the man.

Balaam had an aspiration. He was not satisfied to be as the wicked. He would at least end well. "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his!" The future world was before him—its judgment first, then its eternity—and it was something, it was more than all have, so much as to wish for that heaven "wherein dwelleth righteousness."

Stranger still, Balaam had an inspiration. God dealt with him. God communicated to him of his secrets. "Balaam the son of Beor hath said, and the man whose eyes are open hath said; he hath said, which heard the words of God and knew the knowledge of the most high; which saw the vision of the Almighty, falling into a trance, but having his eyes open—

"I shall see him, but not now—
I shall behold him, but not nigh—
"there shall come a star out of Jacob, and a scepter shall rise out of Israel—
"Alas! who shall live
When God doeth this?"

Balaam had a conscience. His conduct, in each particular, was regarded in a conscientious light. A king's messenger came for him; he must take counsel with God. The answer is unfavorable; God refuses; depart! They return, with larger offers, with more urgent entreaties; even then—though it was wrong to ask leave—he will not go without leave; he persuades himself that he has it; imagining it to be revoked, he will go back; again the voice seems to say, Go with the men; he goes, and there, before disappointed king and sullen or threatening nobles, he bears, again and again, a true and manful testimony, pronounces God's benediction upon a foe whom he was summoned to curse, and returns to his far home without the reward; the more his heart was set upon it, the stronger surely the force of that conscience which has triumphed in him to spurn it!

I will dare to say a thing which I doubt not has been in your hearts before I utter it; namely, that a superficial reader, a shallow thinker, or a half-believer, is inclined to justify Balaam, thus far, at the expense of Balaam's God; to say, If God said, "Go with the men," how could he afterward be angry because he went? if the prophet did wrong in going, had not God the Lord (the words, strange as they sound, are in substance in Scripture) first "deceived the prophet?"

We are brought thus into the heart of a great mystery, which nevertheless the Bible bids us face bravely if we cannot solve.

Those words of the prophet Ezekiel, concerning him who comes to God with an idol in his heart, and whom God answers accordingly, enunciate a principle of the divine procedure. He who applies to God for license to do wrong—he who prays to God, not with a frank but with a false heart—he who first resolves, and then consults—he who brings to his prayer for God's direction a mind made up to disregard it—he who, not satisfied with one plain answer, must come again and yet again to the throne of grace, as though to change the purpose of the unchangeable, and constrain his sanction for a self-indulgence already forbidden—to such an inquirer God will vouchsafe no further light; rather will he visit with a judicial delusion the soul which sought, which implored, which compelled it; the "word behind thee, saying, This is the way, walk thou in it," shall become a lying word to the man who will have it so; God himself shall resent (with reverence be it spoken) the insolence which insists upon his permitting the prohibited; at last he himself shall say, or seem to say, "Go with the men," and yet his anger shall be kindled because the man went.

We may be shocked, we may be staggered, we may be irritated by the enunciation of the principle; yet is it not scriptural, is it not experimental, is it not true, is it not just? Would you dare to treat thus any human superior? Would you dare to come and come again to a father, to a master, to a sovereign, for a second answer which shall contradict the first? Would it be good for you that you should be suffered thus to presume? Brother! would it be good for you to be suffered thus to use the mercy-seat of the All-Holy? May there not be, in the deepest inmost hiding-place of the divine counsels, even a purpose of compassion in this mysterious rule: "He that setteth before his face the stumbling-block of his iniquity, and so cometh to inquire, I the Lord will answer him by myself, and let him go his own way, his desire granted, yet a leanness withal in his soul?"

It was thus with Balaam. It was thus with the disobedient prophet, when he allowed the voice of a man to reverse the clear direction received in the ear of his soul from his God. It was thus with King Ahab, when he would have "a prophet of the Lord besides" to get an oracle of confirmation for the lying spirit in his flatterers. "Thou shalt persuade him, and prevail also; go forth and do so"—was the sentence, upon an obstinate sinner, of a judicial delusion in the name of the Lord. It shall be thus in the last awful catastrophe of the willful self-deceivers—they have listened all their life long to the lying spirit; at last "God shall send them strong delusion"—it is the very word of the text, "an energy of errors"—"that they shall believe the lie."

The subject has been one of perpetual self-application. It suffered us not to wait for a more formal distribution. Gather up, I pray you, in conclusion, these brief lessons.

Rest not in religion. Balaam was religious. You see what came of it. Religion means restraint. Balaam put a restraint upon himself. First he will not go, because God refuses leave. Then he will not go, unless he can get leave. Then, when he goes, he will only speak the right word. He keeps to it. He does speak only the right word. He loses all by his religion. He returns a disappointed man; but he has done his duty. He was religious, and he has religiously acted. Yet this same religion, which makes him punctilious as to the letter, has no word for him concerning the spirit. He does not curse, but he teaches Balak now to seduce. Better, ten thousand times, that he had cursed, than that he had tempted! But that religion which stopped the malediction suffered the seduction.

What was wanting? Why was it that the religious man was so wicked—that he threw that frightful stumbling-block before Israel—that he died at last among God's enemies, slain, with the five kings of Midian, as the worst, the deadliest foe of God's people—that his name is put between the names of Cain and of Korah, and handed down to all time loaded with a church's execrations? Why? Because religion is not what God asks. Religion may tie the hands, may fetter the steps, may gag the mouth; religion does keep many men decent, respectable, conscientious, honored in their generation; but religion never touches the heart, never brings the self will into harmony with the will of God, never cleans the breast, and clears the soul, and cleanses the shrine, for a noble, a confiding, a self-forgetting communion with the unseen; gives no sufficient motive, inspires no available strength, for difficult decisions, for ambiguous turnings, for the self-crucifixions involved in the cross, for the transformation which qualifies for heaven. For these things—and at any moment of your life these things may be suddenly required of you—for these things, nothing negative will avail you—no mere check, no mere chain, no mere forgoing or refusing; there must be a positive thing for these emergencies; that which Balaam lacked, and therefore came twice for leave; that which Balaam lacked, and therefore went with the princes, by God's permission, yet under God's anger. There must be a positive thing, which religion is not; and that positive thing, being interpreted, is the love of God.

Finally, "keep yourselves from idols." Oh, it is not easy. So many things look beautiful in God's world—are beautiful—let none gainsay it. Pretend not, for it is unreal, that the neglect of men, that the contempt of men, that the hatred of men, is intrinsically better than the honor, the admiration, the confidence, the love. Pretend not to like poverty better than riches, or sickness than health, or solitude than society, or isolation of spirit than the love of the lovely. Pretend not to see nothing attractive, nothing admirable, I had almost said nothing divine, in that character which realizes your ideal, in that soul which seems to make God himself so true to you and so lovely. It is not to a condition of unlovingness that God calls you. Not such was Christ's. God himself is love. Only this; keep the throne for your God. Let nothing, let no one, sit where he has set his own seat, in the shrine of that soul which is from him and for him. Be willing to wait for your consolation. Suffer earth and time to dress themselves for you in sober, somber, sad apparel. "To exalt duty, and sacrifice inclination"—I quote another's words—"to be neither deterred by pain, nor tempted by pleasure; to yield to no pity for one's own hardships and woes; to forbear from fantasies concerning the unequal portions of happiness and misery dealt out in life; to find what there is to do, and forthwith to do it heartily"—such be it to live! And then, in prospect, or, at last, in experience—then, to die shall be gain!

A BARRIER TO FRATERNITY.

Bishop James in a recent address to the "Lay Electoral Conference" of Colorado, said that he "anticipated the time when there will be but one Methodist Church in the United States."

The good Bishop is looking a long time ahead, we opine. Never will Southern Methodists consent to union with those of the North, so long as they maintain among us those reckless slanderers, who disgrace "official organs" published in the South, by reproducing as truth what the writers are obliged to know is false. Is a man at liberty to publish for the truth what he knows is so exaggerated and misinterpreted (even where there may be shadow of probability,) as to turn the truth itself into a lie?

The cunning with which these misrepresentations are got out is noteworthy. An editor will refuge in the statement of "persons who have been in Washington." Who knows but that they were some of the subornsd witnesses who had testified there to what every Southern man knows to be generally false—who, therefore, are no more trustworthy than the credulous and discreditable retail slanderer, of whose dirty work the following is a specimen:

"We learn directly from persons who have been in Washington, and who are prepared to speak in the case, that the Ku-Klux oaths, signs, grips, passwords, disguises for men and horses, clubs with which victims have been beaten and killed, garments worn by persons when shot, etc., have accumulated in the hands of the committee almost without measure, and that, though many of the Republican papers of the South have failed to give these facts to the people, they are established beyond all cavil and the possibility of the future to deny or gainsay. The Methodist Episcopal Church has suffered, both among the white people and the colored, much more than we have ever claimed in these columns, while the African and Zion churches have shared with us terribly in these persecutions. We pen these lines merely to call attention to an article in another column from the New National Era, Washington, District of Columbia, which briefly indicates the results of the investigation at Washington, and to say that we fully believe that article to be strictly truthful, and that the half has not been told."

And this is part of the story quoted made up by a partisan political sheet, to secure the success of the Republican party:

"The 'school teachers' and 'preachers of the Methodist Church North,' seem to be the especial abhorrence of these (Ku-Klux) assassins; and hundreds of school houses and Methodist churches have been given to the flames; and Christendom will stand aghast when it is made known the scores of school teachers and Methodist preachers, who, by this agency, within these three years, have been whipped, shot, hung, and, in some instances, it is believed, burned at the stake. * * *

"A single instance of these thousand outrages perpetrated upon an American citizen on foreign soil, would be thought ample cause for war; and our entire navy would hasten to enforce the nation's indignation. And such abuse as is daily meted out to these humble Methodist preachers, if offered one of our missionaries on heathen ground, would arouse the whole American church, until every wind was laden with demands for 'protection.' * * *

"Christian men of our country! Humane men! All decent men, we appeal to you! Is any party or purpose worthy of life in this land which seeks supremacy through such hell-born measures?"—Southern Christian Advocate.

On Rowland Hill's idea of not letting Satan monopolize all the good tunes, a down-East Sunday school superintendent has introduced a new sacred song, the refrain of which reads: "Take, now, this Bible—this Bible—this Bible; Take now this Bible—the Bible of your sire."

Prayer the Key of Day.—Prayer is the key of the day and the lock of the night. And we should every day begin and end, bid ourselves good-morrow and good-night with prayer. This will make our labor prosperous and our rest sweet.

Delinquent members are those upon whom if the church depended, there would be no church.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

There is a deep interest among the Jews in Germany in the investigation of the claims of Christianity, and they are attending in crowds the preaching of the gospel in the Christian churches.

The Prussian government has resolved shortly to propose the final removal of all legal disqualifications of the Jews, and to grant new rights to the corporations combining for worship in synagogues.

The most extensive Hebrew library in the world, collected in Amsterdam, Holland, has been purchased by the congregation of the Jewish temple on Fifth avenue, New York, for the Jewish Seminary.

One of the innovations in some of the English High churches is the employment of brass bands during the celebration of the Holy Communion. This practice is now said to be adopted at St. Alban's, Holborn, and at St. Augustine's, Kilburn.

Sunday-School Statistics.—It is estimated that the whole number of scholars in the Sunday schools of Great Britain and Ireland is over 3,600,000, and of teachers not far from 350,000; and that there are in the United States 4,000,000 scholars and 400,000 teachers in our Sunday schools.

Mr. E. Remington, of Ilion, New York, who presented the Methodist Episcopal Church with the St. Charles Hotel property, in Syracuse, for publishing and educational purposes, recently doubled his previous endowment subscription of $25,000, and gave his check for the $50,000, making $170,000 given in two or three weeks.

The Roman Catholics of Ireland now scarcely exceed four millions, while the Episcopalians and the Presbyterians reckon a million and a quarter of adherents. Other denominations are quite insignificant. There are but forty-one thousand Methodists of all sorts, and only about four thousand five hundred Independents, with a like number of Baptists, in all Ireland.

It is reported that according to the last report of the Holy Synod at St. Petersburg, a special commission is to be formed "in order to examine the proposals made by certain members of the English Church to be admitted into the orthodox religion." It is stated that one hundred and twenty-two Englishmen have expressed a desire to enter the Russian Church.

The old Roman Catholic church of St. Basil, at Seville, Spain, has been opened for Protestant evangelical worship. The church buildings comprise a good day school, and a Sunday school is in full operation. In Seville there are now five congregations of Spanish Protestants, with Spanish evangelical preachers, and upward of seven hundred Sunday scholars.

The Athenæum states that Mr. Walter Besant and Mr. E. H. Palmer are engaged upon a joint work on the History of Jerusalem, from the days of Herod to modern times. It will contain, among other things, the story of the short-lived Christian kingdom, and—which will be new to most readers—the life of Saladin, as told by the Arab chroniclers. The book will appear in October.

Colonel Conwell, who told the story of the gamblers in China who were led to give up their games by the repetition of Phœbe Cary's hymn, "One sweetly solemn thought," writes to the Tribune that the reformation of these men has been permanent; that the old man spoken of in the anecdote has returned to California and has become a hard-working Christian, while "Harry" has renounced gambling and all its attendant vices.

The Wesleyan Missionary Society of London is making special efforts to raise funds to build churches at Rome and Naples. A site has been procured in Naples, on which it is proposed to erect a suitable building at the expense of £5,000. An equal sum is asked for, to erect a chapel at Rome, to replace the present lowly hired rooms. Disused churches or convent chapels have been rented or purchased in Padua, Parma, Vicenza and Mezzano.

The minutes of the forty-first General Assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, have just been published. As far as can be ascertained, the number of ministers is 1,116; licentiates, 198; candidates, 214; congregations, 1,863; elders, 6,198; deacons, 1,523; added by experience and letter, 7,850; dismissed by letter, 1,338; suspended, 212; total in communion, 96,335; churches organized, 78; houses of worship erected, 40; number of Sabbath schools, 518; average number of teachers, 3,502; average number of scholars, 26,466; value of libraries, $12,442.

The Honolulu Friend, of the first instant, has an account of the sailing of the Morning Star for Micronesia, having as passengers, Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Snow, Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Bingham, Rev. A. A. Sturges, Mrs. Doane, and two Hawaiian missionaries with their wives. In the farewell religious services, Rev. Dr. Stone, of San Francisco, took part, offering a prayer in English. Prayer in Hawaiian was offered by Rev. B. G. Parker. It is added that "recent intelligence from the Gilbert Islands is most cheering. The King of Apiang has died, but his son has come out firm on the side of the gospel. Multitudes are learning to read, and the general interests of the mission are most encouraging."

The papal party in France continue to promise the Pope an intervention in his favor, and are doing their best to bring M. Thiers to adopt their policy. In Austria also intrigues are being carried on through some of the women of the royal family to thwart the action of Count Beust and force the Emperor to adopt reactionary measures. A few days ago Cardinal Antonelli received Count Kalinsky, the Austrian embassador; and, in conversation, he said to him he could not comprehend how Austria accredited an embassador to the Pope and another to the King of Italy, in the same city. The Austrian replied: "Your eminence, how can she do otherwise, when that city is the capital both of the King of Italy and the Pope?"

Protestants in the National Assembly.—The Paris correspondent of the Daily Review says: The last elections showed that this present time is wonderfully favorable for evangelizing France. I hear that there are now in the House sixty Protestants; ten of them are pious, Christian men of eminence, who may all exert a wide influence. Four elders of the Reformed Church of Paris are members of the House. Two other members belong to the Church Taitbout. At Paris itself, out of twenty-one members to be elected, five were Protestants. The second, named M. Andre, is a pious banker, who presides over Christian meetings every Sunday. M. de Pressense was elected the sixth, whilst a distinguished bishop, Mgr. Treppel, and a Rationalistic pastor, M. Coquerel, who were both candidates, were defeated.

Da. Talmage, missionary of the Reformed Church of America, at Amoy, China, reports, in the Sower and Gospel Field, six students in their theological seminary. He says the English Presbyterian mission in that city has also a theological school, and that, in addition to the regular instruction in the Chinese language and literature given by the Chinese teachers, and the more informal instruction given by the missionaries in each of the halls, more formal lectures are delivered in both institutions by the missionaries of both missions, at which all the students attend; also such of the helpers as are able. He reports schools for girls, parochial schools in connection with two of their churches, and women's meetings. These meetings, though silent in their influence, doubtless are already beneficial to the character of the church.

The missionaries learn to use a strange language in reading, writing and talking much sooner than they venture on it in public prayer. They sometimes need special encouragement to make this last hazardous undertaking. It seems not only difficult, but so peculiar, that it is hard for them to realize that it is prayer, or can be acceptable Jehovah. It seems more like saying a lesson, and almost a mockery, as they try to pick up the unfamiliar words necessary to express their ideas. One missionary said, that at first it seemed to him almost as though he ought to ask forgiveness in English after he had stammered through his first prayer in Arabic. And yet the native converts long to have the new missionaries acquire the ability to pray in their languages as soon as possible. They sometimes urge and encourage them to undertake the service. Sometimes they may be heard also offering up their petitions for their new missionaries, that God would help them and teach them how to pray in their languages. Missionaries have been much moved at times by overhearing such supplications, and have the sooner made the effort to pray publicly in a strange tongue, that they might gratify this strong desire of the native believers.—Independent.

The Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions is taking vigorous measures to spread a pure gospel in Roman Catholic countries and communities. On the continent of Europe it operates through the local evangelical societies, employing native preachers and colporteurs who are familiar with the language of the country. This is the moment when those societies ought to be largely aided from this country; this is the seed time; the ground is broken up; and those societies are trying to improve the opportunity to give the word of life to the whole population. The Presbyterian Board sends all money raised for this purpose directly to the field and work, not a dollar being lost by agency or commission. We earnestly ask that the churches will take up collections and individuals forward their donations for this immediately important cause.—Observer.

THE PROBLEM OF CORRUPTION.

We need not go beyond our Bibles to find records of depravity which equal anything known in these times. The corruption prevailing in the days of Malachi was probably more widespread in the Jewish commonwealth than that which is witnessed in the arena of modern civilization. These men robbed God, they were profane, licentious, covetous, dishonest to the last degree. The state of morals in the Roman empire, in the days of Augustus and afterward, was worse, in every respect, than in any of the capital cities of existing Christian nations. There is a general alarm felt at the revelations of venality, fraud and dishonesty which have been lately made, as existing in this country and elsewhere. The recent disclosures in New York have stirred the public as it has seldom been stirred; and here, in Lonisiana, an amount of rottenness has been brought to light in political circles, which would be astounding but for the fact that we have become somewhat used to it. The Tammany ring in New York, and the carpet-bag plunderers in New Orleans, have shown themselves wonderfully alike in their proclivity to outrage every principle of truth and honesty.

The fact that the wholesale plundering here was upon the property of rebels goes far to reconcile it to the Northern conscience, but the peccadilloes of Mayor Hall and his associates in office have suddenly waked up an earthquake of public indignation. There, it is the villainy inherent in Democratic politics, and the religious radical journals are using it to favor their party, but what will they do with the equal venality of their loyal friends in the South? The Republican soil here shows as rank a growth as the Democratic there. The radical rule in the South has exhibited a degree of corruption, such as was never known before in this latitude, and this, with a reckless defiance of public opinion on the part of the guilty, which shows that they feel secure of the support of their political friends. The avidity with which the New York Independent, and other journals of high moral pretensions, turn the late revelations to party account, shows anything but a righteous zeal for simple and unqualified honesty. And this is, doubtless, one great cause of the prevailing corruption. Party ends must be subserved by every means, no matter at what expense of truth and virtue. With these guardians of religion and morality, the supremacy of their political party is the first great article in their creed. This is the first and great commandment, and the second is like unto it. This instance of official dishonesty must be treated with special reference to the next presidential election, and its bearings upon the success of the Republican party are the main points to be studied.

Thus it is, that a partisan spirit brings the question to a single issue, and refuses to recognize crime, except in its relations to political results. Robbery is exposed and denounced where political advantage is secured; it is ignored or covered up where political damage is likely to ensue. This is about all the honest independence that we find in the religious journals of the North. There is a partisan animus in all, while there is neither the disposition nor the courage to rise up against evil-doers as such, and to expose and denounce all official and social wickedness, without regard to political affinities. The New York ring, composed of papists and Democrats, is bad enough, and ought to be broken up, but is there no palpable corruption elsewhere that calls for exposure? Christian men must divest themselves of political prejudice before they are qualified to indicate or apply the remedies which are demanded, and they must recognize their allegiance to God and truth as something paramount to all questions of political expediency.

The corruption of the times is a fact of society and of public morals, and is to be met by the counter influences of honesty and uprightness. How good men are to bring about a reformation is a difficult problem. The virtue and piety of the country must somehow reach and control the offices and legislation, but this can never be done under a blind subservience to party domination. Good and capable men must come forward, and the honest men must vote for them. The Psalmist's rule of discrimination must apply politically as well as socially; "In whose eyes a vile person is contemned, but he honoreth them that fear the Lord." The property and intelligence of the country may, in time, assert themselves, but these require the assistance of all moral and religious influences. The character of office-holders and legislators in some degree reflect that of their constituents, and the dishonesty, so prevalent in political circles, indicates a fearful demoralization in society.

The love of money is the root of all evil, and covetousness has become the prevailing idolatry of the times. The commandment to be emphasized just now is: "Thou shalt not steal." A special mission is needed for the preaching of honesty, and to promote the revival of integrity in the land. Our social and political corruption is not novel in the history of the world. Things have been worse elsewhere and in other ages, and, on the whole, the human race is growing better. The only marvel is that such wickedness can exist and be tolerated, where there are so many advantages on the side of purity and integrity. What are our Sunday schools, our pulpits, our innumerable agencies for the reformation of the world doing? Has the gospel lost its power to leaven this great festering lump of sin, or is there a fault on the part of the Christian men in failing to estimate the evil, and to apply the remedy? "Is there no balm in Gilead? Is there no physician there? Why, then, is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered?"

THE PACIFIC COAST.

BY BISHOP KEENER.

Roseburg, August 25, 1871.

In approaching California, the eye experiences much relief on the Nevada, at the first appearance of trees. I thought the pine and fir never so soft before. They fringed the rocky heights of this mountain chain as exquisitely as grasses upon the edge of a straggling brook. Coming on down to the valley of the Sacramento the live oak prevails exclusively. Wheat fields, as far as the eye ranges, dotted with these healthy trees, looking like home and an apple orchard. There is no other tree to be met with. The wheat heads had been cut off, leaving a very white, clean straw standing, well cured and full of nourishment for stock. This "white to the harvest" look of all the grass and grain of California and Oregon resembles the cane-fields after a hot sun has followed upon a severe frost. The air at this season of the year is filled with vapor, which, from lack of electricity or other cause, will not condense into fog or dew, but remains night and day as a vail of smoke over the sky. It is the effect of long drouth; and yet nothing seems to suffer but Indian corn. The trees look green, the pears hang full, the plums and apples are plump and cluster upon the finger-like branches until there is scarcely standing room for them, and the wood is barely able to support their weight. This rack, everybody tells you, is smoke from the mountains on fire. The same haze is upon the atmosphere of France, and causes the grape to ripen slowly. Our hot scorching sun of Louisiana brings them on so fast that but little sugar is formed. Here nothing can surpass the sweetness and lusciousness of the white grape. If the Spies carried such back, there was still less excuse for those perverse, leek and onion-longing Israelites. As this climate is Asiatic, I am much disposed to think these grapes like those of the Promised Land. They are like the Malaga, without juice or any acid pulp. Cattle do finely here all the winter; the summer is the hard part of the year for them. Every horse, cow and sheep that I have seen, is of good stock, and in the best condition.

As soon as Sabbath was past, I took car and stage for Oregon, happily ignorant of the things that should befall me. I had read Bishop Marvin's experience over this route with his solitary Dutchman, but it made no serious impression on me. Presently, I found myself seated in an instrument of torture that never occurred to the fruitful brain of Dante—a mail stage. Had he ever passed by this way, he should have had, in his "Inferno," a United States mail wagon, with but one "inside," being driven furiously forever amidst dense forests of pine, fir and larch, along a narrow road, cut on the dizzy mountain sides, on and down with spring and jerk, down to the bottom of the gorge, rattling over the bridges, and then rising up for a new descent. This was not my case exactly. I had with me an odorous Chinaman. I was not alone. This is, by way of warning, not description. Two days and two nights of this riding left me hardly able to walk or to stand upright.

The compensation was a sight of the grandest growth of tree on the continent, whole forests of cedar and larch, not less than one hundred and fifty feet in height. And next, the snowy, sunbright top of Shasta, the highest mountain on this coast but one—only less than Mont Blanc. Upon reaching Ashland, the valley of the Rouge river, introduced into the beautiful succession of grain fields and fertile hills, which glow all over this part of Oregon. I preached at Jacksonville on Sabbath, and here, at Roseburg, last night.

JACOB AND RACHEL.

After Esau had discovered the fraud which his mother Rebecca) and his brother Jacob had practiced against him, he was filled with wrath and resolved on revenge, as soon as his sick father should be dead and the decencies of the mourning had been observed. Rebecca, knowing this, hastened Jacob's departure to Haran, the country of her brother, Laban. Jacob, the heir of wealth, without a servant or a camel, flies alone; he dares take nothing lest he be tracked, pursued and captured. In his wallet he carries a little oil, perhaps some bread, and a few hard dates. How interesting this lone traveler! What experiences await him? What fortunes his wonderful family? Who could have anticipated his future, or the destinies of his far off posterity? He goes forward on his long and lonely journey. He reaches Haran. He sees a well. He asks the shepherds: "My brethren, whence be ye?" And they: "Of Haran are we." And he said: "Know ye Laban, the son of Nahor?" And they said: "We know him." And he said: "Is he well?" And they said: "He is well, behold Rachel, his daughter, cometh with the sheep." And when Jacob saw "Rachel, the daughter of his mother's brother, and the sheep of Laban, his mother's brother." (You see it is his mother this young stranger is thinking of, his mother, his far off mother). Jacob did not sit by as a mere spectator, as Eliezer, his grandfather's servant, had done when he came to secure a wife for Isaac, Jacob's father. Jacob had not the dignity of age, nor the pomp of retinue, as Eliezer had. So he runs and removes the slab that covers the well's mouth, and gallantly watered the flock of Laban, his mother's brother. Jacob kissed Rachel; he thought of his far off home, of his mother, his desolation as a refugee in a strange land and this young woman, his mother's niece, his own cousin, the rush of emotions, tender and sad, overpowered him, and he lifted up his voice and wept. How natural is all this! Jacob told Rachel that he was Rebecca's son, and she ran to tell her father, and Laban ran to meet Jacob and embraced and kissed him. Jacob told Laban all his story. And Laban said: "Thou art my bone and flesh." This man, Laban, was mean and selfish, but he had some threads of goodness and kindness in the web of his evil life. He received Jacob kindly. Jacob remained a month as a guest, but made himself useful in the management of the herds and flocks. It is presumable that somehow he had heard from home, and that it would not be safe to return. Laban now proposes business, and inquires what wages Jacob would demand. Jacob, in the meantime, had fallen deeply in love with his fair cousin, Rachel, and, in the ardor and abandon of his love, offered to serve Laban seven years for Rachel. Laban holds Jacob to his offer. How different from the reception given to Isaac's proposition. When Eliezer came to secure Rebecca for Isaac, he came with a retinue of ten camels and a treasure of many valuable ornaments, and said that Isaac, his master's son, was rich, the heir of great wealth. Laban said to him: "Come in, thou blessed of the Lord," and further: "The thing proceedeth from the Lord," and agreed to Rebecca's instant departure. But here is the son of Isaac, asking his daughter in marriage, but he is a refugee and poor. Laban is in a position to take advantage, he sees the devotion of the young man to his daughter, and, true to his covetous instincts, he exacts the seven years of labor. If we are poor, this selfish world is very apt to make us feel it, and take advantage of our necessities. But how love lightens toil, and gives swift wings to time, it is written: "Jacob served seven years for Rachel, and they seemed unto him but a few days for the love he had to her." The years flew by on rosy wings, and Jacob said, when these years were passed: "Give me my wife, my days are fulfilled." "Laban gathered the men of the place and made a feast;" but this apparent generosity was but a covering for another act of covetousness and fraud. He foisted upon Jacob his daughter, Leah, whom Jacob had never wooed nor loved. Being deeply veiled, Jacob did not detect the fraud; but the morning came, and with it the terrible and heart crushing discovery that it was not Rachel, his long loved and long sought bride. "Behold, it was Leah!" Did ever so few words express so much disappointment? Sterne, the author of "Tristram Shandy" and the "Sentimental Journey," selects this exclamation, as above all others in the Bible, in recorded speech, to express the feeling of utter disappointment. This act of Laban's was cruel, as it was covetous and false. At the end of the usual week of marriage festivities, Laban sold Rachel, the second time, for seven years more of toil. This execrable wretch could make merchandise of his children, and trifle with the most tender and sacred feelings of the heart. However, Jacob had little right to expect fair dealing of others, when he had perpetrated a fraud upon his own father and brother. So true it is: "Whatsoever a man soweth, that also shall he reap." EUROPEAN CORRESPONDENCE.

Paris, August 21, 1871.

My Dear Stewards: The greatest natural wonder that I have seen in my "feeble" travels is the great volcano, Mount Vesuvius. Smoke in volumes continually issues from its summit, as from the chimney of a mighty forge; its fires burn as ceaselessly as the waters of Niagara flow; at night, the red-hot lava can be seen at short intervals, bursting forth with the smoke, and lying in great flakes upon its sides. Where there is so much smoke there must be some fire; aye, bowels of fire, to feed whose flame, fuel and draught are ever mysteriously and abundantly supplied. It is strange, so strange; there is Mont Blanc, difficult and dangerous to ascend for the cold; there is Vesuvius, difficult and dangerous to attempt for the heat; fields of snow clothe the one eternally; of burning lava the other. The interior of Vesuvius would be a rare sight; what surgings and boilings and seethings and meltings! To note the wave of liquid fire, starting in the depth of the fathomless abyss, despising gravitation, dashing from side to side of the rocky barrier that contains it, making its way resolutely upward, and finally delivering its eruption, breaking upon the free space outside like the stormy tide upon a rock-bound coast! Vesuvius, a pyramid of rock with heart of fire, is one of God's tents which he has pitched to dwell in on this earth of his, for "our God is a consuming fire." Who can pry into the secret of that tabernacle? He is not confined to place; the curtains of the sunshine drop to form a pavillion for His benignant presence, that occupies the globe, but He has His tent of terrors also. He is august and terrible, and yet He knows how to win the terrified creature to Himself, for as houses are built and tenanted, and vineyards smile on the very slope of Vesuvius, at almost a stone's throw from the lava line, so faith in God, so far from being dismayed by His terrors, comes and nestles under the very brow of the frowning majesty; for God is love. Vesuvius and the rainbow, Sinai and Calvary alike proclaim it.

A few miles from Vesuvius lies a city of houses, streets, shops, villas, but without inhabitants. Many of the houses are commodious and convenient, and seem to invite occupation, but there is no card on them "for rent or sale," and there is no application to rent or buy. The streets are already paved, but no sound of hoof or wheel is heard upon them. Garden beds, bordered with marble, lie waiting in vain to be sown with flowers, and fountains, dry for long ages, beg in vain for water. Temples are there, but no devotees; and theaters, but no spectators nor performers. Doors are open, but no one goes in or out, and no face looks out of the many windows. A town it is, distinct and real, of walls, and gates, and streets, and houses, and temples, and fountains, and public buildings, larger than many a village of our towns of two thousand inhabitants; but is utterly vacant of population. Neither mansion nor cottage has a tenant; frescoed flooring and walls and ceilings in vain invite an owner or an occupant. There are evident traces of former occupation, but no signs of any now. Diomede must have been a rich and luxurious man, who evidently lived in one of the handsomest villas to be seen, but his skeleton lies in the cellar, clutching his gold and silver, and no heir has succeeded to his magnificent mansion. Human forms of solid white ashes, male and female, lie here and there, where they were overtaken in flight by the merciless torrent of flaming lava, and the agonized expression stands still upon their countenances. Remains of all kinds are found there, and which any visitor may see: loaves of bread, figs, beans, walnuts, prunes, rice, shells, honey, paper, rope, thread, hair-nets, wood, nutmegs, honey-beans, eggs, dishrags, hair, fish-bones, paints, jewelry, breastpins and earrings, vases, kitchen utensils, spoons, mechanics' tools, wine jars in restaurants, very numerous. It is an old city; there are evidences that its streets were trodde and its gay villas frequented by great men of the Roman State, Cicero and Sallust, and Pliny a Julius Cæsar; but for only two centuries past has its location be known, and excavations have reco ered its date only within the l hundred years. For eighteen hu dred years it has lain a ruin at t foot of its destroyer—proud, sull Vesuvius, that burns still with fire that consumed Pompeii; it yet unconsumed. Towns and v lages are lying all around the v cano now, and homesteads far upon its slopes. How is it that th are not in terror of Pompeii's fa It will not be in our time; doub less, they think. The ancient calam ty, judgment shall we say? is f gotten, as it is long past. The ch dren have ventured again upon t ground where their fathers perishe secure in the constancy of natu which is the providence of G which is the law of his dispen tion who said to the disciples th invoked fire upon the inhospital Samaritan city, which shut its ga against Him: "I am not come destroy men's lives, but to sa them.", Naples, a tremendous c in size, and population of six hu dred thousand inhabitants, lies too far off for the lava flood reach it, but it is difficult to see th it is any less luxurious in vice, a filthy in its iniquities than was Pom peii. If there was a lesson in t destruction of Pompeii, Naples failed to learn it. W. V. Tudor.

RAMBLING NOTES.

We give our readers further e tracts from the second letter of D T. O. Summers, Jr., published the Nashville Advocate. Sorry th our limited space compels conde sation:

At Lewiston, several miles belo the Falls, I took the steamer f Toronto. Just before starting, whi walking on deck, I met Prof. Yea man, who fills the chair of chemist in the University of Nashville. T professor was educated at the Un versity of Toronto, and was, course, familiar with all the poin of interest in the city, to all which he kindly volunteered to ta me. We had a delightful sail acro Lake Ontario, arriving at Toron at two P. M. Saturday. Wishing lose no time, we began immediate after dinner on our rounds of ob servation. We went first to th court rooms, and what a contra to our court houses, covered wi theater, circus and quack-medicin posters, and redolent of decompo ing tobacco juice! Here I foun ample halls with marble floor magnificent libraries, and portrai of great men strung throughout th building, giving it an air of dignit which you never find in America court houses. We next visited th Normal School. The grounds of thi institution are beautifully laid of There was one feature in this tha pleased me very much, indeed, an I think it could be carried out muc more extensively, and hence mor profitably, in the South. There were plots of ground, of various sizes and shapes, with plants repre senting the botany of the country so arranged on them that they may be studied while growing. The botanical name of every plant i affixed to it, to assist the student The art-galleries of this institution are the finest we have ever seen The chemical and philosophical ap paratus is large and well selected A great deal of attention is paid to education in Toronto. Everything is carried on in good old English style. Here diplomas mean wha they say.

Punshon is building an immens church, which he calls the Taber nacle. It is built of yellow brick in which this country abounds. The stone-work is first built in, and then carved afterward. I saw them carv ing the pillars at the door. Th tower will be, at the rate it is now diminishing in diameter, higher than that of any church on the con tinent. Everything about it is solid and plain. Evidently he expects to have large audiences, for no room is lost in that building. There are the old English galleries constructed so as to hold almost as many people as the body of the building. This church will soon be completed Methodism is stronger in Toronto than any other denomination, ex cept the Church of England. The Presbyterian Church has also a largo membership in Toronto, a there are a great many Scotch in habitants.

On Sunday morning, as Punshon was in Europe, I attended the church of the Holy Trinity, the High Church branch of the Church of England. On my way a little in cident occurred which, under th circumstances, was very interesting indeed. Having no guide, I inquired of an old gentleman whom I met, the way to the church. Though going in the opposite direction, he volunteered to walk with me in sight of the church, but said that he had made up his mind never to enter its doors again. I asked his reason for such a resolution. He replied: "I don't like silver-plated religion—I want the solid material, and I don't get it there." He pointed out the church, and returned to his own. We had a good illustration of what you have been pleased to denominate "bastard popery" in the services of the morning. At night I attended the English cathedral. There was no ritnalistic flummery here. The Liturgy was excellently read by Mr. Dudley, of Baltimere. Dean Grasett preached one of the best sermons I have ever heard, on Ahab and Jezebel, or the danger of unholy alliances. He did not mince matters at all, but gave us good gospel in pure old English style.

The University buildings are all in the Park. They are constructed after the model of Oxford. The main structure is the finest University building on the continent. The hall in which the degrees are conferred is covered with insignia and inscriptions, all in Latin, indicative of the dignity and solemnity of these occasions. The museum is finer than any I have seen, except, of course, that of the Philadelphia Academy of Science. The library contains sixteen thousand volumes. This does not include magazines, reviews, etc. You will find no trash here. There is not a book in it that is not valuable. The arrangement is very beautiful and convenient for the student. There are alcoves constructed throughout the room, each of which contains books of a particular department of literature, so that, for example, if a student wishes to make historical investigations, he goes to the historical alcove and finds there a desk and chair, and all the books upon that subject. Prof. Yeatman procured the keys of the laboratory and carried me through its various departments. This is said to be the most extensive university laboratory on the continent, and, of course, I was anxious to see it. It is really the best I have ever seen, except one, and I am glad to say that one is at the Southern University at Greensboro, Alabama, which was selected by Prof. Lupton from the finest manufactories in the world. The apparatus and arrangement of these laboratories are remarkably similar. There is a fine observatory connected with the University, in which there is a great clock, from which the various clocks of the city are struck by electricity. We next visited the Lunatic Asylum, passing Trinity College on our way. This, too, is a large institution, but we did not go through it.

At two o'clock Monday afternoon, I left Toronto on the steamer Abyssinian, for Montreal. We passed some beautiful Canadian towns, and fine, well-cultivated farms. This St. Lawrence is a grand old river. Our best geologists hold that near the present mouth of the St. Lawrence must have emptied the principal river of the continent during the carboniferous period, which was the period of general emergence. Indeed, the St. Lawrence is at present the greatest rival of the "Father of Waters" in North America. In many respects it far surpasses the Mississippi. The "Thousand Islands," which lie immediately below Kingston, are beautiful beyond expression to the "natural" eye, profoundly interesting to the scientific mind, and to the fisherman absolutely enchanting. St. Peter and Dr. Green would go into ecstasies over it. And then the rapids! Down these our vessel rushed with steam shut off, and by the force of the current alone, at the rate of twenty miles an hour. It is very dangerous, indeed, as we had occasion to determine. As we swept down Cedar Rapids, there were seven huge rafts in the stream, and as they were entirely under control of the current, we were dependent upon the skill of our pilot to avoid them. In doing this we were dashed upon a rock, and came near being lost. One man on the raft nearest us was drowned. We arrived at Montreal in the afternoon, and were greeted with a perfect Babel of tongues on the wharf.

CHANGE OF FORM.—The Texas Christian Advocate comes out in its new form, as a sixteen page sheet, looking attractive and fresh. The price has been reduced to $2 in specie, with peculiar advantages to clubs and agents. We agree with Bro. John that Texas ought to have an organ, and that the five Texas Conferences should give the Advocate a hearty support. We wish our confrere prosperity and increased usefulness and success in his new departure.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

THE FOUR GOSPELS IN ONE. By a Chicago Bible class teacher.—Chicago: R. A Campbell, publisher, 1871.

In this work, the author has arranged the gospel narrative in the chronological order of the events recorded. Where there are parallel accounts of the same things, instead of inserting them all, there is a selection and blending of all in one statement. The chronological arrangement, and distribution into sections will be a convenience, and contribute much to facilitate the study of the gospels. We should have preferred the placing of the parallel passages in full, and in separate columns, instead of an attempt to unite them in one text, but it is this which is peculiar in the work—the four in one—a smooth and connected narrative, every word of which is taken from the inspired page. On the whole, we think the book a useful one, and well worth having. Sunday school teachers especially will find it of service.

LIFE AND TIMES OF HENRY LORD BROUGHAM. Written by himself, in three volumes. Volume II. New York: Harper & Bros., publishers, 1871.

The correspondence in this volume comes down to 1829, and the personal history and times cover about twenty-five years. A large part of the volume is about home and foreign politics; and more than all, about the royal family, especially the Princess of Wales and the Princess Charlotte. The trial of Queen Caroline is the subject of nearly three entire chapters. New light is thrown upon many of the leading events of the eventful times extending from 1807 to 1829, and some of the most celebrated characters are revealed more fully than ever before. For sale by Ellis & Bro., Camp street.

THE COUSIN FROM INDIA. A book for girls. By Georgiana M. Craik. New York: Harper & Bros., 1871.

This is number two of the series of books for girls. It is handsomely illustrated, religious in its tone, and calculated to interest and profit the young.

HISTORY OF METHODISM IN TENNESSEE. By John B. McFerrin, D. D. Volume II. From the year 1804 to the year 1818.

The present volume of the History of Methodism in Tennessee is replete with matter of great interest. The author has been diligent in gathering his materials, among which are many important letters and documents, never before published. The period of fourteen years embraced in this volume is peculiarly rich in personal and biographical treasures, and the author has most appropriately sketched many of the most celebrated of the early Methodist preachers. There are many details in reference to families, individuals and places of little interest to the general reader; but to those acquainted with the localities, or connected with Tennessee scenes and society, they must possess a peculiar value. We have gone through the volume, attracted, pleased and profited by every chapter. The engraved likeness of Dr. McFerrin, and that of his venerable mother, which appear in this volume, are excellent specimens of art, and add to the value of the work. The author announces that the work will be completed by a third volume, which may be looked for in the course of a few months.

We quote the introduction to Volume II as follows:

The first volume of this work having found favor, the author is encouraged to persevere in his arduous and yet delightful task. To review the past and to mark the progress of the church of God is pleasant, and serves to inspire the soul of the believer with greater confidence in the future success and final triumph of Christianity. "Upon this rock will I build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it," is a proclamation of the Saviour that has been verified by the history of the church in past ages, and will be fully confirmed in the establishment of Christ's kingdom throughout the world, when all shall acknowledge Him to be Lord, to the glory of God the Father. It is a matter of gratitude that the Methodists, humble and despised as they were in the beginning, have been the chosen instruments, in the hand of God, of accomplishing much in the extension of the Redeemer's cause and kingdom. One object of this work is to keep Wesleyan Methodists to their true position and legitimate calling, and this by recurring to the past, and seeing how and why our fathers prospered in their high and holy calling.

Another volume will follow, which will bring the History of Methodism in Tennessee to a period where the author thinks there should be a pause for future developments.

Accompanying this volume will be found an engraved likeness of the author's aged and reverend mother, for the insertion of which no apology is offered; and also one of himself, which he has allowed to be inserted at the earnest request of many friends.

Asking the indulgence of the reader, and the smiles of God upon his labors, this volume is sent forth to take its place among the multitude of books, in the making of which there is no end. J. B. McFERRIN.

NASHVILLE, June 15, 1871.

THE HOUSEHOLD for September contains a large variety of articles treating upon nearly every department of domestic life. Among others we notice Household Architecture, by George J. Colby; Furniture; The Fashions; Little Soldier Cap, a story for the children; Echoes from the Poets; About Canning Fruit; Cooking Recipes; Questions and Answers; Dressing for Home; Dancing, etc. This journal is an especial favorite with the ladies, which is a good indication of its merit. Terms, $1 per year. The publishers offer to send six numbers on trial for twenty-five cents, and every lady not already a subscriber will be very likely to try it at this rate. Address, George E. Crowell & Co., Brattleboro, Vermont.

THE NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE for September has a good table of contents, and is an attractive number. The editor has been sick, and we miss the fine Round Table feast he is in the habit of serving up for his readers. Are our Methodist ladies all taking this excellent magazine, and are the preachers working to extend its circulation? Let every one make a personal matter of it, and go to work immediately to secure new subscribers for this periodical. We fear that our people have not as yet given it the support which it merits.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL MAGAZINE for October is out in handsome style, with its valuable notes for teachers and Bible students, lesson papers, and a good variety of short articles in prose and in verse. We know not the extent of its circulation, but we know that the Sunday School Magazine should be in every family, and, of course, largely in all of our schools.

HOME AND HEALTH for the current month has something about the Health of our Women; Facts about Life; the New Cancer Cure; Effects of Cundurango; the Great Plague in Buenos Ayres. The editor's portfolio of this number is filled with good things. It is published by William Dupny & Bro., New York.

THE MUSICAL BULLETIN for September contains several excellent pieces of music, besides editorial and selected matter. It is a valuable periodical for all who are devoted to music. It is published by Charles W. Harris, New York.

OLD AND NEW for September has in its table of contents: Some Words About Women; The Sunny South; St. Jerome, Looking Across the War-Gulf; Reminiscences of Brook Farm, and other articles, original poetry, book notices, etc.

The Celebrated Argyle Bitters.—From one end of the country to the other these unrivaled Bitters have received certificates of their efficacy and health-giving properties, without solicitation from their proprietor or agents.

As a counteracting malarial poison, as a good family medicine, as a tonic, pure and lasting, as a delightful, gentle stimulant of the vital functions, as a preventive and cure of dyspepsia, they stand firm and unshaken in their reputation.

In malarious latitudes, in damp climates, they have no parallel in the many worthless decoctions, with far-fetched and farcical names (too numerous to mention), and palmed off upon an unocent and unsuspecting people as valuable medicinal agents, but which, like "Dead Sea fruits, turn to ashes on the lips," and result in disgust and loathing, wrong and injury.

For fifteen years and more, these Bitters have found a place in the bosoms of thousands of our most industrious and respected mechanics, lawyers, doctors, the clergy, and are the boast and pride of the farmer and planter—the bone and sinew of the land.

They are now offered for sale at reduced prices. se7 1m

READY FOR DUTY.

Daffy-down-dilly came up in the cold,
Through the brown mould;
Although the March breezes blew keen on her face,
Although the white snow lay in many a place.

Daffy-down-dilly had heard underground
The sweet rushing sound
Of the streams, as they burst off their white winter chains,
Of the whistling sprigg winds, and the pattering rains.

"Now then," thought Daffy, deep down in her heart,
"It's time I should start!"
So she pushed her soft leaves through the hard frozen ground,
Quite up to the surface, and then she looked round.

There was snow all about her—gray clouds overhead—
The trees all looked dead.
Then how do you think Daffy-down-dilly felt
When the sun would not shine and the ice would not melt?

"Cold weather," thought Daffy, still working away:
"The earth's hard to-day!
There's but a half-inch of my leaves to be seen,
And two-thirds of that is more yellow than green!

"I can't do much yet, but I'll do what I can—
It's well I began!
For unless I can manage to lift up my head,
The people will think that the Spring herself's dead!"

So little by little she brought her leaves out,
All clustered about;
And then her bright flowers began to unfold,
Till Daffy stood robed in her spring green and gold.

O Daffy-down-dilly! so brave and so true!
I wish all were like you!
So ready for duty in all sorts of weather,
And holding forth courage and beauty together.

THE BEST THAT I CAN.

"I cannot do much," said a little star,
"To make the dark world bright!
My silvery beams cannot struggle far
Through the folding gloom of night
But I'm only a part of God's great plan,
And I'll cheerfully do the best that I can."

"What is the use," said a fleecy cloud,
"Of these few drops that I hold?
They will hardly bend the lily proud,
Though caught in her cup of gold;
Yet am I a part of God's great plan,
So my treasures I'll give as well as I can."

A child went merrily forth to play,
But a thought, like a silvery thread,
Kept winding in and out all day
Through the happy, golden head;
Mother said: "Darling, do all you can,
For you are a part of God's great plan."

She knew no more than the glancing star,
Nor the clouds with its chalice full,
How, why, and for what all strange things were—
She was only a child at school!
But she thought: "It is a part of God's great plan,
That even I should do all that I can."

She helped a younger child along,
When the road was rough to the feet,
And she sang from her heart a little song
That we all thought passing sweet;
And her father, a weary, toil-worn man,
Said: "I will do likewise the best that I can."

Our best? Ah! children, the best of us
Must hide our faces away,
When the Lord of the vineyard comes to look
At our task at the close of day!
But for strength from above (this the Master's plan)
We'll pray, and we'll do the best that we can.

TWILIGHT TALKS.

BY EMILIE GRAHAM.

Our Brothers and Sisters.

"Do you know what an astronomer is? Astra is a Latin word which means stars, and astronomers are men who make it their business to study the stars, and to find out all they can about them.

"During the long nights, while we are sleeping quietly in our beds, these astronomers sit looking through telescopes and other instruments, and doing terribly hard sums, from the time the evening stars first peep out until the broad flood of daylight drowns them.

"They are the postmen who bring us news of our brother and sister worlds that float with us round the sun, and of those other far-off suns—or stars, as we call them—which, if we like, we may think of as uncles to our little earth, and fathers to heaps of cousins whom we shall never see, nor know, so long as we live.

"It is very nice to have a whole family of brothers and sisters. Do you not think so?

"Even if some of them live so far off or are so small that we can only see them through a telescope, still, it is pleasant to think of them, and to believe that they are all well off, comfortable and happy in their own way.

"When on a clear evening you look up into the space above and around you, you see it crowded with thousands of stars, and if the earth on which you stand were transparent, like the air, you would see as many stars beneath your feet as over your head. Almost all of them are true stars—that is, suns, shining with their own light far, far away—but a few, a very few, of them belong to our own family of worlds. They are much nearer to us, and although they only shine with the reflected sunlight, just as our own earth and moon do, they yet look so bright, and so exactly like the stars, that it is impossible, without a proper spy-glass, to tell them apart.

"Astronomers call these worlds planets, from a Greek word which means to wander, because they wander or move round the sun, and have also given each of them a name of its own, in order to distinguish them from one another. They all move round the sun in the same direction with our earth, but two of them are nearer to the sun than we, and the rest are farther off.

"Mercury is the name of the little planet which is nearest to the sun. It would take sixteen Mercuries to make a world as large as ours; still, I dare say the people there find it quite big enough, and like it very much. They have a day and night about as long as ours, but their year lasts only for three of our months, so that a little girl ten years of age in our world would be called forty there. We do not know much about the planet Mercury, because it is so near the sun that we are only able to see it sometimes, for a short time, just after sunset or just before sunrise.

"Next beyond Mercury comes Venus. Venus is twice as far from the sun as Mercury is, but nearer to us than either of the other planets, and as it is nearly equal in size to our earth, it appears like a very large, bright and beautiful star, not so bright, however, as we must look to the good people there, because, since the path of Venus lies between us and the sun, she changes like a little moon, and a large part of her night side is often turned toward us, while we present her with the whole, or nearly the whole, of our broad daylight face.

"After Venus floats our own dear old world, and beyond us, and twice as far from us as Venus, the planet Mars, which is not much larger than Mercury. Still, as Mars, when nearest to us, shows us his sunny side, as we show ours to Venus, we have a fine opportunity for seeing what kind of looking fellow he is. Several astronomers have given a good deal of time to the examination of Mars, and have found out several interesting things about that brother of ours. Not only have they discovered mountains there, as well as upon Venus and Mercury, but seas and snow. You are not to suppose that they see the snow as you see it lying upon the ground when you look out of the window on a winter's day, for you must know that the distance of Mars is at all times so great that, even through the most powerful telescopes, it is only possible to distinguish very large lights and shadows upon it. It has been noticed that the cold countries of Mars become very bright when they are leaned away from the sun—that is to say, when it is winter with them—while, during the other half of their year, which is twice as long as ours, when they lean toward the sun, and become warmed, this great brightness disappears gradually, so that there is very little doubt of its being caused by snow, which melts away in the summer-time.

"Worlds in which there are summer and winter, land and water, mountains, air and clouds from which rain and snow fall, cheerful daylight for work and play, and night for rest, cannot be very different from our own, and I think we may feel pretty sure that there are plants to be nourished by the sunshine, the air, the land and the water, animals to enjoy all that the sun and earth give them, and, also, human beings, with minds to understand what is good, beautiful and true, and hearts to love it. In some respects Mars appears to resemble our own earth more than either of the other planets does, but it is much smaller.

"The next planet beyond Mars, however, is enormously large—fifteen hundred times the size of our world—so that, although it is seven times further from us than Mars—so far that it would take the railroad cars more than two thousand years to reach there—it is still one of the brightest and most beautiful stars in the sky. This is the planet Jupiter, and I dare say you have often had it pointed out to you. Jupiter has four moons, which give the people there a great deal of light, although we are not able to see them excepting by the help of a telescope.

"I have said that Jupiter is the next planet beyond Mars, but that is not exactly so, and I must tell you about something very wonderful which is between them. For a long time it was supposed that the great space which separates these two planets was unoccupied, but some astronomers felt so certain that there ought to be, and must be, a world there, that they set themselves to look for it, and sure enough, after a great deal of looking, they discovered four small planets just about where they had expected to find one. It seemed very strange that, instead of one, there should be four, all about the same distance from the sun, but still stranger that, upon examining them carefully, they should appear not to be round, as all the other planets are, but of an irregular form, like great pieces of rock. What could that mean? There seems only one way of accounting for it, and that is that they are the rough fragments of what was once a world. Only think of it—a great, round, perfect world dashed to pieces by an earthquake or some other terrible power! Most likely there are a great many other pieces, besides the four that have been discovered, which cannot be seen because they are too small, for at that great distance a thing must be pretty large for us to see it, even through the most powerful telescopes.

"Far beyond this broken world floats, as I have told you, the great planet Jupiter and his four moons, and, as distant from Jupiter as Jupiter from the sun, is Saturn with its seven moons and its rings, which are also a kind of moon, although certainly a very strange kind. Have you ever seen a picture of Saturn? I had seen a great many such pictures, and yet, when I looked at Saturn itself through a telescope, it was so wonderful and so beautiful that I felt almost as much surprised as if I had not known what to expect.

"Saturn, so far as we know, is the only planet which has these curious rings, and I will try to describe them to you.

"If you were to break the middle out of a dinner-plate, so as to have nothing but the rim left, and were to hang an apple by its stem just in the center of the hole, you would have something like Saturn and his rings or belts, as they are sometimes called, only there are several belts, one inside another, like the rims of plates of different sizes.

"Sometimes the thin edge of the rings is turned toward us, so that they look merely like odd little threads of light projecting out from each side of the planet.

"At other times Saturn is tilted toward us far enough for us to see the broad side of the rings and part of the space between them and Saturn, with the round, glowing planet in the middle. Oh, then it looks more beautiful than you can imagine, for both planet and rings shine like the brightest moon.

"Besides these rings, Saturn has seven moons, so there can be no lack of moonlight there, but then, while the rings reflect light on one part of the planet, they cast a strip of shade on another; the sun, too, is such a great distance from Saturn that it must appear more than a hundred times smaller than it does to us, and must give less than a hundredth part the light. Still, even a sun of that apparent size, so great is its brightness, yields more light than two thousand full moons such as ours.

"We need not pity those distant brothers of our earth because they are so far from the sun, for the degree of light and heat which any world receives depends a good deal on the quantity and quality of its air, and we may be sure that, in some wise and happy way, Saturn and its inhabitants are just suited to their sunshine, and their sunshine to them.

"I dare say the little boys and girls there, if they have ever heard of our earth, say, 'I wonder the people can bear to live in that world, so near the fiery sun! I should think they would get burnt up!' and yet, you know we are very comfortable here, excepting sometimes in the summer we feel rather warm, and even then the snow lies deep on the tops of our high mountains, where the air is thin and light.

"You may imagine that worlds as far from the sun as Jupiter and Saturn can scarcely travel round it as soon as we do, and you will not, therefore, be surprised to hear that Jupiter is twelve of our years on his journey, and that Saturn's year is as long, nearly as thirty of ours. Their days and nights, however, are short—only about five hours each.

"I am afraid you are getting tired of planets, but I have not quite done yet, because Saturn is not the last of them.

"As far away from Saturn as Saturn is from the sun is a world eighty times the size of this earth, and it takes eighty-four of our years to make one of Herchel's. If we were upon this planet, which is called Herchel after the astronomer who discovered it, to our eyes the sun would appear scarcely larger than a star, but we cannot tell how it may look to the people who live there, because we know nothing about them or their eyes.

"Other planets have been discovered within the last few years, but I believe very little is known concerning them, and I am sure you have heard quite enough about these worlds for one evening, and will be glad to run away and talk about something nearer home."
The Children's Hour.

HERMAN'S GIFT.—There was a little boy of seven, or thereabouts, who, his mother hoped, had begun to lead a truly Christian life; for whereas he had been willful, disobedient and selfish, he had grown lamb-like in his temper and conduct.

"Mother," said the child one day, standing by her knee, "it seems to me I love the Lord Jesus, he shines in my heart so; and I love everybody. Mother, I would give him anything; I would give him my rocking-horse."

"Will you give the Lord Jesus your gold guinea, Herman?" she asked. He looked into her face for a moment, and his eyes fell. He slowly crept behind her chair, then stole to the open window, then down stairs, without saying a word. She knew he thought much of his beautiful gold guinea. Was he ready to part with his little "all" for His sake? It was a hard question.

Two days passed away, and she was afraid Herman had forgotten it. That evening he came to her and said, with a sweet seriousness:

"Mother, I will give my guinea to the Lord Jesus; here it is. What shall be done with it?"

"What should you wish to have done with it?" she asked.

"May it go to help those who are seeking to bring the heathen children to Jesus?" he said. And as he slipped it into her hand, a happy smile overspread her face. "Mother," he said, "I am glad I have got a gold guinea to give Jesus; but I was not ready when you first asked me. I am now."

Herman gave up that which he valued the most. And was he not happy?

O yes, very happy, and with a happiness better than that which a world full of gold could give.

SUGGESTIVE.—A little girl who loves to pray, one night was very tired and sleepy, and was getting into her little bed without saying her prayers. But her mamma told her to kneel down first to pray. So she folded her little hands and said: "Please, God, remember what little Polly said last night, she's so tired to-night. Amen."

THE FARM AND GARDEN.

THE VEGETABLE GARDEN.—There is not a great deal to be done in the kitchen garden this month. It is well to keep the weeds down with the hoe, to keep them from going to seed. The practice is too common to let the garden become a wilderness of weeds in the fall, making a vast amount of unnecessary work the following summer.

Turnips may still be sown. The Purple Top and Flat Dutch, being early maturing varieties, may be sown even after the middle of the month. Kale and mustard sown now give good supplies of "greens" in early spring. It is best to sow some of each, and not depend entirely upon the turnip tops for "greens." Cabbage may also still be set out, especially "collards," on very rich ground, will make good heads before heavy freezes set in. For spring cabbage next year, sow now, seeds of the early varieties, Landreth's Early York, Early Wakefield, etc. When the plants are large enough transplant in trenches eight or ten inches deep and running from east to west; set the plants against the northern edge of the trench. In opening the trench throw the earth on the north edge. During very cold spells straw or corn-stalks may be thrown over the plants. But we have seen plants left entirely unprotected as far north as Memphis, Tennessee, and stand the winter and produce good early cabbage, much in advance of the spring raised plants.

Manure the garden well in the fall and plow it in. A good plan to be able to work your ground early in the spring, is to bed up and hill as if for tobacco hills, the portions intended for early vegetables. The sharp-pointed conical hills shed off the water and the freezes thoroughly pulverize the soil. In the spring, by running a sub-soil plow between the hills and then dragging them down with the hoe, your ground will be in fine tilth for planting.

Celery should be hilled up this and next month for winter use. Draw the stems together and holding the bunch with one hand draw dirt carefully around them, then finish with hoe or plow. Continue to earth up as the plant grows, leaving only a small portion of top out. The Field and Factory.

TOO MUCH LAND UNDER THE PLOW is a great evil to Southern progress. An acre, to grow thirty bushels of corn, say $30 and same labor, will grow two tons of clover hay, which, if only $15 per ton, is $30; the "aftermath," second growth, will manure land well; cost no more to prepare and sow than corn, and cost of culture of corn seed being six times. One acre of such land, prepared and sown with five pecks of orchard and five pounds of red clover, will feed more stock than two acres of corn. Why make corn so necessary? Use more pasture and hay, the Swede turnip and sweet potatoes, only sound ones, for horses and mules. Orchard will stand five to ten years anyhow and land get better. Sow in early fall as soon as land is moist a few inches, with clover and orchard, which can be mown in March and grow ample to protect before the middle of June. Less land to plow, less corn and fewer mules needed, and fewer of the "fourteenth" persuasion. Mowing keeps down weeds and bushes. Deep culture and a top-dressing of well-decayed manure, and ashes or lime, or both, one-half to one bushel of salt.—Southern Farmer.

CHINA BERRIES AS A FERTILIZER.—The Hawkinsville (Georgia) Dispatch gives us the following: "Last year a planter of this county, living near Hawkinsville, made a satisfactory experiment with the common china berry as a manure by using it under his corn. He tested its value by comparison with cotton seed, which he sowed in rows alternately. The yield of the rows planted with the china berry was fifteen per cent. greater than that of the cotton seed. The rows could be distinguished by a more verdant appearance and vigorous growth. The planter is entirely satisfied with his experiment, and will probably make use of all the china berries upon his place the present season. Another farmer of this county assures us that, for garden manure, the china berry is excellent. It is well known that the berry contains a large quantity of oil, and that certain kinds of stock are exceedingly fond of it. We give these statements to the public, hoping, if there is any value in the china berry, that it will be made known."

TOBACCO FOR CHOLERA.—My chickens are dying off very fast; I think they have the cholera. Can you tell me what to do for them? A writer in a late number of the Poultry Bulletin says, mix tobacco or snuff with Indian meal and feed freely to the fowls. It is also said that a teaspoonful of strong tobacco juice, occasionally, will cure them. Another writer says that a strong decoction of red or black oak bark is the most reliable remedy he knows of. Given in time, it is an effectual preventive, and in many cases will actually cure. It may be mixed with feed or given as a drink.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

MENDING TIN PANS.—Tell your lady readers to mend their tin pans with putty. It is very easily done, and is much better than to throw them away. Put it on the outside; let it thoroughly dry, and they will never have to mend that place again. I have them that I have used for twenty years.

THURSDAY PUDDING.—Fill a tin mold with stale cake broken up fine, and pour over it a custard made of three eggs to a pint of milk, and let it stand one hour and a half. Add a little sliced citron, and boil it one hour and a half. Then let it grow cold; turn it out carefully, sift fine sugar over it, and serve with sauce.

PRESERVING LEMONS.—This useful commodity at the present season easily loses its flavor and quickly rots. Therefore the following preservative will be acceptable to housekeepers: Place the lemon in a jar filled with water, which has to be renewed daily. By following this simple and inexpensive process, the fruit will remain fresh and retain the flavor for many weeks.

GRAPE CATSUP.—Grape catsup is a new condiment, said to be just the thing, and here is the receipe given by an exchange: "Take five pounds of grapes, boiled and cullendered, two and a half pounds of sugar, one pint of vinegar, one tablespoonful each of cinnamon, cloves, allspice and pepper, and half a tablespoonful of salt. Boil until the catsup is a little thick."

GREEN VEGETABLES.—Green vegetables are now in season, and we need them especially in the spring. They cleanse the blood. We need very little of fatty substance in the spring and summer, in comparison with what we eat in winter. A very good vegetable is the dandelion; another spinach, another sorel, that cultivated here by the French and German gardeners; and to show you the demand for it, a very small restaurant down town orders from forty to fifty barrels of it in the fall for winter use. Dock is also most excellent.

PICKLED EGGS.—Pickled eggs are very easily prepared, and are most excellent as an accompaniment for cold meats. Boil for half an hour three dozen eggs, remove the shells and pack them when entirely cold, in wide-mouth jars, large enough to let them in or out without mashing or breaking. Take as much vinegar as you think will cover them entirely and boil in it white pepper, allspice, a little root ginger, and if desired, a very small quantity of garlic. Salt to taste. A few tiny white onions put in the jar some may think an improvement. When the vinegar has boiled enough to extract the spices, take them out and cover the eggs, cork tightly, when cold, and in a month they are ready for use.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

WHITWORTH FEMALE COLLEGE,
Brookhaven, Mississippi,

ON THE New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad, one hundred and twenty-eight miles from New Orleans, and fifty-seven miles south of Jackson, Mississippi.

The location is healthy. The instruction in all the branches, including French and Music, is thorough. During the past term there were one hundred and eighty-two pupils. The Faculty consists of four gentlemen and six ladies. The total expenses for board, tuition in English, Latin and Greek, English text-books, school-room stationery, medicines and medical attention, for the term of forty weeks, amount to $263 The next session will open on the twentieth of September, 1871.

Catalogues can be obtained from R. J. Harp, 112 Camp street New Orleans, Louisiana, or from the president.

TUSKALOOSA FEMALE COLLEGE,
Rev. B. F. Larrabee, M. A.,
PRESIDENT AND PROPRIETOR.

THE ENSUING SESSION OPENS ON THE twenty-fifth of September, with a Faculty of ten ladies and two gentlemen.

The buildings have been enlarged and improved. Furniture, pianos, and apparatus new and superior. Rooms all handsomely carpeted, and the boarding department made a pleasant home.

This is now the most progressive Female College in the South, equal in its appointments and methods of teaching to the best in the United States.

Tuskaloosa is noted for health, and for its refined and cultivated society.

Two hundred and twenty-five dollars in advance pays all expense ten months for board and tuition, including washing, lights, incidental fees, books and stationery, and tuition in full English course, with Latin and Greek. Music, modern languages, and art, taught in the most approved manner at usual rates.

CORONA.

CORONA STRIVES TO JUSTIFY ITS name,

THE CROWN OF SCHOOLS

for the higher education of women, by judiciously combining in its scheme the special points of excellence found in all other schools. It aspires to superiority in all departments—literary, scientific, æsthetic, domestic and hygienic. The principal, after spending nearly twenty years in studying educational questions and in the practice of teaching, is devoting his whole mind and heart to the task of maintaining not the largest but the best school in the South. His system of education comprehends such an harmonious development of all the powers of mind, heart and body as will fit the young lady for the faithful discharge of the highest and lowliest duties of life.

The methods of instruction are those approved by the foremost educators of the age. The very best aids are employed for imparting real knowledge, such as maps, charts, globes, specimens and apparatus of all kinds. There is no rote—learning of the mere letter of text books—no cramming of the mind with disconnected facts.

Assistant teachers of known scholarship and well-tried aptness in teaching are engaged. In physical science and modern languages instruction is given by the eminent professors in these departments of Cumberland University.

The course of study is very extensive. It is arranged into schools after the plan of the best universities, and pupils are graduated in such schools as they or their parents may elect. Music on piano, harp and guitar.

In the boarding department young ladies enjoy all the comforts of an elegant home. The rooms are large, well ventilated, neatly furnished and newly carpeted. Fires in rooms whenever wanted. The table is bountifully supplied with wholesome food

The location is most favorable in point of health, social refinement and religious privileges.

The health and physical development of boarding pupils are promoted by a system of gymnastic exercises, under a competent teacher, with dumb-bells, wands, rings and Indian clubs, without charge.

The expense of boarding and regular tuition is $250 or $260 a year. Extra branches at usual rates The annual session always begins on the first Monday of September.

GREENE SPRINGS SCHOOL.
HENRY TUTWILER, LL.D., Principal.

THE FIRST TERM of the twenty-fifth scholastic year will Begin OCTOBER 2. The price of board, tuition, use of library, room, fuel and attendance is $90 per term of three months. Washing, sixty cents a dozen. The situation is healthful and retired. In twenty-four years there has been but one death among the students, and that from pneumonia in the winter. Students can reach the Springs by Selma, Marion and Memphis railroad to Greensboro, thence by stage fifteen miles to Havana, within three miles of the Springs; or by Alabama and Chattanooga railroad to a point within six miles of the Springs. The College of the Holston Conference.

THE TWELFTH ANNUAL SESSION of this well-known institution will begin OCTOBER 4, 1871, and continue forty weeks.

FACULTY.

R. W. JONES, M. A., of the University of Virginia, President.

Rev. W. G. E. CUNNYNGHAM, D. D., Professor of Moral Philosophy and Belles Lettres.

Miss MAGGIE J. TUCKER, Preceptress.

Miss ANNIE M. RHODES, Drawing and Painting.

F. L. FUNK, Professor of Music, with a full corps of assistants in each department

Board and English tuition, for term of twenty weeks, from $95 to $105.

No extra charge for Latin or Greek. Charges for the other branches moderate. All charges to be paid in advance.

The course of instruction embraces every subject of a solid and finished education.

The system of instruction is that of the University of Virginia, at which the President graduated as Master of Arts.

The college buildings are substantial brick structures, commodious, comfortable and elegant.

The grounds have been laid out with exquisite taste, and present an appearance of surpassing loveliness.

All the associations and surroundings are such as to cultivate the taste and refine the feelings.

Abingdon, situated on the Virginia and Tennessee railroad, eight miles from Emory and Henry College, and fifteen from Bristol, amid the mountains of southwestern Virginia, is noted for the beauty and grandeur of the surrounding scenery, a balmy atmosphere, general healthfulness and refined society. Mineral waters abound in its vicinity.

Parents in the South cannot find a place in the United States where the influences are more favorable for the perfect development of the physical constitution, and where educational advantages of a higher order are afforded.

Scientific.

CORRELATION OF THE VITAL FORCES. The beautiful principle of the correlation of forces is being constantly verified by new observations increase. The latest case is the fulfilment of a scientific prediction by Dr. Combe, who discovered the law of the mechanical equivalent heat. He said in 1843: "If an animal were engaged in turning a piece of machinery or in ascending a mountain, I apprehend that in proportion to the muscular effort put forth for the purpose, a diminution of the heat evolved in the system by a given chemical action would be experienced." The proposition that muscular exertion is at the expense of bodily heat, and that, therefore, great exercise runs down the vital temporature, have been recently confirmed by Drs. Corfield and Lortet. Dr. Lortet found that in ascending Mont Blanc the temperature of his body fell from 97.3 degree Fahrenheit to 89 6 degree Fahrenheit. He also found when on his way up that if he stopped a few moments the temperature of his body rose briskly to the normal standard; but on the summit itself it was some half hour in coming up to the same point. His pulse, which was 64 per minute at Chamouni, rose in frequency during the ascent, and beat at the rate of 172 per minute at the top. His breathing was much quickened; the inspirations were more shallow and the expirations prolonged; much less air being inspired and expired than usual. Dr. Corfield's observations in ascending Mount Etna were mainly directed to the condition of the pulse, which beat 68 per minute at the start and became very irregular and rose to 115 per minute as he reached the summit.

The great fatigue which results from the mountain ascents has hitherto been regarded as altogether out of proportion to the work accomplished, and has been largely attributed to alteration of external conditions, such as diminished pressure and the breathing of an attenuated atmosphere. Dr. Corfield, on the contrary, believes that the amount of work done is quite sufficient to account for the extraordinary fatigue, and shows that during his own ascent of Etna he was doing the work of three average laborers, and this without being accustomed to that kind of exercise. The explanation of the lowered temperature and its quick recovery when at rest, which occurred in Dr. Lortet's case, is probably this: His fund of bodily power over and above that required for the maintenance of the functions, was soon exhausted by the excessive exercise; and after that, if the exercise was continued, it must be partially at the expense of the other functions, as in this instance it was at the expense of the normal supply of animal heat.

VEGETATION OF THE SEA.—In the transparent waters of the Pacific, the vegetation of the sea displays its greatest splendor and richness. Various kinds of moss, of the greatest tenderness and the most splendid blending of colors, forming the richest Oriental carpets that fancy's witchcraft is able to produce, are spread out in enormous dimensions. In the season of calms we can admire the wonderful nuances of their colors, in a depth of more than one hundred yards. On the slopes of the elevations at the bottom of the sea is the silky Anferina, its ribbed branches resembling trimmings of silk; and small, purple-red algæ, which, when standing together, give a red luster to the sea. Sea weed, or fucus, forming extensive meadow grounds in the Atlantic ocean, is growing here also. These plants, when by some accident torn off from their native standing place, swim for years on the surface of the water without fading; and we see them floating thousands of miles distant from their original place. A collection of floating berry sea weed, extending from the Azores, near Cape de Verde, and covering a space of sixty thousand square miles, gives to this part of the Atlantic the name of the Sargasso sea, from the botanical name of the sea weed, Sargassum baccifernm.

STARVED ROCK AND GLASS MAKING. Starved Rock, a shaft of sandstone, whose base has been washed by the waters of the Illinois river from time immemorial, and which attracted the gaze of the traveler, has now a commercial value, for it is in the center of the great coal basin, that for ages must have a most decided influence in the history of the West. This sandstone, which has been forced up through two thousand feet of rock shasta, and thus made accessible to man, is the glass-maker's sand — the saccharoidal sandstone, or the St. Peter sandstone of the geologists.

THERE is a telegraph operator in the West who can receive a message on one circuit and transmit it on a second, simultaneously, with ease and rapidity. This operator is a young lady.

MINISTERS decline in power when they cease to grow, and they cease to grow when they cease to study.

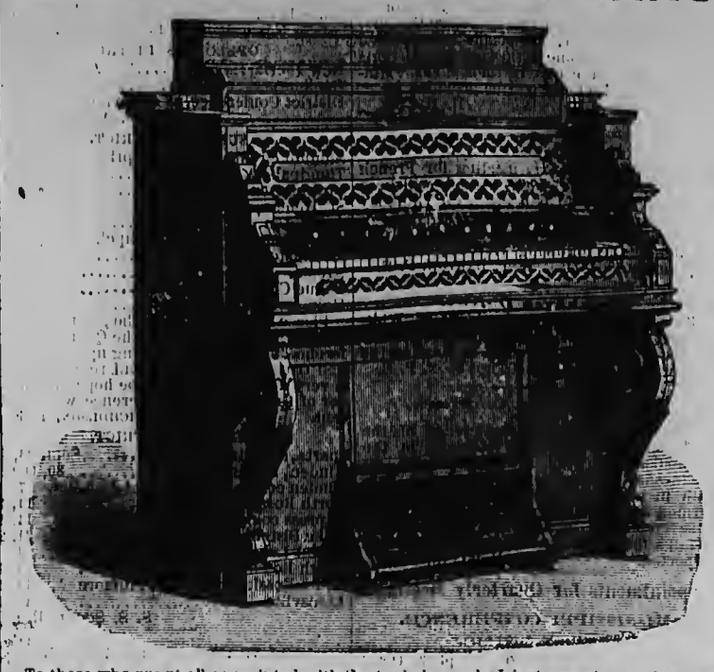
ROBERT J. HARP,

NO. 112 CAMP STREET, NEW ORLEANS,

AGENT FOR THE SOUTHWESTERN STATES FOR THE SALE OF

GEORGE WOODS & CO.'S

PARLOR And CHURCH ORGANS.



To those who are at all acquainted with the trade in musical instruments, or those conversant with the improvements that during the last twenty years have been made in that most popular of instruments, the Reed Organ, it is entirely superfluous to speak of the reputation or ability of the firm of GEO. WOODS & CO; We will however, mention, for the benefit of any who may be without information on the subject, that the senior partner, Mr. Geo. Woods, has been engaged in the manufacture of Organs for many years, that he is the inventor of many valuable improvements and ingenious devices, and that his coadjutors in the business are all men extensively known to the trade as being possessed of uncommon skill, taste and experience in their different branches.

In offering our Instruments to the notice of all interested in music, we merely ask a comparison between those of our manufacture and those of others, and briefly mention upon what points in our Instruments we base our claims of superiority to the productions of our competitors in business:

QUALITY OF TONE.

Its Purity, Clearness and Brilliancy, Extraordinary Power,
CAPACITY FOR VARIETY, AND BEAUTY OF EFFECT,

Which is owing in a great measure to the excellence of our famous SOLO STOPS,

VOX HUMANA AND VOX CELESTE,

which differ materially in their construction and effects from other Stops of the same or similar name.

Our MANUAL SUB-BASS: smooth as well as effective in quality of tone.
PATENTED INVENTIONS AND INGENIOUS DEVICES.
Our method of employing SOLO SETS in separate WIND CHESTS.
IMPROVED VALVES AND WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.
THOROUGHNESS OF CONSTRUCTION AND ELEGANCE OF DESIGN.

All material used in the construction of our Instruments will be found to be strictly of the best quality. Our workmanship will also be found to be of a very high order.

The Cases are constructed with a proper regard to the laws of sound, having acoustic chambers at the ends of the case.

The Fronts of Keys are Ivory, and are not of Holly wood.

The Carvings are hand-made.

The Stops are of Ebony and Ivory, engraved by hand.

Special attention is called to these Organs. Price Lists and Catalogues, containing full particulars of the many numbers, sizes, varieties and prices—ranging from $110 to $650—will be mailed to any one on application.

☞ All Instruments will be thoroughly examined and shipped in good order. Therefore parties can safely order without coming to select. Address

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the Daily Republican.

[illegible]

The weather was clear and pleasant until Monday when it was raining nearly the entire day. On Tuesday it was cloudy and showery. Our commerce from the country was still discouraging. From some quarters we learn of the crops suffering from drought and in many sections from excessive rains. Planters and country merchants complain of never seeing such dull times in the history of last year's trade and when matters of prompt remittance for supplies is a question that we have to contend with a large falling off.

The river is 14 feet 6 inches above high water mark.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

China Grove Camp Meeting.

MR. EDITOR: This camp meeting began Friday night, September 8, and closed the Wednesday following at an hour by sun.

At the first service the congregation numbered more than twelve hundred persons, the largest we have ever had at the beginning. The first sermon struck the right key, and the good work of salvation at once began, and from service to service it gathered new strength and new trophies. The congregation on the encampment also increased from hour to hour till on Sabbath, at eleven o'clock, there were between five and six thousand persons on the ground. Of this number there were between three and four thousand persons at and under the arbor, the largest congregation that I have ever seen at the place, and I have attended every meeting from the first. To assist in the great and glorious work of salvation there were twenty-one ministers of our church present, besides, several ministers of other churches were upon the ground. The preaching was direct, earnest, and purely scriptural, and sometimes doctrinal, touching and holding the great doctrines of our church. The praying was in faith and power, reaching, in its mighty grasp, the throne of mercy and salvation, and salvation came. The singing was with the spirit and understanding also. Hence, by this trinity of forces—preaching, praying and singing—the strongholds of wickedness were made to tremble, and the serried lines to waver and fall back. This advantage of success was at once perceived, and the trumpet-notes of gospel truth rang in trembling sweetness all up and down the columns of Zion, bidding the mighty host to a determined and united movement, which was most successfully and gloriously accomplished, amid continued and cheering shouts of victory. Thus this blessed work went on till Tuesday morning, at eight o'clock service, when the success was so great that it moved on to twelve, without any more preaching from the pulpit. At four o'clock of the same day the work was renewed, and the shout of victory began at five and was continued, without intermission, till two next morning. Just think of it! A victorious shout running through nine hours! During this time of times there were supposed to be more than fifty bright and powerful conversions. During this unequaled time of God's holy presence there were near five hundred happy Christians at one time, and the sound of praise was as the voice of many waters. Such times were never seen or heard of in this portion of the country before. The Rev. Zacheus Dowling, who has been in the ministry fifty-five years, says he never saw it surpassed, and not even equaled. The old men of this land unite in the same statement. As proof in fact of this great and good work, let me say the conversions were estimated to be two hundred and the accessions one hundred and ten. Many of those converted were already members of the church, and a goodly number under Baptist influence, and will, doubtless, join that church.

At eleven o'clock, on Sunday, a missionary collection was lifted, which added up three hundred dollars, cash and subscribed.

The good order of the people was the subject of commendation by all visiting brethren and friends.

The next camp meeting at China Grove will commence, as heretofore, on Friday night before the second Sabbath in next September.

ANGUS DOWLING.

OZARK, ALABAMA, September 14, 1871.

Farmersville Circuit, Alabama Conference.

MR. EDITOR: We have had some good old Methodist times on Farmersville circuit. I have had three protracted meetings:

First. At Hickory Hill. Church membership much revived. Many were converted, and fifteen were added to the church. This meeting continued six days. Had no ministerial help.

Second. At Ash Creek. Continued six days. Membership greatly revived. Six members added to the church, and several conversions. This meeting embraced the time of our third Quarterly Conference, on the Saturday before the third Sabbath in August, and we had the valuable services of Bro. Hudson, our presiding elder, for three days.

Our third meeting embraced the first of September, commencing the Saturday before, and continuing for seven days. Church greatly blessed and revived. There were many conversions and twelve additions to the church. The first three days of this meeting we had the valuable services of Bro. Dow Perry, Bible agent, and Bro. Purifoy, local preacher from Oak Hill circuit. Bro. Wilson, local preacher, was also present, and preached one time.

On the morning this meeting commenced I was thrown from my horse, and came very near being killed; but the Lord has saved my life, and, although I am yet suffering from the bruises, yet I have been enabled to preach and attend to all my duties. Bless the Lord.

Yours respectfully,

JOSEPH M. SCOTT.

FARMERSVILLE, Sept. 13, 1871.

Wilkinson Circuit, Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: I have just closed a meeting at Macedonia, which lasted nine days. The Lord blessed his word and made it the power of God unto salvation in the conversion of many precious souls. We had thirty-three accessions to the church, some of them heads of families. Bros. P. S. Petty and B. F. White were with us, and did excellent work. Bro. White, presenting the claims of Centenary, raised here one hundred and twenty-five dollars, in cash and subscribed. J. H. SHELTON.

THE WESTERN CONFERENCE.

Bishop Marvin, writing to the St. Louis Advocate, says of the recent session of the Western Conference which was held at Council Grove, Kansas:

There was a very general attendance of the preachers. Of the lay delegates there were but few present—not more than six or seven.

The business was entered upon in good spirit on Wednesday morning, and conducted with promptness and intelligence to the end.

The matter of support is in a better way in the Conference generally than I feared. Still a great part of the work is unorganized, and there is crying need for missionary aid. The five thousand dollars appropriated by the Parent Board was scarcely sufficient. There were no claimants upon the Conference collection.

The claim for the support of the Bishops was fully met.

There has been cheering progress in the work during the past year. Upon a membership of 1538 the increase was over 600.

The public worship of the Conference occasion was profitable. The preaching was searching and thorough. On Sunday a revival interest arose, and at night four persons joined the church. The meeting was to be protracted.

The preachers went to their work in the best spirits, so far as I could judge. The session closed on Saturday night, the appointments being read out at the close of the missionary meeting. Thirty-five preachers received appointments. Besides this, several local preachers are ready to supply circuits.

I cannot omit to note that the leading men of the Conference are resolved to keep the tone of the itinerancy high. They hold the preachers to a rigid account. They will have no hangers on. This is right. The whole system will fail without the highest degree of promptness and energy.

THE Pope the other day thus advised the young men of Rome: "Never hold in your hand a newspaper of whatever color it be; and in particular, remember that things vomited by hell cannot be read or touched without sin."

Rev. Charles Glidden Young, M. D.

The following biographical sketch of the beloved and lamented Dr. Young is taken from the Family Visitor, published in Houston, Texas. The article is, of course, from the pen of the editor, Rev. B. T. Kavanaugh, D.D.:

Rev. Charles Glidden Young, M. D., was the son of Rev. Daniel Young, of New Hampshire, one of the most useful and laborious ministers of the Methodist Church in olden times, in New England, a history of whose life has been published, which forms a part of the history of Methodism in that part of New England.

Dr. Charles Glidden Young was born on the Connecticut river, in the State of New Hampshire, on the ninth of April, 1816, where he grew up to early manhood, accustomed by diligent application to the improvement of his mind, and a close attention to business. When in his youth, he, with his father's family removed to the State of Ohio, where he studied the science of medicine, and in due time graduated in the medical school in New York, and entered upon the practice of his profession in North Alabama, about the year 1834.

In the year 1842 he returned to Cincinnati, Ohio, and was united in marriage to Miss Maria Louisa Chamberlain, of that city, and removed to Greenwood, Louisiana, the same year, where he continued to practice medicine for fifteen years. Soon after, while residing in Marshall, Texas, he was elected president of the Vicksburg and Texas railroad, under whose supervision the work on that road was commenced and progressed up to the breaking out of the late war between the States, when the work was suspended.

In the year 1864, during the war, Dr. Young became interested in the development of the resources of the country, and undertook the erection of a large establishment in Cherokee county, Texas, for the manufacture of iron from the ore found in that section of country, of fine quality and in great quantities. His efforts here were pushed forward with great energy and skill until the works were about completed, when, from a great loss by fire and the explosion of some of the works, the enterprise was abandoned, as the demand for iron at the close of the war had ceased.

He subsequently removed to Rusk, in the same county, when, in reduced circumstances, he was employed as a stationed minister, and was remarkably successful in his work, and was useful in the East Texas Conference, in giving form and system to the financial system of the whole church, which proved very beneficial to the whole Conference.

During his residence in Rusk, he took a very active part in arousing the public mind to the importance and necessity of building the Houston and Great Northern railroad, and it is likely that the success of that great work is more indebted to his efforts, than to any other man.

He was finally elected president of this road, and entered upon the discharge of his duties with that prudence, energy and diligence which characterized his action in everything he undertook. When active operations on this road were about to commence, he removed his family to Houston, where they have remained up to the present time. The duties of his office called Dr. Young to New York, frequently, where he was successful in making every arrangement necessary for the vigorous prosecution of the work upon his road.

When the work was commenced, it was found that he had secured ample grounds for all the purposes of the road in the most favorable localities, and the work was pushed forward with astonishing rapidity. The track having been completed for about twenty-six miles into the interior, on Tuesday, the eighth ultimo, a train was ordered up the road for some purpose, on which Dr. Young, the president; Mr. Noble, the superintendent; Mr. Wilson, the second engineer, and Mr. Turner, with several other gentlemen, took passage.

There being no passenger cars as yet upon the road, Dr. Young and two other gentlemen took temporary seats upon the front end of a platform car, looking up the road; the engine being behind, and the train running backward. About eighteen miles from the city, the train moving at about eleven miles to the hour, and as they neared the fatal spot, the attention of the president and his company was called to a piece of wood put in on the side of the road; no one seemed to notice the piece of wood being upon the track, the engine being behind, until the car struck the log and precipitated the president and two others over the end of the car on to the track, when the cars passed over them. He did not fall upon the rails, but between them. How the fatal injuries were received, no one has been able to determine. The external injuries did not seem sufficient to have caused his death. The train could not be stopped until all the cars had passed over him, and he was found under the V of the cow-catcher.

After having been rescued from his perilous situation, he seemed to be perfectly rational, and at first no serious apprehensions were felt as to the fatal character of his injuries; but it was soon found that some of the vital organs were seriously, if not fatally injured.

He was removed to a house near at hand, and his family sent for. He suffered severely for six or eight hours, and died in quiet peace just before his wife and daughter arrived.

We have been thus minute in giving the details of this most melancholy and disastrous accident, because it resulted in the loss of one of the most able, efficient, and useful men we had in our whole community. Take him all in all, we are justified in saying that in all the elements that go to make up the character of a great man, in a practical and useful sense, we know of no man in our community who was his superior.

As a Christian minister his character shone as bright and as steadily as did his character as a skillful and efficient business man. He was a man of fixed and established principles. So firmly were these established, that he knew no compromise between right and wrong. His talents were of the solid and substantial character—he was not a man of show or display, but of profound thought. His mind was stored with a vast fund of information on all general subjects, and especially was he skilled in the doctrines and principles of Christianity. For a man whose spirit was always calm and self-possessed, he was one of the most zealous Christian ministers we ever knew—zealous in doing good after every possible form.

As a husband and father, he was as uniform and true in his affections and duties as it is possible for human nature to attain. His government in his household combined firmness and affection, blended in an admirable degree.

As a citizen and friend, he was so public spirited that he often sacrificed his own ease and interest for the public welfare. As an officer presiding over the interests of the Houston and Great Northern railroad, associates have assured us that no man in this community can be found who combined so many admirable qualities, and it will be very difficult to fill the place in their board, so suddenly and disastrously made vacant. Surely a great and good man has fallen.

BISHOP DOGGETT.—Bishop Doggett, says the St. Louis Advocate of September 13, reached this city on last Saturday and spent the Sabbath with us, preaching at First church in the morning and at night at the Centenary church. His ministrations were greatly to the edification and comfort of the large congregations waiting upon them. The Bishop took his departure on Monday for the session of the Missouri Conference at Palmyra. He expects to fill all his Episcopal appointments in this State. We are glad to hear of some improvement in the health of his daughter, though she continues very low. In his desire to be at his post he is among us, and he will be gladly welcomed and find cordial and prayerful sympathies.

REVIVALS, says the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist, are progressing in most of our city churches. At Emmanuel there have been about thirty conversions, and the work is increasing in depth and power at every successive meeting. Trinity, St. Paul, and Holland street are all favored with "times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord." A number of conversions and additions are reported, and the interest increasing at last accounts as we go to press.

DREAMS AND REALITIES.

BY PHŒBE CARY.

[The following poem is the last one sent by Phœbe Cary to Harper's Bazar. The Bazar says: "It is the song of the dying swan, tender and sweet and beautiful."]

O Rosamond, thou fair and good,
And perfect flower of womanhood,
Thou royal rose of June,
Why didst thou droop before thy time?
Why wither in the first sweet prime?
Why didst thou die so soon?

For, looking backward through my tears
On thee, and on my wasted years,
I cannot choose but say
If thou hadst lived to be my guide,
Or thou hadst lived and I had died,
'Twere better far to-day.

O child of light, O golden head—
Bright sunbeam for one moment shed
Upon life's lonely way—
Why didst thou vanish from our sight?
Could they not spare my little light
From Heaven's unclouded day?

O friend so true, O friend so good—
Thou one dream of my maidenhood,
That gave youth all its charms—
What had I done, or what hadst thou,
That through this lonesome world till now
We walk with empty arms?

And yet, had this poor soul been fed
With all it loved and coveted—
Had life been always fair—
Would these dear dreams that ne'er depart,
That thrill with bliss my inmost heart,
Forever tremble there?

If still they kept their earthly place,
The friends I held in my embrace,
And gave to death, alas!
Could I have learned that clear, calm faith
That looks beyond the bonds of death,
And almost longs to pass?

Sometimes, I think, the things we see
Are shadows of the things to be;
That what we plan we build;
That every hope that hath been crossed,
And every dream we thought was lost,
In heaven shall be fulfilled;

That even the children of the brain
Have not been born and died in vain,
Though here unclothed and dumb;
But on some brighter, better shore
They live, embodied evermore,
And wait for us to come.

And when on that last day we rise,
Caught up between the earth and skies,
Then shall we hear our Lord
Say: Thou hast done with doubt and death;
Henceforth, according to thy faith,
Shall be thy faith's reward.

MY DISTRICT.

NUMBER THREE.

Mr. Editor: I have already alluded to the importance of keeping Quarterly Conference journals correct in trials. This would be very evident, if an appeal should be taken to the Annual Conference, as the Annual Conference would be confined to the records of the court below. But all the business of a Quarterly Conference should be properly and correctly recorded, so that a review of them might show what had been done at other meetings and in other years. A brother, who had been licensed to preach, might lose his license, but from the records it could be shown that at such a time and place he was, by that Quarterly Conference, granted a license to preach. The secretary might certify to that effect, or if the presiding officer of the conference and secretary are yet living, the license could be written out again and signed and dated. I have known of such a case that was arranged just in that way.

I have seen, what seemed to me, to be great carelessness, if not indifference, in some recording stewards in keeping their journals. A sort of rough minute is written by himself, or a secretary at the Quarterly Conference, which would serve as a guide to him in making his final record, as: Question 1. Answer: No. Question 2. Answer: No. Question 3. Answer: See report marked A. But for the recording steward to enter just that on his journals or record book is to place himself in a position to be laughed at, and to put some one at trouble to find that report, marked A, some day. Yet I have found some journals kept just in that way. I suggested to one such steward that some one might desire to know what those questions were. "O, nobody but Methodists will ever see that journal, and they ought to know what the questions were." Yet, I doubt whether he could have repeated them, if he had been asked to do so. Question 4 of that journal was answered thus: "There was nothing recommended." Question 7. Answer: "See the report of the pastor, marked B."

That report was, perhaps, the most important document of the conference. It told of the state of the church, who had been baptized or received into the church otherwise, who died, who removed, who expelled or withdrawn. Some day we may look for it; but it was not recorded, and is now lost. It may be a matter of great importance to some to know what was in that report; yet it cannot be found, because it was "marked B," and is lost. The church may lose something, because the legal record of membership is lost.

The recording steward should presume on nothing in making his record. He ought to have his Discipline before him, and copy every question as it is in the book, and write out every answer in full—recording the reports in full. Then "A" and "B" may be filed away in the archives for safekeeping. It has been admitted, if not "decided," that the journals of our Quarterly Conference is the only legal evidence of membership in our church. Then every report of the pastor ought to be carefully recorded, and every name in those reports legibly written. And I would entreat our recording stewards to consider how very important is this part of their work.

There is an evil, which I have seen under the sun, and which ought to be removed. It is this: The presiding elder goes to a Quarterly Meeting, and is hoping to have a good meeting—pleasant social time with the preacher of that circuit, as well as a religious time; wants to learn all he can about the circuit, and consult with the preacher about what is best to be done for that circuit; what plans they shall adopt for future operations, so as to get all the church aroused and at work; but he learns, just as the Quarterly Conference closes, that the preacher has an appointment off several miles for Sunday, and will not be with him that night if they have service, nor at the prayer meeting or love-feast next morning; nor at the communion to partake or assist, nor to preach in the afternoon or at night, nor to exhort, nor to take any one into the church. That is enough to make that presiding elder feel that a wet sheet had been thrown on him just as he had left a warm bed! Does that preacher feel any interest in his Quarterly Meeting beyond the pecuniary interest that may be developed in it? Why does he act so? Is he opposed to the presiding eldership or the elder, or is he so far backslidden as not to feel any interest in the success of the Quarterly Meeting, and does not wish to see a good meeting on that occasion? Or, has he such an opinion of his own abilities as a preacher that he cannot waste a Sunday in hearing any one else preach? Such a course is an evil. Official and private members will ask: "Why has the pastor left? Don't he like the elder? Suspicion arises, and questions will be asked. Ten years ago, I had one such preacher in my district. He was with me on Sunday at but one quarterly meeting. Everything went off so well that time that we had a good meeting. One began to arrange for appointments this year. But a plain talk got him out of it. If the evil is anywhere else, I hope it will be uprooted.

There is another evil I have seen, that ought to be eradicated. It is this: Official members—some of them punctual to attend the Quarterly Conferences, too—will leave for home—seven, ten to twenty miles off—so soon as the conference adjourns, and we see no more of them till Saturday of the next Quarterly Meeting. They go home, and spend Sunday without going to church anywhere, without having Sunday school or prayer or class meeting. This is one reason why Quarterly Meetings are not interesting and useful as once they were. Because the meeting is not in their immediate neighborhood, they do not seem to feel any interest in it beyond their official duties in the conference. Had they staid over Sunday they might have caught some holy fire and carried it home and to their churches, and thus have helped to kindle a fire that would have warmed the whole church, and saved many sinners, too.

I hope that all the leaders, stewards, trustees, exhorters and local preachers who may read this, and have been leaving Quarterly Meetings Saturday evening or Sunday morning, will resolve to amend, stay through the meeting, pray and sing and labor for a good meeting. O, how it would help for them to do so. I think we would soon have "old-fashioned" Quarterly Meetings, if brethren would do so. Then we would all leave, feeling like giants, refreshed with new wine. Brethren, will you not do so. P. E.

OLD LANDMARKS.

Mr. Editor: Not long since, a party of our acquaintance, being dissatisfied with the late and peculiar kind of music which is being appropriated to church purposes, wrote a short critique and denounced it as heartless and soulless and unfit for devotion. His criticism brought forth strong denunciations from some, and applause from others. Some argue in favor of changes in our church. They say we are behind the times, that we need something new to keep up with the progress of the age; that our sister churches are introducing them, and the Methodist must do the same. Are we not in great danger in this very particular? If we are to be guided by a love of change and novelty, the church will be certain to suffer. We need break-wheels at this point. Innovations are creeping over us. It is time we begin to watch and endeavor to throw around us strong hedges, lest the most vital interest of our Zion be seriously affected. The reason is evident. The most of the changes through which we are passing are gradual, slow in their progress. Many of good qualities favor them from their apparent harmlessness—some ministers and many laymen. They are to be feared the more from being gradual, and their apparent innocence; if they were otherwise, would be too palpable, hence not tolerated. Men do not become desperadoes in a moment or a day, but by small degrees. The wicked one usually physics in small doses. He weaves by gossamer threads. It is too late when we are bound with a cable to attempt to arrest ourselves. While we have strength is the time to resist. These are practices of the church which, we fear, are drifting us to fatal consequences. The time has arrived when it is rather hazardous to speak of them. They are fashionable. If we do, a thousand stones may fly at us; yet, with all the danger attending the undertaking, it ought to be done. Who is to do it? Will you defend us? If so, we will venture and run all the risks. The word of life says: "Be not conformed to this world." The world and Christianity are antagonistic. We "cannot serve God and Mammon." We cannot follow the maxims and practices of the world, and be consistent Christians. What is true of men, as individuals, is true of them in the aggregate. Therefore, the church cannot follow the ways and customs of the world, and be truly spiritual. Not long since, concerts and fancy suppers were the order of the day, to raise means for church and benevolent purposes. These, no doubt, were innocent in most cases. But they were the beginning of a new era. They had their effects, although sanctioned and even managed, in many places, by the authorities of the church. These, however, were not quite attractive enough; not sufficiently novel to suit the world, and accomplish the desired end; therefore, tableaux and miniature theaters were attached to them. The result is evident now to every one: we are now hardly able to raise means in any other way for the church. What next followed them? Calico balls and lotteries; and, in order to give them countenance and tolerance, they are often headed by members in some churches of high authority. It is now no surprise to meet upon the street, in some places, children of those who claim to be Christians, with lottery boxes, petitioning the passer-by to take a chance. If they are asked if this is not a species of gambling, they are ready with the reply: "O, it is for the church!" What is the effect of this upon the mind of the child? Is he not impressed with the idea that we may even gamble and be guilty of no harm, if done for the church? Furthermore, attend our churches now, and what greets us there? Not only the fashions of the world, but often that strange, cold and lifeless artistic music of the opera; foreign in its origin and foreign in its effects to religion. From whom did we get all these things? Where did they originate? Are they not offsprings of Catholicism—that the end justifies the means. Ah! says one, we must have all these to keep our church alive and moving. We must have our concerts, etc., to raise means necessary to the support of the church; must have operatic music to make the service of our God attractive, and to keep our children in our church; our sister churches have them, and if we do not, all our young people will be lead over to them. We must do wrong, therefore, to keep our children at home. Our neighbors have their sparkling beverages, and feed their children upon them; we must do the same, lest our children lose respect for us. Is it true our religion needs external mixtures and influences to give it success? If so, it is a failure. To argue this shows a distrust in God, and a greater confidence in ceremonies and outward means than in the genuineness of our holy religion. The distinctive feature of Methodism, in former days, was spiritually; that was the sole ground of her unparalleled success; she lived through storms of persecution; while kept free from the world. Must she now, when strong, extending her mighty arms across the world, resort to worldly policies in order to give her influence, and to help her on to conquest and victory? The history of the church shows plainly that all denominations have prospered spiritually in proportion to their devotedness to God; while, on the other hand, worldliness has been a cause of declension. If we pander to the world; if we, in order to be popular, follow the example of others, our holy Shekinah will depart, and leave us a body without life or power. The mission of our church never was popularity; if we seek it as a means of prosperity, we fail to comprehend our calling. May we begin to amend, and search for the old landmarks of our former prosperity and success, and pursue the old ways of our fathers—that of usefulness and true holiness.

OBSERVER.

Few Thoughts on the Duty of the Church to Educate Young Men for the Ministry.

BY REV. JULIUS T. CURTISS.

NUMBER TWO.

Mr. Editor: Our Book of Discipline has a very wise and judicious provision in it, in reference to a call to the ministry, and the reception of all such as profess to be moved upon to take upon themselves the office of a minister in the church, (see page 59, chapter iii); and I think the spirit of this provision should apply, in some sort, to this subject, now in hand.

Before we can take up a young man, and apply the money which has been appropriated for the education of young men for the ministry, we must be satisfied that he is going to meet the expectations of the church; we should have some means of trial. He must be put upon trial; and I suggest something like the following: When a young man feels moved upon by the Holy Ghost to preach, let his case be brought before the society of which he is a member, and after strict examination as to his call to the work, and as to his gifts and graces, then, if he is found worthy, let him be recommended to the Quarterly Conference for license to preach. Then let him be employed by a presiding elder on some work, under an experienced preacher, who will care for and encourage and assist the young man, and at the end of two years, if he is found to be useful and adapted to the work of the ministry, let the Quarterly or District Conference recommend him to the Ministerial Educational Association, as a suitable and proper person to be received as a beneficiary into their association, and then let him be educated. It occurs to me that some such plan of trial is indispensable, and must be adopted. There must be some kind of discrimination in order to save us from reducing and degrading the ministry down to that of a profession. The church cannot, just at this time, provide for the education of all the young men in the land. I wish she could. And as we only propose to educate such as are called to the work of the ministry and design entering upon that work, let us know, as far as we can, who we are aiding—that the church fund be not thrown away. This Ministerial Aid Association has no right or authority to apply the fund coming into its treasury to the education of a man, simply from his statement, that he intends or expects to be a preacher. Mistakes have already occurred right here, and they are likely to occur again and again. There are difficulties arising here that must be considered well, and guarded against; at least they must be met in some way.

When, after due trial, we find a young man who can pass muster, we unhesitatingly say that it is the imperative duty of the church to educate him. The day is passed for educating our ministry on horseback, and graduating them in bush colleges. And I do sincerely hope this old fogy idea will die out, and we may hear of it no more; for it is a fatal error and a hinderance to the prosperity of the church. I would not, for any consideration, disparage our dear brethren in the ministry to-day, whose educational advantages were poor and limited. No, not by any means, for I can sympathize with them deeply, for none or but few of them had advantages inferior to mine. But I would, by all possible means, encourage and stimulate them to diligence and study; that they may educate themselves, now that they are already in the ministry. But I must be allowed to say, from a sincere conviction of its truth, that the want of an educated ministry in our church has served as a great drawback or hinderance for years past. I hail with heartfelt joy and sincere gratitude every evidence of substantial and increased prosperity in our beloved church everywhere, in all her bounds. But, at the same time, I am pained to see so little doing, that needs so much to be done, for the greater efficiency and prosperity of the church. But I cherish the hope, however, and will indulge the confident and pleasing expectation, that our church, alive in so many other noble deeds of usefulness and enterprise, may be made to see that it is to her vital interest and best welfare to set to work to bring up the standard of education in her ministry, so as that it may become diffusive and general. The world is becoming better educated every year. Great discoveries and advancements are being made in every branch or department of science and literature. There never has been a time in the world's history when education excited the entire people so much, and when such interest was manifested as at the present day.

More is being done for educating the rising generation than at any former period of our country's history. And, in consideration of this very important truth, it is clearly the duty of the church to educate her ministry; for we must understand one very important truth, and it is this: A call to the ministry, however clear and unmistakable it may be, does not, by any sort of means, imply all the other useful and necessary qualifications for the solemn and responsible functions of a minister in the church of God. Still, God has called many unlettered, uneducated men to preach, and they have accomplished much good in the world; and it may be that he will call such again, and very likely he will, but that does not relieve the church from the responsibility at all. She must do what she can to educate them. If the people are becoming better educated, as a matter of course, they will expect the church to supply them with an educated ministry to preach to them.

Then there are gross and fatal errors in the church and in the world, which must be met and rooted up and cast out. The enemies of the church and of the cross are more numerous and insidious to-day than ever before, perhaps; and they have insinuated their false and blasting errors into the very life-blood and heart of the church. To-day, the amount of brazen, bold-faced infidelity, that is found in the church even, is frightful and alarming. And these errors and this infidelity feed and fatten, I awfully fear, upon the ignorance of the ministry. Romanism, Ritualism, High Churchism and a thousand other isms, and gross errors and false and strange doctrines must be met and defeated. And how is it to be done? To do this great work, we must have a better and a more general and diffusively educated ministry.

Methodist Protestants in Mississippi.

Mr. Editor: If you will allow me an humble space in your columns I will endeavor to correct what I conceive to be the legitimate impression made by an article that appeared in your paper of the twenty-ninth of June, from the pen of Rev. P. H. Napier, and which reached us a few days ago, copied in the Methodist Protestant of the fifth inst. This article contains the sad intelligence that "several circuits of the Mississippi District of the Methodist Protestant Conference were unsupplied at the closing up of union, and were still without pastoral care" when it was written. If, indeed, the union was closed up at the time referred to, then the plain inference is that we have been neglected by our friends, with whom we have negotiated a union; that the present destitute condition of the "circuits" referred to is the result of their negligence, or want of interest in our spiritual well-being. This impression seems to have gone forth at least. Whether the writer intended it or not, which I do not think he did, there is one thing of which I feel satisfied: That the facts contained in the union transaction between the two bodies do not warrant an impression like this. In the first place, with due respect for the opinion of our respected brother, we deny that the "union" has been "closed up," unless such a thing could have been effected contrary to the spirit and design of our Conference. It never was anticipated that the union should be practically effected before its next annual meeting; hence, it made no other arrangement, nor could it have done so, in my humble judgment, with any degree of practicability, for reasons too obvious to be mentioned. It did not make arrangement, but has now means on foot to carry into practical effect the much desired union, if, under the providence of God, it should meet again. The proof of what I here claim in behalf of our Conference, the committee of the Crystal Springs Conference will, doubtless, bear me testimony, that when before them, together with C. F. Gillespie, my colagont, negotiating terms for union with the body which they represented, I told them that which I implied as much—that is, that I wanted no work at their hands that we had work assigned us in our Conference, and that we would continue in that relation until it was dissolved; also, that the union resolution of our Conference anticipated that the whole Conference year should be devoted to the election, return, etc. Now, if these declarations were at variance with the doings and designs of our Conference, why did not Bro. Gillespie so show? He did not. If, then, the doings of our Conference are contained in the former, then this fact is deducible that two months previous to the enunciation, our Conference supplied these then, and now, destitute "circuits," or at least, to my certain knowledge, it did, by its sovereign authority, appoint Bro. Napier to the Madison circuit, which was "unsupplied at the closing up of the union," and of which he now complains is still unsupplied, except such services as a local brother could render. Now, it is clear that if the design of our Conference, contained in these declarations, made before the Crystal Springs Conference or committee thereof, had been carried out, the district would have had a presiding officer to have watched over its interest, and supplied its waste places "with the bread of life," and the necessity for calling the attention of the presiding elders and preachers of the Mississippi District of the Methodist Episcopal Church to our destitute condition would not have existed.

AUTUMN WOODS.

Ere in the Northern gale
The summer tresses of the trees are gone,
The woods of autumn, all around our vale,
Have put their glory on.

The mountains that unfold
In their wide sweep, the colored landscape round.
Seem groups of giant kings in purple and in gold,
That guard enchanted ground.

I roam the woods that crown
The upland, where the mingled splendors glow;
Where the gay companies of trees look down
On the green field below.

My steps are not alone
In these bright walks; the sweet southwest, at play,
Flies, nestling where the painted leaves are strewn
Along the winding way.

And far in heaven, the while,
The sun, that sends the gale to wander here,
Pours out on the fair earth his quiet smile—
The sweetest of the year.

Let in through all the trees
Come the strange rays; the forest depths are bright;
Their sunny colored foliage, in the breeze
Twinkles like beams of light.

The rivulet, late unseen,
Where flickering through the shrubs, the waters run,
Glows with the image of its golden screen
And glimmerings of the sun.

But 'neath yon crimson tree,
Lover to listening maid might breathe his flame,
Nor mark, within its roseate canopy,
Her blush of maiden shame.

Oh, Autumn! why so soon
Depart the hues that make the forest glad;
Thy gentle wind and thy fair sunny noon,
And leave the wild and sad?

Ah! 'twere a lot too blest
For ever in thy colored shades to stray;
Amid the kisses of the soft southwest
To roam and dream for aye.

And leave the vain, low strife
That makes men bad; the tug for wealth and power;
The passions and the cares that wither life
And waste the little hour.

WE SHALL MEET THEM.

BY H. B. WARDWELL.

We shall meet them again—the departed,
But not as in days that have fled,
When the joy that their presence imparted,
Like light on our pathway was shed.

We shall meet them again, we shall meet them
But not 'mid these scenes of decay,
And not where the visions that greet them,
Unfold with a transient ray.

We shall meet them again o'er the river,
Where the billows of death never roll,
Where pleasures undying, forever
Encircle the path of the soul.

We shall meet them again at the portal
That leads to the mansions of rest;
We shall know them where beauty immortal
Unfolds in the clime of the blest.

We shall meet them again! O, the gladness,
The peace that the meeting shall bring;
Where the death angel comes not with sadness
To hush the glad anthems they sing!

We shall meet them again, we shall meet them
But not 'mid these scenes of decay,
But where the blest visions that greet them
Unfold with celestial array.

GRACE.

BY REV. LEMUEL S. POTWIN.

Is he not a benefactor who restores to a Christian word some of its lost beauty? Such a service will be attempted in this article.

Grace has lost its gracefulness. In its stiff and ungainly place in the theological dictionary it is labeled "Undeserved Favor." In religious discourse the words Divine Grace are a sort of "catch-all," including almost everything good and helpful, without designating anything in particular. If Christians who use this phrase so freely were asked imperatively, "What do you mean by it?" one would answer, "I mean the Holy Spirit," another, "I mean God's goodness," and another, "God's help," and so on. On being put to reflection, they would all include in the term every manifestation of God's mercy, from the grossest bodily comfort to the most subtile spiritual aid. But why all these, or any, are called grace, they cannot tell. For the very reason that the word has no striking individuality to their minds, they employ it as a convenient receptacle for "all and sundry" ideas of divine goodness.

The same word is applied blindly to man's character. His virtues, considered as the fruit of regeneration, are called Christian graces. Who can tell why? If you say because they are produced by divine grace, we are brought back to the indefiniteness just spoken of, or to the cold formalities of the dictionary.

Grace has a meaning of its own; not strongly asserted nor easily defined, but real. It is a word hard to weigh and measure. It imparts all the while more meaning than it keeps; is, so to speak, rather a fragrance than a substance. We can catch some of its meaning if we follow one line of its history.

Before the Greek became the language of the New Testament, it had grown exquisitely capable of expressing the beautiful, both in its vocabulary and its whole structure. One of its words of beauty was kharis, which through the Latin gratia and the French gives us grace. Greek mythology had its Kharites—Graces—three maidens with beautiful faces and graceful motions. They were the goddesses who blessed the world with gentle, winning ways and favoring smiles. They smoothed the roughnesses of life with courtesy, and crowned the toiling with graceful honors. What, then, was grace among the polished Greeks? Not quite the same as beauty. They had another word for beauty of form and color and beauty of inanimate things. Grace was beauty of manner. He was graceful who had a beautiful way of doing things, whether his face were handsome or ugly. How finely adapted, then, was this word for the moral sphere! How easily transferred to beauty of character!

Here is the loss. Grace, in its religious use, has lost the idea of beauty. So completely is this the case that, in reading the Bible, many people give the world a theological sense in passages where it does not have even the moral meaning—e. g., "They shall be an ornament of grace unto thy head."—Prov. i, 9. "For the grace of his lips the king shall be his friend."—xxii, 11. And probably Zach. iv, 7: "He shall bring forth the head-stone thereof with shoutings, crying: Grace, grace unto it."

Now for the restoration. What are Christian graces in human character? They are the virtues considered as ornaments to the soul, as we read of the "ornament of a meek and quiet spirit." This adorning is not external, but in the very attitude of the inner man. It is moral and spiritual beauty. In this view read the exhortation of Paul in his charity appeal: "See that ye abound in this grace also," and see in it the beauty of liberal giving. Read those deeper words of Peter: "Grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ," and see in them a beautiful conformity to him who is altogether lovely."

How does this apply to God and his grace? Here I raise no dispute with theology. Grace means what theology claims, only more. Searching down to the root of the word, we cannot separate the idea of favor from the charm and sweetness that accompany it. Grace is not a dull stream, flowing from a barren rock. It is a sparkling pool, where graceful vines spread their shade and sweet flowers dip their petals. It is worth mentioning that the word "favor," in old English, often meant good looks, as in the passage: "Favor is deceitful, and beauty is vain." A smile of genuine kindness—what is more beautiful?

What then is God's grace? Not simply his favor for sinners, his mercy, his goodness. It is all these; but with them the idea that they are beautifully becoming to God. Grace is the harmony and gracefulness of goodness. It is not merely love, but beautiful love. It is love arrayed in its charms, love beaming with smiles, love bending over the needy. Human virtues are graces. God's great love is his grace—the one eternal beauty of his character.

Now, this view of the word may be exaggerated. The idea of beauty is not the main thing, but the distinguishing thing. To speak of the grace of God comes as near to calling Jehovah beautiful as reverence will allow. Indeed, there is one passage of Scripture which, in its English garb, boldly breaks over this restraint. Let us enjoy it while we can, before the "revisers" snatch it away. That grand dirge, the Ninetieth Psalm, lights up its close with the word: "Let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us." Can we not hear an echo of this in the New Testament benediction: "The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ be with you all."—Independent.

NO HOUSEHOLD GOD.—A little boy, three years old, whose father was irreligious, spent several months in the dwelling of a godly family, where he was taught the simple elements of divine truth.

The good seed fell into a good and tender soil, and the child learned to note the difference between a prayerless and a Christian dwelling. One day, as some one was conversing with the little fellow about the great and good Lord, the child said:

"We haven't got any God at my papa's house."

Alas! how many such houses there are in our world and land—houses where there is no prayer, no praise, no worship, no God! And what homes are they for children; aye, and for men and women, too! How much better is the pure atmosphere of Christian love than the cold, selfish worldliness of a godless home!

Said an ungodly man: "I never was so near heaven, and probably never shall be again, as when I spent a day in the house of Ebenezer Brown"—a godly Scotchman, who guided his household in the fear of the Lord.

Would that there were more such homes, the memory of which might shed a holy savor over many a wanderer's heart, and lead the sad and lonely one of sorrow and of tears to look forward to the gladness of the eternal gathering, beyond the toil and tears and trials of this weary pilgrimage!

To such homes the weary come for rest, and the troubled for consolation. The Son of Peace is there. Blessed be such homes! and may ours ever be of this number!—British Workman.

HABITS OF FLOWERS.

Flowers have habits, or ways of acting, just as people have. I will tell you about some of them.

All flowers naturally turn toward the light, as if they loved it. You can see this if you watch plants that are standing near the window. The flowers will all be bent toward the light, if you let the pots stand in the same way all the time. By turning the pots a little every day or two while the blossoms are opening, you can make the flowers look in different directions.

There are some flowers that shut themselves up at night, as if to go to sleep, and open again in the morning. Tulips do this. I was once admiring in the morning some flowers that were sent to me the evening before by a lady. Among them were some tulips, and out of one of these, as it opened, flew a bumble bee. A lazy, drowsish bee he must have been, to be caught in this way as the flower was closing itself for the night. Or, perhaps, he had done a hard day's work in gathering honey, and just at night was so sleepy that he staid too long in the tulip, and so was shut in. A very elegant bed the old bee had that night. I wonder if he slept any better than he would have done if he had been in his homely nest.

The pond lily closes its pure white leaves at night, as it lies upon its watery bed. But it unfolds them again in the morning. How beautiful it looks as it is spread out upon the water in the sunlight! The little mountain daisy is among the flowers that close at night, but is as bright as ever on its "slender stem" when it wakes up in the morning. When it shuts itself up, it is a little round green ball, and looks something like a pea. You would not see it in the midst of the grass if you did not look for it. But look the next morning, and the ball is opened, and shows "a golden turf within a silver crown." And very beautiful it is, when there are so many of the daisies together, that the grass is spangled with them in the bright sun. It is supposed that this flower was at first called "day's eye," because it opens its eye at the day's dawn, and after a while it became shortened to daisy.

The golden flower of the dandelion are shut up every night. They are folded up so closely in their green coverings that they look like buds that had never yet been opened.

There is one curious habit which the dandelion has. When the sun is very hot, it closes itself up to keep from wilting. It is in this way sheltered in its green covering from the sun. It sometimes, when the weather is very hot, shuts itself up as early as nine o'clock in the morning.

Some flowers hang down their heads at night, as if they were nodding in their sleep; but in the morning they lift them up again to welcome the light.

Some flowers have a particular time to open. The evening primrose does not open till evening, and hence comes its name. The flower named four o'clock opens at that hour in the afternoon. There is a flower commonly called go-to-bed-at-noon, that always opens in the morning and shuts up at noon.

Most flowers last for some time; but there are some that last only a few hours. The red flowers of the delicate and rich cypress vine open in the morning, and in the afternoon they close up, never to open again.

It is delightful to one who loves flowers to see every morning a new set of these bright blossoms appear among the dark green leaves of this vine.—Worthington Hooker.

HAWTHORN ON MACAULAY.—I had been more and more impressed by the aspect of one of the guests. He was a man of large presence—a portly personage, gray-haired, but scarcely as yet aged; and his face had a remarkable intelligence, not vivid nor sparkling, but conjoined with great quietude—and if it gleamed or brightened at one time more than another, it was like the sheen over the broad surface of sea. There was a somewhat careless self-possession, large and broad enough to be called dignity; and the more I looked at him, the more I knew he was a distinguished person, and wondered who. He might have been a minister of State; only there is not one of them who has any right to such a face and presence. At last—I do not know how the conviction came—but I became aware that it was Macaulay, and began to see some slight resemblance to his portraits. But I have never seen any that is not wretchedly unworthy of the original.

Do you desire to be made whole. Then let me again remind you, that the place to find the fulfillment of that desire is at the foot of the cross. Stand there and hope in the great Redeemer; there is some life in thee already, the dying Saviour will increase it; stand at the foot of the cross where falls the precious drops of blood, view the flowing of his soul-redeeming blood, and hope thou, nay, believe thou that he shed that blood for thee, and thou art saved.

THE SHEPHERD AND HIS LAMBS.

When the shepherd went to lead his lambs to the pastures of the mountains, he led them in a rough and stony way. And the lambs said: "The way is hard and rough, and wearisome; lead us, we pray thee, in the smooth way." But the shepherd said to the lambs: "The smooth way leads not to my pasture; if ye go in it ye will find no food, and will die; follow me."

And as they went on, and followed the shepherd, the sun arose high, and the heat was great; and the lambs fainted, and said: "Lead us, we beseech thee, into the cool and shady way." But the shepherd said: "The shady way is dark; if ye walk in it ye cannot see my face, and the wolves will pursue you and destroy you; follow me."

And when it was night the lambs were weary; and the shepherd gathered them together, and they laid down and slept. But in the morning, when they awaked, behold one of the lambs strayed away, and was not with them. Then the shepherd said to some of the lambs: "Go seek the lamb which is lost." And they went, and sought till they found it. And as they returned, behold the shepherd came to meet them; and he took the lamb which had been lost and carried it in his bosom. And there was great joy in the presence of the shepherd over the lamb that had been lost and was found.

And as they went up into the mountains the rough way became plain and smooth before them. And they talked with the shepherd, and said: "Why is the way now not rough, but easy?" He answered them: "Because ye have now learned to love my way." Then, when the shepherd had brought his lambs to the pastures upon his mountains, he said to them: "Look abroad now, and behold the end of the ways!" And they looked, and saw that the end of the smooth way was a desert land, in which there were neither pastures nor springs of water. And the end of the shady way was a forest of thorns, in which were wolves and every kind of ravenous beast. And the lambs loved the shepherd, and fed upon the mountains in his presence; neither went any of them astray any more.

Recognition of Friends in Heaven.

A correspondent of the Methodist Home Journal (Philadelphia) writes: "I have been somewhat amused, as well as my patience tried, reading in secular papers: 'Preaching tomorrow, half-past ten A. M.; subject, recognition of friends in heaven.' Will some brother be so kind as to give us an article or sermon on recognition of friends on earth? A poet says:

'What is friendship but a name?
A charm that lulls to sleep,
A shade that follows wealth or fame,
And leaves the wretch to weep.'

Here is where we want the reunion of friends, old friends, old friends who have been long separated by some trivial thing; here is where we want the mantle of charity—not after death. Give me charity here, recognize me here; what shall I care about the recognition of Bishops, elders or laymen, when once seated on an eternal throne, decked with a wreath of deathless laurels; where the rays of the eternal sun will not tarnish the luster of my crown, or the roll of ages move the base of my throne in the presence of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost. A sister on the eastern shore of Maryland, when far in the valley—her husband cried, 'Hold, hold, dear—I want to know if you think now you will recognize us in heaven?' She answered: 'Yes; but if the sight of Christ here on the borders of the land be so great, I think when once in glory, and I fix my immortal gaze on Christ, it will be a century ere I turn to look at the objects glorified by the Lamb!'"—W. T. Magee.

INHERITING THE EARTH.—There was another. This aged poor man, "dependent," as we say, "upon charity for his crust," though really dependent only on God, was endeavoring in his humble way to illustrate our Saviour's promise, that "the meek shall inherit the earth." "I went through my lord's park," said he, "and the great house looked so grand. Well, I said: 'Bless the Lord! it is a fine house.' I didn't envy it, bless the the Lord. But I seemed to enjoy the great house. I said: 'That's mine, surely. I enjoy it, I do.' Then the sheep looked so nice, and the cattle, and the horses; and I said: 'Bless the Lord!' They are all my Father's, and they are all mine.' I didn't want to have them, but I did enjoy them so. And the trees, and the grass, and the plantations all looked so beautiful, I fared to enjoy 'em so. I said: 'Lord, they are all Lord ——'s; but they are all mine, too!' And so they were. Well, indeed, would it have been for their proprietor, an unconverted man, had he been capable of enjoying them in the same sanctified manner."—"The Widow of East Angle," by the Rev. R. W. Vanderkiste.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THE Episcopal church at Springfield, Massachusetts, has recently called a young lady, the graduate of a Massachusetts normal school, to the work of an assistant minister. She is to visit the sick and devote herself to the interests of the Sunday school.

THE Church at Zurich has fallen so completely into rationalism that it has set up a double service and two liturgies—one for the use of the orthodox, the other for the benefit of the free-thinkers! This is "comprehensive" enough to suit the broadest of churchmen.

THE Evangelical churches of the United States reported last year that they had on their rolls about 5,400,000 communicants. According to the National Census the whole population of the country was 38,535,153. Very nearly one-seventh of the inhabitants of the land, therefore, are members of these churches.

MISSIONARY SCHOLARSHIP.—A Baptist missionary in Allahabad, India, is preparing a Hindoo dictionary to contain 37,000 words, or 12,000 more than are included in the largest yet published. This will make a valuable addition to the large number of contributions already made by Christian missionaries to literature and science.

TERRA DEL FUEGO.—A mission has been established on this island. An iron house has been built, and two men have banished themselves to the most inhospitable of all habitable parts of the earth, to carry the gospel to a handful of the most degraded savages. In heroism the present age of Christianity, however unheroic it may seem, will compare favorably in history with the most famous ages of the church.

CHRISTIAN UNION.—The Christian Union is a society which was organized during the war by members of various churches (chiefly Methodists), who disapproved of the active interest which the bodies to which they had belonged took in political questions. Their avowed purpose was to form a church in which political questions should not be considered in any manner. The Christian Union of this city has obtained from "a little fly-sheet," called the Christian Union Fraternal Message, the following statistics of the denomination: Ministers 300, appointments 2000, church organizations 15,000, members 40,000, Sunday schools 900, meeting houses 300, institutions of learning 3, value of property $600,000.

THE REV. J. BALLAGH, of the Reformed Church in America, writes from Japan: "The Emperor's accession to the government, in the revival of Shintoism to the detriment of Buddhism, is a wonderful step of progress and preparation for a true religion. The disestablishment of the Buddhist religion in the government's confiscation of temple glebes and revenues has reduced most of the priests to beggary. Though the people are nearly all Buddhists, yet they care so little for their religion that the withdrawal of government support leave the priesthood destitute. Troops of priests are to be seen daily, in poor and scanty clothing, begging for a pittance from door to door. Others sit out on the thoroughfares, reciting prayers day and night, to receive an occasional cash, in value about the twelfth part of a cent. Their fine temples are going to ruin. At Yeddo, I visited several of them, and felt sorry in some respects to see the evidences of their decay."

THE REV. S. G. MCFARLAND gives in the Presbyterian Foreign Missionary a full review of the ten years of his missionary labors in Siam, closing in September, 1870. In Bangkok, there are now two stations where there is regular and stated preaching. A station was established in 1861 at Petchaburi, where two families have been laboring most of the time. It now has three sub-stations—one in the bazar of the city, one in a village about five miles distant, and the other about fifteen miles off. A station was commenced at Chieng Mai in 1867, and occupied by two families. It has grown to become four principal stations and three sub-stations. The three churches have an aggregate of forty-one members. There is a boarding school at Bangkok and an industrial school at Petchaburi. They have about one hundred pupils. Two native preachers are laboring in connection with the mission. Three candidates are pursuing their studies. Several books, including the New, and nearly half of the Old Testament, have been published in Siamese. The missions are fairly well provided with buildings.

DR. BUNT, in a letter to the Presbyterian, gives some interesting statements with reference to the church customs of the Swiss. The morning hour for service is nine o'clock; the afternoon two; Sunday school at one. "At church men and women sit apart. The men are in a woeful minority, and scarcely require more than the cross seats on either side of the pulpit. The men occupying these seats stand while the minister announces the text, seating themselves immediately after; the matrons occupying the seats just in front of the pulpit bow toward the minister at the conclusion of his sermon. The pews are uncushioned and unpainted. Many, indeed, at our Eglise Nationale are mere benches, without backs. The sermons, too, are long—longer than in most of our American churches. Yet the people, sitting bolt upright, listen carefully to the sermons from beginning to end. It is hardly worth mentioning, yet it is curious enough to a stranger, that no one coughs during the sermon; but that, the sermon being ended, the whole congregation is suddenly seized with a violent fit of coughing, and sounds a perfect chorus of coughs through the lofty spaces of the church. The prayers are partly read, partly extemporized. The liturgy of the National Church of this canton was not long since revised, and is to a gratifying extent truly evangelical and devotional. The preaching which we hear in that church, I am happy to say, is of like character." Independent.

THE religious accommodations of London are thus classified: Church of England 461 places of worship, Congregationalists 200, Baptists 176, Wesleyan Connexion 102, Primitive Methodists 77, United Methodist Free churches 60, Plymouth Brethren 31, Undenominational 25, English Presbyterians 21, Methodist New Connexion 12, Society of Friends 11, United Presbyterians 6, Bible Christians 6, Wesleyan Reformers 5, Church of Scotland 3, Countess of Huntingdon's 2, Calvinistic Methodists 2, Moravians 2, and Calvinists (not otherwise described) 2—making a total of 1204. There are also a vast number of mission halls, school rooms, etc., in which religious services are held. Now, estimating these as equal in number to the church edifices, and remembering that London by the recent census was found to contain three million and a quarter of population, every place of worship would need to have accommodations for 1350 individuals in order to hold all the people. The real capacity of the churches is averagely about one-fourth of this. But then it should be considered that the census includes children of tender years. Probably an accurate estimate would be that only half of London can go to church at present, should it wish to do so.

BISHOP GOBAT'S mission in Palestine, under English auspices, is perhaps less conspicuous than its work should make it. Speaking of what he calls "the worst station in Palestine," he says: "At Salt, in Gilead, beyond Jordan, I have two native agents—Behman, an evangelist, and a pious old man, named Job, laboring as Scripture-reader among the women, reading God's word with them in their houses and teaching them to read. Though hitherto very wild and ignorant, they are almost the only women in Palestine who are anxious to learn to read." But persecuting opposition broke out, which in the end, by awakening sympathy in the hearts of the Arabs, so increased the congregation seeking Christian worship that it has swollen from one hundred to about eight hundred souls. Failing to find any room of size enough for all that would come, or that could be used for schooling purposes, the good Bishop undertook last year the the erection of a chapel, now nearly finished; and, although the year has been one of great scarcity all over the country, and the people, ground down by bad government, oppression, merciless taxation, ignorance, and worse religion, are very poor, they gave $160 toward it, besides a great amount of work.—Independent.

A CORRESPONDENT of the National Baptist writes that Prof. de la Harpe, of the chair of the Old Testament Interpretation, in the Theological Seminary at Geneva, Switzerland, has been engaged since 1846 upon a new translation of the Bible into French, and adds: "Up to 1837, the French version of the Bible was that made in Calvin's time. This was imperfect at first, and various efforts to amend it by incompetent men only increased its obscurity. In 1837, the work of revising the New Testament was begun, and a good translation has now been secured. After that it was deemed best to make a new version of the Old Testament also. For twenty-five years Prof. de La Harpe has been engaged upon it. It passes through the hands of three other scholars before it comes to him. He goes carefully over their work, and then carries it through the press. He seems to be profoundly impressed with the responsibility of his position as the final reviser. He has proceeded now as far as to the Book of Daniel. He told me that he had spent the whole of yesterday on three verses. And pointing to the portions which have been already printed, he said: 'I assure you there is not in all those pages a chapter, nor a verse, nor a word, which I have left without a conscientious feeling that I have done the best I possibly could.'"

CHRIST'S EXAMPLE IN PRAYER.

The force and authority of the Savior's example in prayer are deserving of special consideration. He is our pattern in holy living. A close imitation is necessary in reference to the tempers and conduct in general. The true following of Christ largely consists in building upon his perfect model, and in seeking the mind that was in him. We are to learn of him as the "meek and lowly in heart." The believer is to walk "even as he walked. In this, as in other respects, we are to put on the Lord Jesus Christ. His love is to be the ideal of ours, and his self-denial and submission are to be the aim of his disciples. Likeness to him in spirit and conduct is the great aim and achievement of the Christian life. The Savior's actions were shaped designedly with this purpose. He is always the great teacher, whether speaking or acting, living or dying, working miracles, or discoursing in parables.

His precepts and commands, in reference to prayer, are explicit and full, and his illustrations of it are luminous and inimitable. He twice delivered that summary of all prayer, known as "the Lord's prayer" by way of eminence. He enjoins and re-establishes secret prayer in its truth and purity. He declares the character of it as the condition of the highest blessings of the kingdom, affirming that: "Every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened." The power of persevering and importunate supplication is illustrated in the case of the Syro-Phœnician woman, and in the parable of the unjust judge. Prayer and fasting are connected and enjoined for special ends, as the casting out of certain kinds of evil spirits; and certain eminent subjects of prayer are proposed, as the sending out of laborers into the gospel field, and as a safeguard against temptation.

But He who so emphatically commanded and illustrated this most vital duty, prayed himself. We do not now refer to such occasions as the raising of Lazarus, the agony in Gethsemane, and the petition for his murderers on the cross, but to those incidental glimpses of a praying Savior, which occur in the ordinary progress of his ministry. We pause over a passage like this, which immediately precedes the calling of the twelve apostles: "And it came to pass in those days that he went out into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God." The connection suggests that this season of prayer was in some measure related to the choice of the apostles, but beyond this, it lets us into the devotional habit and life of Jesus. It was secret, it was prolonged, it was importunate. The soul of the Redeemer was there drawn out in earnest supplication and absorbed in divine communion. After the feeding of the five thousand, and the dismissal of the disciples and the multitude, the narrative proceeds to say: "And when he had sent them away, he departed into a mountain to pray." As in the other instance, the entire night was employed; in this, the most of a day seems to have been consumed. The wonderful miracle was followed by a season of prayer. The Savior withdraws from the world, sends away even his most intimate followers, and seeks a place of solitude where he may conclude the day in this blessed and delightful exercise. Here was much apparent painstaking and trouble to secure the conditions of secret and undisturbed communion with the Father. The transfiguration was ushered in by prayer, and opens out of it as the flower bursts from its bud. On this occasion, the favored three were with or near him, witnesses rather than parties to the solemn exercise. "He took Peter, John and James, and went up into a mountain to pray." We might infer that this had been the Savior's custom, sometimes going alone, at other times permitting the presence of some or of all whom he had specially called to proclaim the gospel. The power of prayer was here displayed in its most wonderful and glorious effects, at the same time that the sublime and expressive transaction brings out in bold relief a habit that pervaded the Savior's life.

We are scarcely permitted to conjecture what were the subjects of prayer which occupied the mind of Christ during these long and solitary hours. That sublimest of all inspired Scriptures, the seventeenth of John, may, however, impart some conception of the scope and grandeur, as well as the indescribable pathos and love of those prayers which were uttered upon the lonely mountain top. Whether the apostle's language refers exclusively to Gethsemane we do not know, when he says: "Who in the days of his flesh, when he had offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears unto him that was able to save him from death, and was heard in that he feared." These seasons of retirement were, doubtless, marked by sore temptation, by agony of soul, and by the greatest triumphs and sweetest consolations. The Redeemer could not achieve his work without prayer. He prayed because he needed to pray, and because he fully assumed our nature, and in all things was "made like unto his brethren."

We dwell, however, upon the fact as an example to us, and insist upon this particular application. It is for this, doubtless, in a large measure, that the circumstance has such explicit statement in the record. It is to enforce upon all the pre-eminent necessity of prayer; that it is the very life of the soul, and the most characteristic and distinctive of the Christian's duties. It is a sufficient warrant for it, and an adequate solution of all supposed difficulties connected with it, that Christ prayed. He gave a practical exhibition of his well pronounced precepts upon the subject. If our lives are conformed to his, they must be lives of prayer, of habitual supplication, and patient waiting upon God. He was our example herein, and the close and devoted imitator will be careful to follow the Master's footprints in this regard. Let the praying Savior rebuke us and condemn us, and send us with more frequency and with greater boldness "to the throne of grace." Let this single feature of the perfect life imbue us with the purpose and desire to be more Christ-like in prayer.

AN INSTRUCTIVE LIFE.

In another column we publish a sketch of Dr. C. G. Young, whose character and life are among the most beautiful and instructive that we have known. It was our good fortune to enjoy the doctor's intimacy and friendship for the last twenty years, and during all this time he grew upon us more and more, as one of the rarest and best of Christian men. He was young in religious experience when our acquaintance began in 1851, and the fervent zeal which then animated him glowed with a steadily increasing flame to the end of his life. His conversion was one of those sudden and powerful translations into the kingdom of Christ, which so impressively stamps the gospel as the power of God; and the impression of it was comparatively fresh and profound in the minds of the people, when we first met him at his home in Greenwood. Universally known and respected as a man of the highest integrity and intelligence, none ever questioned the reality of the experience which he professed, and the most dissolute and skeptical were profoundly moved. His record in that community is to-day one of the strongest and most convincing vindications of the divine claims of Christianity.

As a Christian physician he ministered to the souls, as well as the bodies of his patients, praying with them, advising them, and often effectually leading them to Christ. While engaged in a large and laborious practice, he was the leading spirit in the church; an industrious steward, devising and doing liberal things; a discreet and helpful class leader, always finding time to attend to the duties of the house of God. His presence was felt in every community where he lived, and in every church with which he was connected, quickening the spirituality and toning up all the active religious enterprises. While he lived in Louisiana, he took a deep interest in church affairs, usually attending the session of Conference as a lay-committee man, and leading off in all judicious and progressive measures of financial and ecclesiastical improvement. In Texas, his influence was felt throughout the church, where he gave his valuable time and great abilities without stint to the cause and institutions of religion.

A lesson which pre-eminently commends itself to the business men of the church lies in this devotion to the work of God amidst the greatest and most absorbing secular pursuits. While at the head of vast enterprises, involving pecuniary interests reaching to thousands and even millions, and requiring a vigilant mastery of details of the most complicated character, he still attended Annual, District and Quarterly Conferences, and preached incessantly. But a short time before his death he was largely instrumental in planting a new church in the fifth ward of Houston, which he was serving with fidelity and signal success. On the twentieth of August, ten days after his death, he was to have administered the sacraments of baptism and of the Lord's Supper at this appointment. A writer in the Houston Telegraph says: "Of late, the doctor had been extraordinarily zealous in his preaching, at the District Conference at Hempstead he preached twice, and on the following Sunday at Brenham. On the morning of the fatal day on which he was killed, he prayed with his family with unusual pathos and fervency." And thus preaching, praying and attending to the business of the church, he was at the same time successfully building one of the longest and most important railroads in the Southwest. He came up to the apostolic idea: "Not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." It will be difficult to find an instance in which this combination has been so perfectly illustrated. The engrossments of business never encroached upon his piety, nor deprived him of time and inclination for actual labors in the church. It is in this respect especially that we would hold up his example to the laymen of Methodism.

And in all the great affairs of business, bringing him into association and contact with the world, he magnified his callings as a Christian, and compelled the respect and reverence of all. No judicial ermine was ever so pure as the ministerial vestments which he wore. He, in the strictest sense, kept himself "unspotted from the world." He was utterly unworldly and spiritual amidst the most exciting and absorbing of worldly affairs. Devoted to the material improvement of the country and to the development of its industrial resources, the higher purposes and truer ends of life were kept in view. Apparently so strongly bound to earth, and so indissolubly involved in its undertakings, his conversation was in heaven.

The Doctor was richly endowed with the magnetism of personal influence. Beyond the weight of character and strength of intellect, there was a peculiar fascination which drew others to him, and secured assent to his plans and convictions. Power and gentleness were united in him. His manner was always quiet, his voice soft, and his face was luminous with intelligence and spirituality. Sweetness and strength were wonderfully blended. With a lamb-like spirit, his courage was leonine, and no amount of provocation ever seemed to ruffle the placidity of his temper, or to deter him from the discharge of duty. His success as a preacher is something wonderful, when we consider the strain of business care which he was under, and the multiform engagements which consumed his time. Souls were converted under his preaching habitually. Earnest but never boisterous, deeply thoughtful and instructive, his sermons were attended by the power and demonstration of the Spirit. The main cause was, doubtless, in his deep personal piety, his strong faith and intimate communion with God. Well may the church glorify God in him. His life is an eminent illustration of the divine grace, and exhibits the surpassing power of the gospel to transform and beautify the soul. His name is as ointment poured forth, because fragrant with the precious and blessed gifts of Christ. What we most admired and loved in him were those elements of character which were made lustrous by the rays of infinite love.

His strong and cultivated mind, with all of its great powers of influence and usefulness, was consecrated to Christ. His natural endowments and studious attainments were equal to the highest positions and employments in the State, but they were laid at the Savior's feet. His life was, indeed, a life of faith of the Son of God, and Christ lived in him, and imbued his whole being as thoroughly as the sunshine glows in the flower, and suffuses the hills with its morning radiance. Great and good, he was Christ-like, and in his daily walk showed forth his Master's praise. His few defects and infirmities of character were lost to his friends in the completeness of his consecration, and in the tenderness and charity which marked his intercourse with others.

OREGON.

BY BISHOP KEENER.

CORVALLIS, September 4, 1871.

Since my last I have touched very near the upper line of Oregon, traveling through the valley of the Willamette to Portland. On every side the "headers" and thrashers were at work. The wheat, dry and ripe enough to eat, "rubbing it in the hand," stretched as far as the eye could reach. It was a warm autumnal landscape, full of comfortable suggestion. The "header" takes off the tops of the wheat stalks; running a stream of wheat-heads into a wagon, that moves with it on a parallel line. It can sickle from twenty to forty acres a day. The thrasher, in the same time, cleans out the grain; then the whole is sacked and piled up in the field, never having been either in barn or bin. The continued dry weather enables the farmer to do this without risk. The old-fashioned reaper requires sheaving and stacking the grain, all of which is escaped by this new piece of Yankee ingenuity. An important fact, in regard to this country, is that the wheat crop never fails. Apples and pears abound from one end of the valley to the other. From all I learn the climate here is not a whit colder than that of Nashville. The fall and spring seasons are raw and showery; the winter months are wet, with short periods of freezing weather. It is, evidently, no resort for consumptives; yet a healthy region, affording to the white muscle a plenty of good bracing atmosphere. To those who have lived in Pennsylvania, Ohio and Illinois, this temperature is a charming change; but to those who have moved from Tennessee or the Carolinas, or further South, the climate affords no special surprise. A good many Missouri people are here, a considerable proportion of whom favor, if they do not affiliate, with our church.

I have now visited the principal towns in the State, Corvallis, Salem, Eugene and Portland, and, I am sorry to say, we have no church building in either of them. In Corvallis we have our college building, which partially answers the place of a church. But circuits have been kept up, in some instances, for four or five years, without securing a single place of worship. This policy is something new in Methodism, and is much like pouring water upon the ground during harvest time.

The college here promises much. It is well manned, is prospectively well endowed, is most favorably known, and is doing fine work for the State and the Church. The agricultural department will, I hope, at no distant day, be followed by a medical and law departments, and a theological. We shall then have a university worthy of this coast. At present the Legislature and officers of the State are disposed most favorably toward this enterprise. Already there is on the farm connected with the college some twenty-two agricultural students, who receive an education at the expense of the State. If properly nursed and fostered this will be, at no distant day, a stronghold of Protestantism. But our people must be patient and wait for the early and latter rains. Colleges and universities cannot be grown as readily as mushrooms. It requires patience, industry and money to build up any institution of learning. Presidents and professors cannot do it alone. They must be aided by the liberal-minded men of the country. Until we have large-hearted Christians in our church, who think as highly of education as large-hearted Catholics, or large-minded infidels do, we cannot compete with these forces, which are now seeking full possession of the school-room. It cannot be longer ignored that the foundations of Jesuit Roma. ism and of atheistic Rationalism are being laid broad and deep in the cities and centers of the Atlantic and Pacific States, and that their cupolas can be seen everywhere overlooking the waters of the Gulf and the broad lakes of the North. In twenty years the product of this vast cultivation will be seen in tens of thousands of American Catholics and infidels. Many a Methodist is now praying for "the spread of holiness over these lands," whose grandchildren will die surrounded by the mummeries and mutterings of nuns and priests. Would that our people could learn the uses of money as well as prayer! How strange it is they will not learn wisdom from the success of the foe. Money must be invested in something besides houses and lands, stocks and railways, if we wish our children to have the benefit of it. The people of the North greatly surpass those of the South in providing for the home-training of their youth. They give to colleges without stint, and by so doing have controlled both the mind, the wealth, and at last, the government of the entire country. Covetousness overleaps itself in the long run.

Near this place is a very thrifty and promising town, named Albany. It is on the Oregon and California railroad, has several neat churches and a very fine courthouse, the court-room of which is seated throughout as a church. In this I preached last night to a large audience. The camp meeting, at which the Conference meets, is to be held some twelve miles beyond Albany. An experiment to be dreaded—a Conference out of doors—that is, on a camp ground. I have seen one Conference wasted by this sort of novelty, but still hope for the best. You will have the report of the result in my next. Our friends have a good prospect of being able to build a church in Albany during the year. Two lots for this p have been recently given t the enterprising president Oregon and California railro Benjamin Halliday.

THOSE OF OUR READERS, in quest of a good school for boys, are referred to the advertisement of the Collegiate Institute, at Baton Rouge. The exercises will be resumed on Monday, October 2. This school has at its head a Christian gentleman, who has no superior as an educator. Prof. Magruder and his school are so widely known, that they need no endorsement from us. This Institute has done an important work for education in the Southwest, and is a model in every respect. We can, from our personal knowledge of the Institute and of its able and experienced Principal, most heartily commend it to the patronage of our friends and of the public generally.

CENTENARY FEMALE COLLEGE, SUMMERFIELD, ALABAMA.—We take pleasure in commending the above named institution to the favorable notice of our readers. The president, Rev. A. D. McVoy, is just such a gentleman as we would expect to draw around him a faculty possessing the highest order of qualifications, and with his great energy and fast hold on the confidence of the people, we are not surprised to hear of the prosperity of the college. The health of Summerfield, as well as the cultivation and refinement of its population, is proverbial. See advertisement.

HEALTH OF THE CITY.—A prominent city physician assures us that at this time there are no well marked cases of yellow fever in the Charity Hospital. He estimates that there are not a dozen cases in the city under treatment, and that the health of our metropolis is altogether satisfactory. The weather is now clear and cool, and we believe unacclimated persons have little to fear from any epidemic disease.

COLLEGE ENDOWMENT.

We quote the following from an excellent editorial in the Southern Christian Advocate. While perusing it, let our readers think of Centenary, the Southern University, and other of our struggling colleges:

No institution can be considered fully manned for a thorough prosecution of the curriculum adopted in all first-class colleges, a four year's course, without five or six accomplished professors, and if the lower classes be large, with one or more assistant teachers. Divide the tuition fees among these, after paying all incidental expenses, and keeping buildings and grounds in good order, and even with very full classes, the pay of each will be scant. But crops are short—cotton rules low—a panic comes—a hundred contingencies intervene, and classes are not full. Then must the teachers leave or starve? Neither; let our institutions be endowed—handsomely endowed—so as to command the services at all times of the best talent in the land. Colleges cannot be self-sustaining. This fact, says a recent writer, seems to be much better understood in the Northern States than with us of the South, as the following statement of the amounts recently received by the institutions named will show: Amherst College, Massachusetts, $350,000; Bethlehem College, Pennsylvania, $500,000; Princeton College, New Jersey, $300,000; Cornell University, New York, $870,000; Harvard College, Massachusetts, $483,000; Hamilton College, New York, $202,500; Rochester University, New York, $200,000; LaFayette College, Pennsylvania, $260,000; a Methodist College, New York, $250,000; Rutger's College, New Jersey, $255,000; Tuft's College, Massachusetts, $500,000; Chicago University, $258,000; Yale College, Connecticut, $750,000—with others, making an aggregate of near $9,000,000—all of which has been recently contributed in Northern States for the support of colleges. If we would not be tributaries—hewers of wood and drawers of water—to these people, we Southerners must awake from our slumbers and provide for the education of our youth or they will fall into other hands.

If we can stimulate our Southern Methodists to look ahead—to do something better than spend their wealth in pampering their families, or providing to leave their children rich; if we can excite a dozen or twenty or fifty prosperous Christian men, in each State, to forecast for the future—to lay their plans to make money to be devoted—as these Northern Christians are devoting their wealth—to building up and endowing our colleges, we need never fear for their success. They already have a strong grasp upon the affections of the people; and every year will add to their influence and consequent prosperity. They will have patrons and pupils. These latter will go out into the State—many of them as teachers—diffusing the education they have received among the masses, multiplying the candidates for college education, raising constantly the standard of education in the primary schools and academies, furnishing more thoroughly prepared pupils to the college classes—and thus they will transfuse into every rank and for generations to come the blessings, which liberality primarily conferred upon the college, by generous donations for building and endowment.

Without some such comprehensive benevolence as we suggest we see only a perpetual struggle—half life, half death, perhaps ere long all death—before our Southern Methodist colleges.

Who will lay the corner-stone of a new policy? Who lead off in a "new departure?" Who will appropriate $50,000—or $5000—to begin a grand and glorious work in our Southern Methodist colleges?

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

GOOD WORDS is as beautiful as ever in its typography and illustrations. The September part has the following table of contents.

The High Mills, by Katherine Saunders, author of "Gideon Rock," chapters XVIII–XXI.; In the Harvest Field, by Isabella Fyvie Mayo; Jersey Notes, by Richard Rowe; Truck, by Alfred S. Harvey; Westminster Abbey, May, 1871, by H. H.; The Sylvestres, by M. De Betham Edwards, author of "Kitty," "Dr. Jacob," etc., chapters XXXIX–XLIII.; Historical Sketch of Solar Eclipses, by the Rev. C. Pritchard, M.A., F.R.S., Savilian Professor of Astronomy; The Religious Aspect of the Late War, preached in Westminster Abbey, by Arthur P. Stanley, D.D., Dean of Westminster; An Unfinished Song, by Austin Dobson; First Impressions of France and Italy, by Nathaniel Hawthorne, IX—Rome; The Mother and the Angel, by a Railroad Surfaceman; Thoughts on the Temptation of Our Lord, by the editor, VI—The Third Temptation.

GOOD WORDS FOR THE YOUNG is a most superior publication. The September part has the following table of contents: The Doctor's Brat, by Madame Colmache; Helpfulness, a Lilliput Lecture, by the author of "Lilliput Levee;" How Rita Became a Lacemaker, by Linda Mazini, chapters IV, V; My Father's Friend, A Tale of Long Ago; When I was Young, by Charles Camden, chapter XII; Little Bertha, by J. Stillman; Locusts and Wild Honey, by Lieutenant Colonel Drayson, R. A.; Hoity-Toity and the Village Fool, by Charles Camden; The Dominie's Gramphie, by Mrs. G. Cupples; Down in a Diving Bell, by Edward Howe; Child-Wisdom, by Mary Howitt; "Who Beareth me shall Overcome," by Helen Zimmern; Field-Flowers, by J. E. Bendall; The Neglected Toad, by Beata Francis; My Daisy, by F. C.

A REQUIEM FOR LEE, by Mrs. Laura S. Webb. This is a small duodecimo of twenty-nine pages, about one-half of which is devoted to a poem, descriptive of the life and character of the great Confederate chieftain. It is the heartfelt tribute of a lady to the genius and goodness of Lee, and its sentiments will strike a responsive chord in the Southern heart.

THE GALAXY is the first of the monthlies for October to reach our table. It contains an engraved likeness of Anthony Trollope. The table of contents has: A Correspondence, The Romance of the Negro, Popular Fallacies, The One Term Principle, and other articles. Scientific Miscellany, Current Literature, the Club Room and Nebulæ are able as usual.

THE SOUTHERN MAGAZINE for September has among other articles: Spider Web Papers; The Brilliant Era; General Marmaduke's Expedition into Missouri; Woods, and Their Relation to Climate.

THE AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST for the current month is splendidly illustrated, and filled with the best selection of original matter. This periodical is a marvel of excellence and cheapness.

THE SOUTHERN FIELD AND FACTORY, published at Jackson, Mississippi, is an excellent periodical, and steadily improving in interest and value. The September number is the best we have seen.

IN LITTELL'S LIVING AGE of August 26, we note articles On Literature and Dogma; the Tasmanian Devil; Humboldt; Greenland; besides poetry and miscellany.

BUNKE'S MAGAZINE FOR BOYS AND GIRLS for September abounds in articles calculated to instruct and gratify the young folks.

THE NATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHER, with the Little Folks inclosed, is to hand. The September number is a good one.

THE SOUTHERN FARMER for September is full of instructive and suggestive articles, suited to the season and latitude.

PETERSON'S LADIES NATIONAL MAGAZINE for this month has been received.

Married.

Obituary.

ANN TAYLOR CAMPBELL was born in Wyth county, Virginia, October 4, 1789, married to the Rev. George C. Light, July 3, 1808, and died in Canton, Mississippi, May 10, 1871—gathered in like a ripe shock of corn in the garner above.

She united with the Methodist church when about fifteen years of age, consecrating her young heart and life to God and His cause, and thus spent about sixty seven years of her natural life in the church and service of God. She was firm, true, unswerving and faithful. Having considered well and decided in favor of Christ and His service, nothing ever turned her from the great work undertaken. It was thus with her in all that she considered and deemed worthy her attention and efforts to accomplish. Thus, in September, 1809, Dr. Light thought it better to leave his mother-in-law in Virginia and move to Ohio, and, although feeble in health, she consented and cheerfully acquiesced in his plans, and made the journey of four hundred and ninety miles on horseback, with a babe about three months old. So feeble was she, that the first hundred miles were made by stages of ten to twenty miles a day. Her husband proposed that they should retrace their steps and return to her mother's. Her reply was: "I have turned my face Westward, and to the West I will go." And this principle was manifest through all her subsequent life.

Dr. Light re-entered the Kentucky Conference in 1822, and remained in the ranks of traveling preachers till his death, February 28, 1860, sustaining a superannuated relation from the previous November. Sister Light had an experience of thirty-eight years as the wife of an itinerant preacher in Kentucky, Missouri and Mississippi, and realized all that variety of pleasant and unpleasant scenes, receptions, treatment, etc., which may be found in such a relation in that length of time. Yet she did not shrink from her duty nor discourage her husband in his work. Her energy, industry, frugality and patient cheerfulness encouraged him and kept him moving on in the work; for her industry knew no bounds, except nature's entire exhaustion. As an incident:

For several years she was almost deaf and dumb. It was an effort, with mouth at her ear, to speak loud enough for her to hear, and she could only discern the day from the night; yet she must be doing something. She could knit better than anything else, and made great demands on the family of her son-in-law, (Rev. A. D. Barlow's, with whom she had lived since the death of Dr. Light), for knitting yarn. She knit, during the war, about two hundred pairs of socks for the soldiers of the Lost Cause. Nor did she feel right if one came and left without a pair of socks. She loved Methodist preachers above all other people, and although it was so difficult to converse with her, yet, when she learned that one was visiting the family, she must come in, sit by him, ask questions, tell of Burke, Crouch, Collins, Browning, Green of Missouri, McKendin and others, whom she had known long years ago. With the simplicity of a child she would hold them by the hand or arm, rub her hand over the head speak of her prospects of heaven, and ask them to pray for her and the family. There was sweet simplicity in all her actions.

My acquaintance with her began at the session of the Conference at Natchez, in December, 1844, while a large number of us staid at Mr. Little's. It was pleasant in its beginning, and continued so to the end—more than twenty-one years.

A number of her relatives have occupied very distinguished positions in the nation—as the Campbells of Virginia and Prestons of South Carolina—yet she did not glory in these, but in the cross of Christ. While vision was granted her she read much, both of the nation and church. She tried to keep posted in reference to the movements of both—of the leading men of both. Often, after vision inded so that she could not read, and hearing failed so that she could not hear others read, she would come to her daughter's room, and remark: "I have been reviewing such a book, and calling up the men prominent in the book. What has become of such and such persons? Are they living yet?" Then she would inquire about the preachers who were at a certain camp meeting or conference. Her mind was active, and she could have given many pleasant and interesting sketches and incidents of the scenes and preachers of fifty or sixty years ago—more than seventy years ago.

She was pure, simple, good and true. Her life ended like the sun, full-orbed, going gently and quietly out of sight, leaving a halo of glory behind, to keep the eye still looking in that direction.

Thus, another link that united us to the past and early days of our church has been severed, and we feel that our ship is leaving the past years far in the rear. May we still keep our eyes fixed on the star, Jesus Christ, "ever looking unto him."

All her children, except Rev. Dr. J. A. Light, of Texas, and Mrs. Barlow, of Canton, Mississippi, had preceded her to the goodly land. May they be faithful and meet her there. H. H. MONTGOMERY.

DIED March 19, 1871, at the residence of her father, in East Feliciana parish, Louisiana, Mrs. INDIANA RILEY, daughter of W. B. and Martha Fanver, and consort of Mr. John Y. Riley, of Wilkinson county, Mississippi, aged twenty four years.

She embraced religion early in life, at what age the writer does not know, but believes from that time forth she was a consistent Christian. The writer first became acquainted with her in 1867, since which time she has always been attentive to all the ordinances of the church and ever at her post, when possible, at the appointed hour of worship. Her religion was of that quiet, unobtrusive kind, which the apostle designates as betokened by "a meek and quiet spirit." Her afflictions were protracted and painful, but borne without a murmur. At times, during her illness, she seemed to her friends to be indifferent to everything, but that was seeming not real. There are times in the history of every good man or woman, who passes through deep affliction, when the feelings are too deep for utterance, when the spirit is holding communion with the spirit world, when it seems a very profanation of sacred things to mention the deep feelings of the soul, because we feel that our nearest friends are not in sympathy with us, and we fear they cannot appreciate our situation; when "the heart knoweth its own bitterness, and a stranger doth not intermeddle with our joy." The last forty-eight hours of her existence demonstrated to her friends the nature of those deep self-communings and that apparently quiet indifference and seeming forgetfulness of her sorroundings. As friends gathered around to perform the last sad offices of sympathy and kindness to the departing, and to take a last sad look and a last farewell, there was verified the sentiment that "the chamber where the good man meets his fate is privileged beyond the common walks of men, quite on the verge of heaven." That chamber was lightened up by the presence of the Son of God. Her joy was full, her foregaze into heaven was rapturous. Her only anxiety was that she might live until her husband and father got there. (They were absent on the first day that she was thought to be dying). And God, in mercy, spared her to deliver her last messages of love and counsel to both. She realized what some are disposed to doubt: the communion of departed spirits with the living. We have sometimes seen a candle, just before it was exhausted, burn with unusual brilliancy, sending out with its last effort the blightest glow; so Sister RILEY before "the last grand clash of darkness over the spirit," when the "extinguisher was put down on the lamp of life," beautifully illustrated that her intellectual and spiritual light grew brighter unto the perfect and eternal day. It was remarked by all that her mind was clearer than ever before. She forgot nothing; all the peculiarities of all her friends were mentioned, and a word in season was administered to each; those who were absent were remembered, and a message sent to them. Her love was amplified; her spiritual vision was extended and intensified. With perfect composure she held converse with mother and sister that had gone before (whom she said were in the room waiting for her), and then turned to her living loved ones and gave directions for her funeral, and committed her two littles ones to her husband, with injunctions that they should be trained to meet her in heaven, and then she passed away, whispering back to us across the tide words of hope and love, and leaving a memory of heavenly sweetness enshrined in the sacred depths of all our hearts. It is worth the toil and weary pilgrimage of years to be permitted such a death-scene, and a thousand lives of sacrifice to have such a dying experience. W. E. BALLARD.

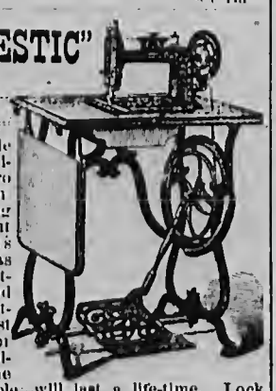
The Celebrated Argyle Bitters.—From one end of the country to the other these unrivaled Bitters have received certificates of their efficacy and health-giving properties, without solicitation from their proprietor or agents.

As a counteracting malarial poison, as a good family medicine, as a tonic, pure and lasting, as a delightful, gentle, stimulant of the vital functions, as a preventive and cure of dyspepsia, they stand firm and unshaken in their reputation.

In malarious latitudes, in damp climates, they have no parallel in the many worthless decoctions, with far-fetched and farcical names (too numerous to mention), and palmed off upon an innocent and unsuspecting people as valuable medicinal agents, but which, like "Dead Sea fruits, turn to ashes on the lips," and result in disgust and loathing, wrong and injury.

For fifteen years and more, these Bitters have found a place in the bosoms of thousands of our most industrious and respected mechanics, lawyers, doctors, the clergy, and are the boast and pride of the farmer and planter—the bone and sinew of the land.

They are now offered for sale at reduced prices. se7 1m



The whole world challenged to produce a Family Sewing Machine that will sew as light and as heavy; light-running and easily operated. The best machine for use, the easiest to sell, the most durable—will last a life-time. Lock stitch, noiseless, attachments unequaled. A good business may be established in any city or town in the United States. This machine has established its superiority in every instance where it has come in competition with any machine in the market. Men with capital are finding it to their advantage to make the sale of this machine their exclusive business. Agents wanted in unoccupied territory. Machines guaranteed as represented.

"I CAN'T."

Never say: "I can't," my dear;
Never say it.
When such words as those I hear
From the lips of boy or girl,
Oft they make me doubt and fear;
Never say it.

Never mind how hard the task,
Never say it.
Find some who knows, and ask,
Till you have your lesson learned;
Never mind how hard the task,
Never say it.

Men who do the noblest deeds
Never say it.
He who lacks the strength he needs,
Tries his best, and gets it soon,
And at length he well succeeds,
Never say it.

THE BABIE.

BY HUGH MILLER.

Nae shoon to hide her tiny taes,
Nae stockings on her feet,
Her supple ankles white as snaw
On early blossoms sweet.

Her simple dress of sprinkled plak,
Her double, dimpled chin;
Her puckered lip and baumy mou',
With nae one tooth between.

Her een sae like her mither's een,
Two gentle, liquid lidings;
Her face is like an angel's face—
We're glad she has nae wings!

A STORY FOR THE LITTLE FOLKS.

THE POCKET-KNIFE; OR, EDDIE'S THREE STEPS.

"Edward, leave my work-box alone," said a lady, whose faint voice showed her to be very weak, to a boy who was fidgeting with her spools, one evening, near the sofa on which she lay.

Do you think he stopped at once, as you would have done? Oh! no; but spying a large pocket knife at the bottom, he pretended not to hear what his mother had said, and taking out the knife, exclaimed:

"O mamma! what a spendid knife! Mayn't I have it?"

"Put it down at one, my son," she answered. "I cannot trust you with so dangerous a plaything."

Still Edward held the knife, showing no intention to obey, and his mother, too ill to contend with the disobedient boy, rang the bell that hung near her.

"Take Edward to bed, Jane," she said decidedly to the servant who came. In vain he struggled and screamed, everturning the work-box in his resistance. He was carried at last from the room in Jane's strong arms, while the tears rolled down his mother's pale cheeks with grief that she was unable to govern this passionate, willful boy. Her husband was a sea captain, and too often from home to aid her in training their unhappy son.

Thus, by a want of proper obedience, did Edward take the first of the three steps.

The next morning, quite forgetting his naughtiness, Edward went into his mother's sitting-room, before she was awake, for his school-books, and there under the table, where it had fallen from the ove turned work-box lay the knife.

"What a beauty it is!" thought he, as he picked it up and examined it, trying the blades and wishing it were his.

Just then, Jane called him to breakfast.

"I don't believe mother will want it before I get home," he thought. "I'll just take it to show Jim Gordon; it's a great deal handsomer than his." So slipping it into his pocket, he went to his day's duties with a half-guilty feeling, and yet rather proud to be able to show off to his crony Jim.

So the second step was taken: direct disobedience and defiance to his mother's command.

Many a trouble Edward had that morning in keeping his ill-gotten prize from the boys, who, like himself, broke the command that says: "Thou shalt not covet." Finally, the teacher's notice was attracted, and he was punished for his disturbances.

In no very pleasant humor, Eddie went home, and, finding his mother reading, concluded she had not yet examined her work-box, but as it stood quite near her, he could not put back the knife without betraying himself, so he went out to play with it still in his pocket.

A little way down the street, Annie Wilson was sitting on a door-step, building a house for her paper dolls. Eddie was a great friend of Annie's, because she was gentle and let him rule in everything. He was quite a hero to her, and when he sat down to help her, and took out the wonderful knife with such importance, she was quite impressed with his condescension. But Annie was unusually frolicsome this day, and Eddie's temper had been too much ruffled to bear her little teasing tricks quietly.

"Let me alone, Annie Wilson," he cried quite savagely, "or I won't fix a thing for you."

With unusual perversity, Annie would not be warned, but kept tipping over the sticks he had whittled and was piling up to build the house. She had no idea how angry he was getting until at last the bright blade of the coveted knife made a sudden dart and was buried, not in the wood, but in her own little white arm! Quickly the blood covered her white apron, and the crowd that gathered at her screams believed she was alarmingly wounded.

Among those attracted by the excitement was Jane, and taking but a glance, aided by a quick imagination, she ran back, and rushing to Eddie's mother, exclaimed:

"Och! ma'am; Annie Wilson's kilt intirely, and the police has got our Eddie."

The poor lady heard no more, but fell like one dead at the feet of the foolish girl, and for many hours knew nothing further of her unhappy boy.

To this point had Edward's third step brought him—the indulgence of his terrible temper following naturally in the path he had made so easy by the two wrong steps that had gone before.

Sure enough, Annie's father, furious at finding his child covered with blood—wounded he did not know how seriously—had handed the passionate boy over to the police. That night Edward passed behind the bars of a dismal cell in the station-house. What a miserable boy he was! No one heeded his cries. No one answered his frantic pleadings to be let out. They were all too used to such things there to mind them. Even a little bird on a neighboring roof seemed to mock him through the bars, by fluttering its free wings before his cage. How he wished he had never touched the knife! He was sure the disgrace would kill his mother, and then he thought of her prayers for him and her efforts to make him obedient and gentle. He was almost sure he should be hung, and he knew he was too wicked too die, so he was nearly wild with fear and grief. Poor boy! he was bitterly punished. At last sleep mercifully came to make him forget his sorrows.

When he awakened, he found his uncle, the owner of the now hateful knife, waiting for him; but he looked very grave, and said he could do nothing until they had seen the judge. Terrible words! With a faint heart, Edward was led by the officer, accompanied by his uncle, to the court-room.

While the judge was questioning them, Mr. Wilson came in, bearing Annie in his arms, looking very pale, and having her arm bandaged. As soon as she saw Edward, she slipped from her father's arms, and, running to him, she burst into tears, and, putting her well arm round his neck, said:

"O Eddie! I'm so sorry. You didn't mean to hurt me so!" Then to the judge: "Please, sir, let him go home. His mamma is very sick. It was my fault for teasing him, and he'll never do so any more—will you, Eddie?"

The judge was touched by the little girl's forgiving spirit, and told her she might take him home and try to make a better boy of him. As Edward's uncle promised to pay all it would cost to make Annie well again, Mr. Wilson was satisfied to let him go.

But almost the hardest part was yet to come.

Reaching home, Eddie stole softly up stairs, ashamed to be seen, and looked through the crack of the door into his mother's room. There she lay on the bed, so marble-white, with her eyes closed, that he was sure she was dead. With a loud cry, he fell forward against the door. A stern-looking old woman came quickly toward him, saying:

"Go down, you wretched child. Have you not done mischief enough yet?"

But the cry had roused his mother, and she motioned so eagerly for him that the nurse dared not refuse her. Trying very hard to be still, Eddie clasped his mother's hand and heard her whisper:

"Thank God! you are safe, my poor child! Ask Him, for Jesus' sake, to forgive and help you."

The pitying Saviour spared Edward the misery of parting from his dear mother at that time, and day by day he sat beside her as she grew stronger, and listened to her instructions with a willing heart. He never forgot that lesson. His uncle gave him the knife, but he could never bear to look at it.

As Edward's mother grew better, and when he was tempted to disobey her or yield to his old temper, he would think of the knife, and say in his heart: "Lead me not into temptation, but deliver me from evil," as his mother had taught him, and Jesus gave him strength to overcome those faults. He was only a boy, but he was greater than the great Emperor Napoleon. How, do you ask? Turn to the sixteenth chapter of Proverbs, and you will see that the wisest man who ever lived, instructed by God himself, says in the thirty-second verse: "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty, and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city."—Methodist.

SAVED AND HAPPY.—He was a boy in Sunday school. For ten years he had gone in and out, repeating his lessons, reading the Bible, listening to his teacher, and yet his heart had not been touched. People were interested in the lad, because of his intelligence and general good behavior. He was a favorite with the teacher, because of his ready answers and respectful attention. But what was passing in his mind, and whether or not he had any but a very passing interest in the eternal things that they talked about, could not be known. He listened, but he spoke no word by which his teacher could know of his real feelings. And so one day, after soliciting Divine help, he resolved to speak to him. For this purpose he asked him to accompany him home after the afternoon school. And then, in the quiet of the room, the teacher put the startling question, "John, are you saved?"

He looked quite struck. He blushed, then turned pale, stammered, and at last said: "No teacher."

"Not saved, John? Then, of course, you are lost," said the teacher sadly.

John looked sad, too. He did not like to think that.

"But you need not be lost, John. If you come to Jesus he will save you."

"But how can I come, teacher? I don't know where to find him."

"He is here, waiting. You can come to him in prayer."

John went home and thought about it. The next day he came to his teacher. "I am saved now, teacher, and I am quite happy."

"But how do you know, John?"

"I came to Jesus. I said, 'Just as I am, O Lamb of God, I come;' and then I know he saved me, because he put this text in my heart: 'Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out.'"

"That is right, John; you are saved."

John did not hide his light; he told everybody he was saved. If we all did the same, how many others might have the blessing!—Teacher's Golden Hour.

WEEDS.—I was once walking with a farmer through a beautiful field, when he chanced to see a tall thistle on the side of the fence. In an instant he sprang over the fence, and cut it off close to the ground.

"Is that your field?" I asked.

"O no," said the farmer, "but bad weeds don't care much for fences, and if I should leave that thistle bloom in my neighbor's field I should soon have plenty of my own."

THE FARM AND GARDEN.

HOW TO KEEP IRISH POTATOES IN THE SOUTH.—Dry in a dry time, not permitting rays of hot sun to pour down on them. Spread them out on dry floor, well ventilated, for some time after digging, unless the weather should threaten to freeze them; in that event, cover lightly with straw, hay or fodder, which remove when the weather moderates. House or shelter, with dirt floor, raised sufficiently above surface of ground to prevent moisture from settling on it—ditch all around and conduct water off. Pile up your potatoes in conical bank, sprinkling dry dust from the road or elsewhere over the heap, frequently, while basketful of potatoes are being emptied. When pile is complete cover the whole about three to six inches deep with sound, dry cotton seed; stack up boards, planks, flat rails or bark, on the outside of the cotton seed, and secure them in their places so that they may not be easily removed. Keep out pigs, dogs, or any others likely to depredate by scratching into the heap. It is believed they will keep.—Practical Planter.

WARREN LELAND ON POULTRY RAISING. A gentleman in Michigan made inquiries of the New York Farmers' Club about poultry raising, and Mr. Warren Leland answered:

1. I give my fowls great range. Eighteen acres belong to them exclusively. Then the broods have the range of another big lot, and the turkeys go half a mile or more from the house. The eighteen acres of poultry-yard are rough land of little use for tillage. It has a pond in it, and many rocks, and bushes, and weeds, and sandy places, and ash heaps, and lime, and bones, and grass, and a place which I plow to give them worms.

2. When a hen has sat I take her box, throw out the straw and earth, let it be out in the sun and rain a few days, and give it a good coat of whitewash on both sides. In winter, when it is very cold, I have an old stove in their house, and keep the warmth above freezing. There is also an open fireplace where I build a fire in cool wet days. They dry themselves, and when the fire goes out there is a bed of ashes for them to wallow in. Summer and winter my hens have all the lime, ashes and sand they want.

3. Another reason why I have such luck is because my poultry-yard receives all the scraps from the Metropolitan Hotel. Egg-making is no easy work, and hens will not do much of it without high feed. They need just what a man who works requires—wheat bread and meat. Even when wheat costs two dollars I believe in feeding it to hens. As to breeds I prefer the Brahmas, light and dark. I change roosters every spring, and a man on the farm has no other duty than to take care of my poultry. I often have three thousand spring chickens.

THE COTTON SEED OF THE SOUTH.—The weight of the clean cotton crop of the Southern States may be estimated at one million tons, and the cotton seed of the crop at that weight. We will deduct the seed necessary for planting, inevitable waste and injury to seed in bulk, and the distance of much of the seed from market—there will result at least one million of tons that should find a way to the markets and manufacturers. This seed will readily command twelve dollars to fifteen dollars per ton in the New Orleans market, and will thus show a value of twelve million dollars, which might be added to the income of the planter, less the expenses of transportation and sale. If to this estimate, we add the profit of the home manufacturer, there might be realized in the South the gross amount of forty million dollars from this source. That we cannot be charged with having made an excessive estimate, we adduce as impartial, the New York Tribune, which says:

"The oil contained in the cotton seed food for farm stock, is fully equal to that in corn for making fat hogs, mules and horses, sheep and poultry. True farm economy demands that a good share of this oil be transformed into fat bacon and hogs' lard. Cotton seed meal gives nearly fourteen per cent of flesh-forming substances," or four times the amount found in corn meal. It is stated on good authority that fully two-thirds of every planter's crop is seed; that is, inasmuch as he sells his lint by weight, and as there are two pounds of seed to every one of lint, he really only sells and realizes on one-third of the whole crop. To show the loss of the planter from his inability to utilize his cotton seed: If we take the average 2,766,927 bales for each year, which at four hundred and fifty pounds to the bale and two thousand pounds to the ton, gives 622,542 tons of cotton, with two pounds of seed to one of cotton; this estimate gives 1,245,086 tons to the average yield of each year, half of which is kernels and half hulls, equal to twenty-five million five hundred thousand of bushels. Chemical analysis of the kernel has shown that it is richer in flesh-producing elements than corn. As a substitute, therefore, for stock feeding, for corn, it is not unreasonable to place its value at an amount approximating to the price of corn on the plantation, say one dollar and twenty-five cent per bushel. The analysis of the hulls contains from sixty to eighty per cent of fertilizing properties. Taking into consideration the price paid for the very larger quantities of manipulated fertilizers now made by Southern planters, and the absolute necessity in many sections for the use of some restorative to the exhausted lands, it is fair to put the value of the hull at twenty dollars per ton, showing a total value of the year's crop of cotton seed of over forty-four million dollars."

These estimates differ in their details, but arrive at similar conclusions, that the cotton seed, utilized, would add about five per cent to the price realized by the planter upon the sale of clean cotton, and that if manufactured at home, it would add about fifteen per cent to the amount of cotton sales. This is an accession to our resources worth the attention of planters and factors. It should make a regular market demand in our city for an article so valuable.

We propose to show that the available value of cotton seed will be sufficient to pay for the provisions imported for cotton culture. The cotton States may be estimated to have paid out for provisions imported from the West, last year, and for fertilizers:

Five million bushels corn at $1 10	$5,500,000
Animal food	3,500,000
Fertilizers	2,500,000
Total	$11,500,000

The sale of the cotton seed would pay this sum.—Carolina Farmer.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

TO SOFTEN KID BOOTS.—Melt a quarter of a pound of tallow, then pour it into a jar, and add to it the same weight of olive oil, stir, and let it stand; apply a small quantity occasionally with a piece of flannel. Should the boots be very dirty, cleanse with warm water. It will soften any leather.

CURE FOR EARACHE.—As soon as any soreness is felt in the ear, let three or four drops of the tincture of arnica be poured in, and the orifice be filled with a little cotton to exclude the air, and in a short time the uneasiness is forgotten. If the arnica be not resorted to until there is actual pain, the cure may not be as speedy, but it is just as certain, although it may be necessary to repeat the operation. It is a sure preventive of gathering in the ear, which is usual cause of earache.

POLISHING SHIRTS.—The Scientific American says: Put a little common wax in your starch, say two ounces to the pound; then if you use any thin patent starch, be sure you use it warm, otherwise the wax will get cold and gritty and spot your linen, giving it the appearance of being stained with grease. It is different with collar starch—it can be used quite cold; however, of that anon. Now, then, about polishing shirts: Starch the fronts and wristbands as stiff as you can. Always starch twice; that is, starch and dry, then starch again. Iron your shirt in the usual way, making the linen nice and firm, but without any attempt at a good finish; don't lift the plaits; your shirt is now ready for polishing, but you ought to have a board the same size as a common shirt board, made of hard wood, and covered with only one ply of plain cotton cloth. Put this board into the breast of your shirt, then take a polishing iron, which is flat and beveled a little at one end—polish gently with the beveled part, taking care not to drive the linen up into wave-like blisters; of course, this requires a little practice, but if you are careful and persevere, in a short time you will be able to give that enamel-like finish which seems to be so much wanted.

The Smallest Idol the Greatest.

The youthful Queen of Madagascar was crowned three years ago.

Arching over the throne of her coronation was the proclamation: "Glory to God in the highest, peace and good-will to man." At her right hand was a Bible, presented by the British and Foreign Bible Society. Thus the gospel was sincerely enthroned in Madagascar.

This is the more remarkable, because thirty-three years ago, the last living public witness for the gospel was put to death by the reigning power, at the foot of the hill on which this coronation took place, and because this martyr missionary was a young woman like the queen.

Two years ago the young queen, together with her husband, the prime minister of her kingdom, was baptized in the name of the triune God, on the very spot of the martyrdom, in a church built there as a memorial of that bloody scene.

So far there was a poetic beauty of victory in place and circumstance.

This, however, is not all. One year ago another grand step was taken, which was the signal for the rising of a great light there where the people sat in darkness.

The queen brought forth the royal idol and publicly destroyed it. This was the signal for a general destruction of idols, and the general proclamation of Christ as Lord of all.

One of the significant things in this great movement is that the royal idol was the most insignificant of all the idols in the kingdom. A mean, diminutive thing, three inches long, without beauty, and absolutely worthless. Yet upon that insignificant thing hung the idolatry of a kingdom. While it remained in the royal household idolatry stood; when it was brought forth and destroyed, idolatry fell, and Christ was proclaimed and received instead.

Beloved fellow-Christian, seeking Jesus as a reigning Saviour within, what is the lesson here for you?—The Christian at Work.

COUNTRY HEARERS.—When Albert Barnes preached before our seminary class, on their graduation, he said: "Young gentlemen, one thing never forget; preach your best sermons in the country! I have charge of a city church. I have noticed that young men, preaching for me, chose their best themes and their best thinking, because they were addressing a city congregation. It is a mistake. I tell them so, and I tell you so. The mass of a city congregation read little but the daily papers, and read and think as they live, on the run. On anything but business or social pleasure they think less than they read. People in the country read books; they have time, and they take time to think, and if you much make a difference, preach your thought in the country."—Rev. J. Cooke.

CORONA.

CORONA STRIVES TO JUSTIFY ITS name,

THE CROWN OF SCHOOLS

for the higher education of women, by judiciously combining in its scheme the special points of excellence found in all other schools. It aspires to superiority in all departments—literary, scientific, æsthetic, domestic and hygienic. The principal, after spending nearly twenty years in studying educational questions and in the practice of teaching, is devoting his whole mind and heart to the task of maintaining not the largest but the best school in the South. His system of education comprehends such an harmonious development of all the powers of mind, heart and body as will fit the young lady for the faithful discharge of the highest and lowliest duties of life.

The methods of instruction are those approved by the foremost educators of the age. The very best aids are employed for imparting real knowledge, such as maps, charts, globes, specimens and apparatus of all kinds. There is no rote—learning of the mere letter of text books—no cramming of the mind with disconnected facts.

Assistant teachers of known scholarship and well-tried aptness in teaching are engaged. In physical science and modern languages instruction is given by the eminent professors in these departments of Cumberland University.

The course of study is very extensive. It is arranged into schools after the plan of the best universities, and pupils are graduated in such schools as they or their parents may elect. Music on piano, harp and guitar.

In the boarding department young ladies enjoy all the comforts of an elegant home. The rooms are large, well ventilated, neatly furnished and newly carpeted. Fires in rooms whenever wanted. The table is bountifully supplied with wholesome food.

The location is most favorable in point of health, social refinement and religious privileges.

The health and physical development of boarding pupils are promoted by a system of gymnastic exercises, under a competent teacher, with dumb-bells, wands, rings and Indian clubs, without charge.

The expense of boarding and regular tuition is $250 or $260 a year. Extra branches at usual rates. The annual session always begins on the first Monday of September.

Scientific.

COMMERCIAL FALSIFICATIONS.—Not only is flour sometimes adulterated, but sometimes alum, sulphate of copper and sulphate of lime have been detected in baker's bread. Butter may contain water, flour and earthy substances. Tea is adulterated with Prussian blue, indigo, gypsum, chromate of lead and copper compounds. "Ground coffee" contains besides the berries of the Coffea Arabica, chicory, roasted corn, acorns and leguminous seeds. Cayenne popper has been known to contain red lead, and sometimes colored sawdust. Mustard is falsified by the addition of wheat flour colored with tumeric, while the flavor is kept up by a dash of red pepper. Vinegar sometimes contains sulphuric acid in large proportion. Pickles are often made beautifully green with highly poisonous copper salts.

THE ORIGIN OF GAS LIGHTING.—The distinguished Scotch philosopher, Dr. Chalmers, at a time when all the streets and lanes of great cities were lighted with oil burnt in lamps, held that the time was not distant when a carburretted hydrogen gas would be substituted instead; and on getting his house repaired, he actually introduced into the walls a system of tubes and pipes for the passage into the various rooms of the gaseous fluid yet to be employed as the illuminating agent. But among all the vague speculations and ingenious devices, there were two individual minds who were giving shape and form to them—Murdock in England, and Le Bon in France. The combinations of circumstances, however, favored the former, and I think no impartial investigator of the subject will fail to render to William Murdock, of Redruth, Cornwall, the sole merit of the practical application of coal gas to the purpose of artificial illumination, about 1800. And it is a noteworthy fact that this discovery was first exhibited publicly as a rejoicing over the hush of war and the renewal of peace, on the occasion of the grand illumination in England, commemorative of the peace of Amiens, in 1802.—Prof. J. L. Smith.

GRAPHITE.—Graphite is a mineral of increasing value in the arts, and offers great opportunities for invention. The Scientific American makes a summary of its virtues. It is used for crucibles, stove polish, glazing gun-powder, lead pencils, iron castings, electro-plating, priming for black colors, packing steam joints, lubricating machinery, in the manufacture of Bessemer steel, in printing ink, in preventing the incrustation of boilers, in agriculture, and for fire-proof safes. The most extensive crucible works are at Passau, in Bavaria; at Battersea, near London, and at Jersey City. It is said that $600,000 worth is used annually for stove polish alone. Graphite is found in association with rocks of all ages, and has been a great puzzle to geologists, as it appears in utter disregard of all laws of deposition, injection or stratification. Its value in arts depends on various qualities which adapt it for the different purposes. Purity is not so much of a consideration as its grains or textures. A compact grainy variety is best for pencils, while a loose mold with shiny particles and scales is better for crucibles. There is abundant room for discovery both in finding new deposits and in preparing it for its various uses.

CAUSE OF THE CHOLERA.—A curious theory in regard to the cause of cholera is just now receiving much attention. It is that of Raspail, who holds that animalculæ are its primary origin. It is an old theory, it is true, but none the worse for that; and what gives it importance just now is the fact that there is a remedy for it. In 1849-50, during the ravages of the cholera in the West Indies, it was found, on examining microscopically the water of the localities where the disease existed, that it was impregnated with animalculæ foreign to the place, which disappeared simultaneously with the disease. These animalculæ would die when placed in contact with camphor, which seemed to be to them a deadly poison. This is the evidence in support of Raspail, and a thorough microscopical investigation of the water in localities affected, and of the evacuation of a sufferer from this pestilence of the Ganges, it is evident will establish the fact that the disease is propagated by animalculæ.

In view of this, it is suggested that all water for drinking purposes should be well boiled and kept tightly covered, for it is in the water where the greater number of animalculæ are found. We should also carefully abstain from all liquids which have not been thoroughly purified by fire. A judicious use internally of a few drops of spirits of camphor daily, destroys the animalculæ as fast as they enter the system, thereby arresting the disease.

Camphor is one of the remedies for cholera, as well for a preventive as for a mitigation or cure of the disease.

ROBERT J. HARP,

NO. 112 CAMP STREET, NEW ORLEANS,

AGENT FOR THE SOUTHWESTERN STATES FOR THE SALE OF

GEORGE WOODS & CO.'S

PARLOR And CHURCH ORGANS.

To those who are at all acquainted with the trade in musical instruments, or those conversant with the improvements that during the last twenty years have been made in that most popular of instruments, the Reed Organ, it is entirely superfluous to speak of the reputation or ability of the firm of GEO. WOODS & CO. We will, however, mention, for the benefit of any who may be without information on the subject, that the senior partner, Mr. Geo. Woods, has been engaged in the manufacture of Organs for many years, that he is the inventor of many valuable improvements and ingenious devices, and that his coadjutors in the business are all men extensively known to the trade as being possessed of uncommon skill, taste and experience in their different branches.

In offering our instruments to the notice of all interested in music, we merely ask a comparison between those of our manufacture and those of others, and briefly mention upon what points in our instruments we base our claims of superiority to the productions of our competitors in business:

QUALITY OF TONE.

Its Purity, Clearness and Brilliancy, Extraordinary Power,
CAPACITY FOR VARIETY, AND BEAUTY OF EFFECT,

Which is owing in a great measure to the excellence of our famous SOLO STOPS,

VOX HUMANA AND VOX CELESTE,

which differ materially in their construction and effects from other Stops of the same or similar name.

Our MANUAL SUB-BASS; smooth as well as effective in quality of tone.
PATENTED INVENTIONS AND INGENIOUS DEVICES.
Our method of employing SOLO SETS in separate WIND CHESTS.
IMPROVED VALVES AND WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.
THOROUGHNESS OF CONSTRUCTION AND ELEGANCE OF DESIGN.

All material used in the construction of our instruments will be found to be strictly of the best quality. Our workmanship will also be found to be of a very high order.

The Cases are constructed with a proper regard to the laws of sound, having acoustic chambers at the ends of the case.

The Fronts of Keys are Ivory, and are not of Holly wood.

The Carvings are hand-made.

The Stops are of Ebony and Ivory, engraved by hand.

Special attention is called to these Organs. Price Lists and Catalogues, containing full particulars of the many numbers, sizes, varieties and prices—ranging from $110 to $650—will be mailed to any one on application.

☞ All instruments will be thoroughly examined and shipped in good order. Therefore parties can safely order without coming to select. Address

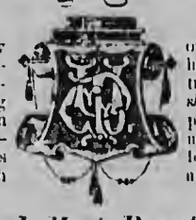
"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,



An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of School Books which should be entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching thought and feeling of the Southern should not be offensive to the people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

COMPRISES, ALSO,

De Vere's French Grammar, Readers, etc.,

By M. SCHELE DE VERE, LL.D., Professor of Modern Languages in the University of Va.

Gildersleeve's Latin Series,

By B. L. GILDERSLEEVE, Ph.D., LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

Carter's Elements of General History,

By Rev. J. P. CARTER, A.M., of Baltimore, Maryland.

Holmes' English Grammars,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

LeConte's Scientific Series,

By the Professors LECONTE, late of the University of South Carolina.

Johnston's English Classics,

By R. M. JOHNSTON, A.M., late Professor of Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres in the University of Georgia.

To which list other books in other departments will early be added.

Stoves! Stoves! Stoves!

THESE are not the best the world ever saw, nor do I pretend to say that they will last for ages and generations to come; neither will they bake bread or warm rooms without some little wood or coal, and just the least bit of fire, judiciously applied. But I do believe they are just as good as any now in use, and with the same care in using and skill in managing will perform as well, and prove as durable and economical as the most approved pattern. NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

[From the New Orleans Price Current.]

The wholesale trade has continued active, and the general market shown a fair degree of animation, but, owing to scant supplies, the movement in our leading staples has been of limited extent. At the same time, in view of the crop accounts and light receipts, and notwithstanding a material decline at New York and discouraging accounts from Liverpool, prices of the medium and better grades have further advanced ¼c. The previous active demand for flour subsided on Monday, and it barely maintained Friday's quotations, but on Tuesday the market was more active and prices stiffer, showing a net improvement of 12½ to 25c. ₱ bbl. Corn has been in light supply, and ruled rather more in favor of sellers. On Tuesday, especially, the landing was bare, and the sales from warehouses were at advanced rates. Pork suffered an unfavorable reaction on Monday, giving way 25c. ₱ bbl, but on Tuesday recovered its previous position. Bacon has continued buoyant, its closing rates shewing a further improvement of ¼ to ½c.

The weather was showery on Saturday and Monday and rainy and cloudy on Tuesday. The intelligence from the country received since has been more discouraging. We hear of the ravages of the caterpillars from localities where they had previously appeared but had done no injury, and low estimates of the yield from all quarters. The result will depend very much on the extent of the damage done by these pests, and on the weather for the rest of the season. An early killing frost would, with the general backwardness of the crop, be more fatal than the worms. The sugar prospect is fair, but no more. The second year's stubble is generally admitted to be a failure, and more will have to be laid aside for seed. Crop estimates now range from about last year's yield—say 145,000 bhds—up to 175,000 and 180,000.

The river is now 13 feet 4 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the fifteenth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	1,298
Lake	1
Mobile	211
Texas	233
Total	1,743

On Saturday the demand continued fair, but, operations being restricted by scant supplies and the high pretensions of factors, the business embraced only 400 bales, while factors were enabled to establish a further advance of ¼c. in the medium and higher grades. On Monday the same causes checked the movement, and the sales were confined to 350 bales. Saturday's advance being maintained, notwithstanding the loss of a previous improvement of 1-16d. at Liverpool, and a decline of ¼@¼c. at New York. On Tuesday there was no material change. If anything, under the strong tenor of the crop accounts, and notwithstanding the decline at New York, factors were more stringent in their pretensions, and realized stiffer prices, but without establishing any quotable advance. The sales were again confined to 350 bales. Our quotations are for old crop. New sold to a trifling extent at 20@20¼c. for strict low middling, 21¼c. for strict middling, and 21½c. for good middling.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 1,100 bales.

Low Ordinary	14 to 15
Ordinary	15½ to 16½
Good ordinary	17½ to 18½
Low middling	19 to 19½
Middling	20 to 20½
Strict middling	20½ to 20½

SUGAR.—The supply of Louisiana plantation is exhausted and the trade is now confined to a limited local demand for immediate wants. We quote 9@9¾c. for common and good common Louisiana, 10¾c. for good fair, 11¼c. for fully fair, 12c. for prime, 12¾c. for choice, 12@12½ for yellow clarified, 11¼@12c. for Cuba yellow clarified, 11@11¼c. for Porto Rico, 11¾@12¼ ₱ lb for Demerara. Refinery yellow clarified is selling at 12¼@12¾c., white at 13¼@13¾c. ₱ lb.

MOLASSES.—There is little or none coming in from plantation. Fair refinery reboiled is selling at 35@40c., prime 50c., choice 60c. ₱ gallon. Golden syrup is held at 90c@$1 ₱ gallon.

FLOUR.—The stock on hand is large, but consists mostly of choice extra. All the grades below good treble extra are very scarce. On Saturday there was a good demand for treble extra and the grades below, but on Monday the market was quiet, while on Tuesday it was active again. The sales on Saturday embraced 5000 bbls at $5 for superfine; $5 25 for single extra; $6@6 12½ for double extra; $6 25@6 50 for treble extra; $6 75@7 for choice treble extra and $7 25@7 for choice and family extra. On Monday the active demand of Saturday suddenly subsided, and the market was dull and the sales were confined to 2500 bbls at $6 for double extra; $6 50 for treble extra, and $6 75 for choice extra. On Tuesday the market was much firmer. There was an active demand for treble extra and all the grades below, which are very scarce. The sales embraced 3400 bbls, in lots, at $5 25 for superfine; $6 50 for low treble extra; $6 62½@6 75 for good treble extra; $6 87½@7 for choice treble extra and $8@8 25 ₱ bbl for choice and family extra. Double extra is quoted at $6 25 ₱ bbl.

CORN.—Has been in light supply and fair demand at full previous prices. There were sales on Saturday and Monday of 5500 sacks at 73c. for mixed; 74c. for white mixed and yellow and 75c. for white. On Tuesday there was none on the landing, but some in warehouse sold at advanced rates. One hundred sacks white mixed sold in warehouse at 78c. and 100 white at 80c. ₱ bushel.

OATS.—Are in light supply and firmer with a fair demand. There were sales on Saturday and Monday of 4000 sacks at 53@55c. for St. Louis, as to quality, and 57@58c. for Galena. On Tuesday, 1000 sacks sold at 54c. for second hand bags and 55@56c. for prime to choice St. Louis.

BRAN.—Is in fair supply and dull, and prices have declined. The sales on Saturday and Monday were confined to 400 sacks at $1 ₱ 100 lbs. On Tuesday 1000 sacks sold in lots at $1 10@1 12½ and 150 sacks, in two lots, at $1 15 ₱ 100 lbs.

HAY.—The market is entirely bare. On Monday a lot of 75 bales choice Western just received sold at $36 ₱ ton. On Tuesday a small lot arrived, but it was not discharged, hence there were no sales.

PORK.—The market was dull on Saturday and Monday, when prices ruled lower. On Saturday 500 bbls mess sold, in two equal lots, at $14 ₱ bbl and 50 bbls rump pork on private terms. On Monday 100 bbls mess sold at $14 25 ₱ bbl. But on Tuesday the demand was active with advance prices, when 600 bbls mess sold, in six equal lots, at $14 25, $14 37½ and $14 50 ₱ bbl. Subsequently the stock was held firmly at $14 50 ₱ bbl. It is retailing at $14 75@$15 ₱ bbl.

BACON.—The market has been quiet but firmer, with a light stock and fair demand. There were sales on Tuesday and Monday of 200 casks, in lots, at 7¾ c. for shoulders, and 9¾@9¾c. for clear sides. On Tuesday the demand was active and prices were firmer with light supplies. The sales embraced 200 casks at 8@8¼c. for shoulders; 9¼c. for clear rib sides; and 9¼@9¾c. for clear sides. Shoulders are now quoted at 8¼c.; clear rib sides 8¾c.; clear sides 9¼@9¾c. ₱ lb.

MONETARY.

Gold was in only moderate request on Saturday and Monday, but under a sharp upward turn in Wall street on Tuesday, quite a good demand sprung up and the business was larger than usual.

Ruling in agreement with New York, the market has advanced ¼ ₱ cent. since Friday, opening on Saturday at 113¾@113¾ (against 114¼ at New York), and closing at 113¾@113¾ (against 114 in that market); opening on Monday at 113¾@113¾, (against 114¼ at New York), and closing at 113¾@113¾ (against 114¼ at New York); and opening on Tuesday at 113¾@114, (against 114¼ at New York), and closing at 114@114¼, (against 114¼ at New York).

The sales of silver include a few trifling sums on Monday at 109 for American half-dollars. American half-dollars are now quoted at 108@109 and Mexican dollars nominal at 1¼@1¾ ₱ cent premium in gold.

MISCELLANEOUS.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR
A Purely Vegetable Compound
FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF
RHEUMATISM AND GOUT

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered inestimable relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured, through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Rawson, Delhi, Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Bradley, Floyd, Louisiana.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

FOREIGN.

BRUSSELS, Sept. 19.—The terms of the striking engineers have been accepted by three of the employing firms of this city.

LONDON, Sept. 20.—The Times, discussing the municipal affairs of New York, advises the citizens to put aside party interest, as otherwise the evil will be checked for a time only and will reappear in an aggravated form.

The strikes continue. There has been a large number of sympathetic meetings.

The first anniversary of the occupation of Rome by the Italian troops was celebrated with great enthusiasm today. The city was literally covered with festoons, flags, flowers and greenery. The shops were all closed, and political associations participated with full ranks, accompanied by bands of music and carrying flags and banners, bearing inscriptions in honor of united Italy.

The crowds in the streets were immense and orderly.

Many visitors arrived in the city by the Mont Cenis tunnel railway to season to witness the festivities.

VERONA, Sept. 20.—King Victor Emmanuel arrived yesterday on a brief visit. The city is illuminated in honor of his presence.

LONDON, Sept. 21.—The Congress of the International Society commenced in London to-day. Delegates from Italy, Spain, France, Germany, Belginm and Switzerland are present, and Carl Marx presides. The object of the meeting is to arrange for immediate action on the continent.

VERSAILLES, Sept. 21.—President Thiers has been presented by King Amedeus, of Spain, with the Order of the Golden Fleece.

M. Thiers held a lengthy interview with Herr Von Arnim on the subject of the delayed treaty between France and Germany.

Rochefort's trial has been concluded, and he has been sentenced by the courtmartial to transportation to the penal colony for life.

LONDON, Sept. 24.—The Congress of the International adjourned after arranging for movements in Germany, Italy and Spain.

The Wigan mines are still burning, with frequent explosions.

There is a heavy gale in the channel. No disasters are reported.

LONDON, Sept. 25.—A steamer was wrecked on the coast of India and one hundred and thirty-eight natives lost.

Four thousand additional Spanish troops will be sent to Cuba by the first of October.

DOMESTIC.

OMAHA, Sept. 20.—The new constitution has been heavily defeated. The women's suffrage clause, which was submitted separately, was also disastrously defeated.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22.—The following are the sub-committee appointed by the full Kn-Klux Committee to take testimony in Alabama, Mississippi and Tennessee:

Senators Pratt, Rics and Bayard; Representatives Buckley and Robinson.

For North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Florida: Maynard, Schofield, Lansing, Voorhies and Senator Blair.

In case of the refusal of the authorities to furnish information relating to the finances, taxation, etc., of the States, a sub-committee of three is authorized to go to the States and obtain it by such means as they deem advisable.

Governor Alcorn, of Mississippi, is here. He goes to New York to-night. Alcorn will resign the governorship and take a seat in the Senate at the next session.

Three thousand Knights Templars were in procession to-day at Baltimore. Not a single untoward incident occurred.

The War Department forbids the use of spring wagons except in emergencies.

CHARLESTON, Sept. 22.—Eight fever deaths in the last twenty-four hours. There has been no spread of the disease corresponding with the increased mortality, which is attributed to the influence of the cool weather of Thursday upon the sick.

CHICAGO, Sept. 22.—The Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows of the United States have adopted an amendment to their constitution, confining the privilege of the order to free white men.

SALT LAKE CITY, Sept. 22.—The Mormon Adjutant General of militia has bought from the United States ten thousand stand of arms and one hundred and fifty thousand cartridges.

It is rumored that the grand jury will indict several members of the Mormon priesthood, including Brigham Young, for adultery.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 23.—The three story brick iron front block on the south side of Market street, opposite Samsom street, is in flames and will be totally destroyed. It contains eight stores, seven of which are occupied as wholesale. The loss will not be less than one million dollars.

NEW YORK, Sept. 24.—A meeting of the workingmen last night decided on a general strike in most of the trades throughout the United States and Canada, early next spring, and measures were adopted for a permanent organization to render it successful.

NATCHEZ, Sept. 24.—Twenty cases and eleven deaths from yellow fever are reported to the Board of Health since it originated. One death and two new cases to-day. Eight cases are reported this afternoon at Vidalia, Louisiana, opposite Natchez, a place of eight hundred inhabitants.

VICKSBURG, Sept. 24.—There is yellow fever here, with five deaths in the last twenty-four hours. There were several new cases to-day.

MEMPHIS, Sept. 24.—Private dispatches from Vicksburg and Jackson report twelve new cases yellow fever in each place.

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 24.—Three fatal cases of yellow fever here in the last twenty-four hours. Several new cases are reported under treatment this afternoon.

NEW YORK, Sept. 25.—A special dispatch from Havana states that the Eastern part of the Island of Cuba, which comprise the insurrectionary districts, is completely pacified—the principal leaders with their followers having either surrendered or been captured. A proclamation by the Captain General, declaring the insurrection at an end, will shortly appear.

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 26.—The existence of yellow fever here is denied by the medical faculty. There are positively but sixteen cases of illness from all causes in the city to-day. Seven persons have died during the past four days; four Saturday, two on Sunday and one yesterday. About twelve persons have been affected with a severe type of malarious fever during the past ten days, but yellow fever nurses and physicians deny the existence of yellow fever.

NOTE.—The above is authentic, after a searching investigation by the medical men.

VICKSBURG, Sept. 26.—One death from yellow fever, and three new cases in the past twenty-four hours.

CHARLESTON, Sept. 26.—There have been five deaths from yellow fever in the past twenty-four hours.

HEALTH OF NATCHEZ.—From the sexton's reports published in full for the two weeks ending Wednesday, September 21, it will be seen that no deaths from yellow fever have been reported in the city since Monday last, and that only three deaths from that disease have been reported altogether. There are still seven or eight persons sick Under-the-Hill, whose physicians pronounce them to have yellow fever, and there are some six or seven cases, as far as we can learn, so pronounced on the hill. The physicians say the yellow fever is spreading very little, if at all, and most of them express no apprehensions of its becoming serious. That the type of the disease is, so far, very mild is evident from the fact that only three deaths have occurred from it in the city, and nearly all the patients are now convalescing. As for the whole number of persons now sick from all causes, we feel assured that it is smaller than usual at this season of the year. So far we can see no good cause for alarm, and what little apprehension was at first produced is perceptibly subsiding.—Democrat, September 23.

EXPLOSION AT THE ICE WORKS.—The vase absorption in the Louisiana Ice Works, corner of Tchoupitoulas and Delachaise streets, exploded about nine o'clock last night, and the accident fractured the left leg of a young man named John Hart, one of the employes of the establishment. He was taken to his residence, corner of Water and Amelia streets, where the broken limb was adjusted and the wound dressed by Dr. Chambers, who pronounced his condition as exceedingly precarious, from the fact that he had also inhaled a large quantity of ammonia.

Several other workmen near by the injured works were also slightly injured by the inhalations.

The injury done to the Ice Works is estimated to be about three thousand dollars.—Picayune, Sept. 21.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Covington, Louisiana Conference.

MR. EDITOR: "After more than an Ahab's drouth, the Lord has sent us a refreshing spiritual shower." With the assistance of Bro. G. T. Vickers, I have built and organized one new church, received about sixty-five new members, fifty or more were baptized, organized four Sunday schools, and some twenty persons have professed religion. We have just closed a protracted meeting at Covington, assisted by Bros. T. B. White, of New Orleans, and George T. Vickers, during which twelve professed religion, and many of the members were revived. There are still many persons under serious impressions, and, I hope, before the conference year is over, many more may be brought to the Lord. All praise, power and glory be under Him, who said: "I will be with you, even unto the end of the word." H. R. SINGLETON.

Webberville Circuit, Texas Conference.

MR. EDITOR: Some good news from the Lone Star State may, perhaps, interest your readers. We began a meeting in Webberville on the eighth of July and continued it one month, lacking a day. This place has been notorious for wickedness for years, and two successive overflows of the Colorado, on which it stands; and other causes had so decreased the population that the three churches here, altogether, Methodist, Presbyterian and Baptist, hardly made a respectable church as to the numbers. Most of the families living in the town and vicinity were Baptist or Baptist inclined. We had but two members in town, both ladies. At the close of the first week only two conversions; yet we were encouraged to go on, the interest gradually increased, forty or fifty mourners sometimes at the altar; conversions were multiplied daily. The members of the different churches became more and more interested, as their children and loved ones came to the altar and sought and found peace in believing. Many, who had wandered far from God and the church, were reclaimed and again declared that God had power on earth to forgive sins. A divine influence seemed to pervade the whole community. The congregations were large and serious. The morning prayer meetings were seasons of great refreshing to the members and young converts. Many, who had never spoken in public before, arose and testified to what God had done for their souls. The "former days" seemed to have returned, and "sons and daughters did, indeed, prophesy." O how refreshing to see so many young converts get up before deeply interested congregations, and with deep emotion say: "I love Jesus;" "my soul is full of love to God and his people;" "God for Christ's sake has pardoned my sins;" "I came to this meeting a few days ago a miserable sinner, and now my sins are all forgiven." These are some of the many expressions uttered on these occasions. The meeting resulted in the conversion of about one hundred and twenty, and since that a sacramental meeting of the Presbyterians, lasting several days, resulted in the conversion of fifteen more, making in all one hundred and thirty-five. That was a meeting of great power, stirring the heart of the whole church. Forty-six have joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South; a few more the Baptists and a small number the Presbyterians. The meeting, though under our charge, was distinguished by union and perfect harmony. A young men's prayer meeting is held once a week, and nearly all pray and speak in public. On Wednesday and Sabbath nights a general prayer meeting is held and well attended; and, would you believe it, on Thursday night, at a little boy's prayer meeting, led by an experienced brother, some twelve to fifteen little ones from nine to thirteen years old prayed. On Friday evening, at five o'clock, a female prayer meeting was held. Thus we hope to train these lambs of the flock, and hereafter make them pillars in the church of God. We also held a nine days' meeting at Colorado chapel, closing it Sunday, August 20. This was a good and profitable meeting to the little church there. Six were converted, and three joined.

We closed a protracted camp meeting, held on the head waters of Sandy, in Bastrop county, September 7. Twenty-seven were converted and twenty-five joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

L. ERCANBRACK, P. C.

Camp Meeting—Vaiden Circuit, North Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: Last week, I sent you an account of a village camp meeting at Black Hawk. Now, I send you, and through you the church, good tidings of a country camp meeting, which we closed this morning at Enon, ten miles east of Black Hawk, on the Vaiden circuit. Bro. T. C. Parish, the preacher in charge, seconded by a noble band of brethren, on short notice, put things in good order, arbor, tents, etc., for a camp meeting, which was intended to be on the self-sustaining plan of each one providing for himself and his family, but the multitude came as of old, and crowded the tents and tables of the generous tenters and enjoyed an old fashioned camp meeting. The tenters' hospitality was equal to the emergency, and not one of them complained, but I was sorry to see any departure from our plan of self-sustaining camp meetings. Our meetings are so much blessed, that I do not want them to fail under their own weight, as they must do, if a few must entertain the multitude.

The meeting resulted well. The church was greatly refreshed; backsliders reclaimed; forty-five added to the church, and as many or more converted. The best order observed by all classes. We have had three camp meetings already on the Yazoo district, all glorious in their results, and we have had no rules of order, no police, and nothing but the very best order. I never saw the people so eager for the word. The demand is far beyond the supply. I have three more camp meetings in the next three weeks. We ascribe all to the glory to God.

Yours in Christ, W. P. BARTON.

Rev. H. J. Harris, writing of Scotland Chapel circuit, Mississippi Conference, says: "We have been favored with a glorious 'season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord' at Scotland Chapel, Neshoba county, Mississippi. I began a meeting at this church on Saturday, the twelfth instant, which lasted until the following Sabbath week. The result was an addition of forty-eight members to the church by letter and otherwise. Among these there were many souls newly born to God. Some who had 'gone back' were reclaimed. Five of the number were formerly connected with the Baptist church. The fruits of this blessed work are such as I trust, under God, will be of value to the church. I was assisted at the meeting by Bro. John A. Vance, of Lake circuit, and Bros. W. A. Ray, William Dominick and Harrison Hays, of the local ministry. The venerable John G. Dorkin, a superannuated preacher, cheered us by his presence and helped with his prayers. To God be all the glory."

Rev. D. W. Dillehay, of the Mississippi Conference, writing from Fannin, Mississippi, September 18, says: "It may not be amiss to state for the encouragement of the church generally, that we have just closed an unusually interesting, protracted meeting of ten days, in Fannin. God has graciously manifested His saving power in converting about twenty-five persons, and reviving His work. Seventeen were added to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in this place. Other branches of His kingdom are increased in interest and number."

A CORRECTION.

[We cheerfully give the subjoined note from "Rector" a place in our columns, omitting only the concluding paragraph, which is not material to the matter in dispute.—ED.]

MR. EDITOR: A communication headed "Temperance and its Enemies," which appeared in your issue of September 7, merits the description given to certain historical tales. It is "fiction founded on fact."

The writer having spoken of an organization, which he says was instituted as a "burlesque," and having held up to reproach some persons whom he supposes to be concerned in it, continues:

"This all to oppose an infant council of friends of temperance, who already had taken hold of some of the worst drunkards, and reformed them. These men are encouraged by the bishop and rector, who refuse to announce from their pulpit an appointment for a temperance meeting, with the declaration that they are opposed to the institution, and assigning as a reason that they or he (the rector) would have his morning wine or egg-nog before preaching."

In regard to the first part of this quotation from that article, there are a good many persons here who would like to know who are these "worst drunkards" that have been reformed. As to the part wherein "the bishop and rector" are coupled together, "the rector" begs to say, most emphatically, that he, alone, is responsible for the action charged upon both. How your correspondent came to charge "the rector's" sin upon "the bishop" I cannot imagine, inasmuch as the occurrence took place when the bishop was not present. I am also at a loss to know how "these men" were encouraged by the bishop, as I doubt if he ever heard of their society. In regard to "the rector's" own part in the matter, I have just this to say: He did not "refuse to announce an appointment for a temperance meeting." But, inasmuch as this meeting was to be on Sunday, "the rector" remarked that he did not approve of such meetings on that day, and, therefore, if he read the notice, he would have to notify his congregation that such was the case; otherwise, they would suppose that he did not object to the meeting. The party presenting the notice then withdrew it. In conversation immediately afterward, "the rector" stated that he was opposed to the principles upon which he understood the so-called temperance society to work; but he did not give any such reason as that charged by your correspondent. He did state that he sometimes drank wine at dinner, and that at certain times, when he was affected with hoarseness, he had found an egg-nogg very beneficial, if taken a half-hour or so before service; but he did not give that as "a reason" for his opposition to the institution, or for refusing to read the notice. This, Mr. Editor, is a true statement of the case. Respectfully, "RECTOR."

SUMMIT, MISS., Sept. 13, 1871.

REV. THOMAS CLINTON, of the Mississippi Conference, writes us that the wife of Rev. J. D. Willis died on the thirteenth instant, and "went to the home of the good." Speaking of himself, Bro. Clinton says: "In 1819, I began to preach, and was sent a missionary to the Mississippi Conference, from Charleston, South Carolina, January, 1820. I am now too feeble to do any labor to advantage. Still I will try."

A WISE TEMPERANCE LAW.

The State of Ohio has probably the best law that has yet been tried in this country, to restrain the sale of intoxicating beverages. Prohibitory laws have failed; the seller and buyer unite in evading their provisions. Licenses laws scarcely check the evil, but rather foster and encourage it. But the law which makes the liquor dealer responsible for all the evil he may do is thus far working admirably. It is thus described by an exchange:

"The law of the State of Ohio gives to the wife an action of damages for liquor sold to her husband; to the husband for damages for liquor sold to the wife; to the children for liquor sold to their parents, and to parents for liquor sold to their children. Judgments in these cases are a lien, not only against the property of the vendor, but upon the premises where the liquor is sold, no matter by whom owned.

"This law has been vigorously prosecuted in many counties, and the selling of liquor in saloons has, in many places, been broken up. The plaintiffs never have any difficulty in getting the verdict, because popular feeling is always against the saloon keeper. It is, as a measure of temperance, much more efficacious than a prohibitory law. It operates directly upon saloons. Under a prohibitory law, liquor continues to be sold, the purchaser being an accomplice of the seller, and public opinion being generally opposed to the law. But in this case public opinion is opposed to the saloons; they are looked upon as a perpetual inducement for men to become loafers and idlers; and men drink five times in a saloon to the once they would drink at home."—Observer and Commonwealth.

ILLINOIS CONFERENCE.—Dr. McFerrin reached home, September 12, from his Western tour, in which he visited the Illinois Conference, which convened at Ashley, September 6. He says: Bishop Kavanaugh was present, in good health, and presided in his usual pleasant manner. The attendance of preachers and laymen was full, and a vast number of visitors was present. The multitudes waiting upon the ministry of the word were great—all the churches in the town were filled to overflowing. On Sunday the whole town and country around about assembled in a grove, where a stand and seats were prepared, and where, for nearly two hours, they listened to one of Bishop Kavanaugh's moving discourses. It was wonderful to see a man, in his seventieth year, hold an immense congregation spell-bound, preaching against a strong wind blowing from the prairie. The Lord was present to own his word and to move the hearts of the people; many a soul bounded with joy, and many a sinner resolved to amend his life. In the afternoon and night all the churches in the town were filled, and a good work of grace commenced. The meeting was continued, under the direction of Bro. Garrett, formerly of the Memphis Conference. There was a good work of grace in many portions of the Conference during the past year, and a net increase of some six hundred members.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

THE DEATH OF THE REV. JOHN MORROW, an old and highly esteemed local preacher, of Nashville, is announced as having taken place at his residence in Edgefield, recently, after long illness. After notice of his early life and prosperous secular business, the Union and American says: "He was licensed as a preacher in the Methodist Church about 1810, and was ordained as a deacon November 3, 1844. In his early days he filled regular appointments throughout the country as a local preacher. For thirty years he was a member of McKendree church, and sixteen years superintendent of the Sunday school. His connection with the McKendree church ceased when he became a member of Tulip Street church in Edgefield, and devoted himself to the building up of that church. He lived as a Christian throughout a long life, and died triumphantly in the hope of a blessed immortality."

INTERESTING TO COTTON PLANTERS. Mr. William Lawton, of Charleston, now in England, writes to a friend, in Barnwell, South Carolina, as follows: "If our crop of cotton falls below 3,500,000 bales, high prices will surely rule the coming season, but it must not be pressed too freely on sale. The consumption is very large, and spinners fully employed. I know of one firm of sea island spinners who are clearing £4000 per week at their mills.

"In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you." JOHN XIV, 2.

O! what a thought! how full of hope!
Where mind may rest secure from fear—
Giving the finite ample scope
Beyond this changing atmosphere—
In Christ, the Beautiful and True!
Will bring eternal life in new.

Feeble the light of reason's ray,
To lead us to that dwelling-place,
And cold philosophy's display
Beyond this world no path can trace.
One! only One! the Infinite!
Through Jesus, leads the soul aright.

He is our guiding star on earth,
However dark our lonely way,
The Angel of our spirit's birth—
Fringing each cloud with golden ray;
Opening the portals of the tomb,
Disrobing death of all its gloom.

Riches of grace surpasses far
The honors gained by wealth or fame;
The halo of the morning star
Shines brighter than the hero's name;
The laure's which adorn him now
Wither before the sainted brow.

Friendship, how sweet to those who feel
The power of truth divinely given;
Immortal pleasures to reveal,
Which makes the fellowship of Heaven—
Where no rude touch or jarring string
Shall to the ear a discord bring.

FIELD FLOWERS.

BY J. E. BENDALL.

It was a morning brightly fair,
So balmily and so freshly strong,
Joy seemed to fill the very air,
And every bird had found a song;
While fields, and flowers, and sunny sky
Shared in the living ecstasy.

The farmer stood among his fields,
The dew-drop shone on stalk and spray,
And thought of what the crops would yield,
The wheat, the barley, and the hay.
But did he see the field flowers fair,
That bloomed so brightly everywhere?

The corn-flower, and the speedwell blue,
The pimpernel and poppy gay?
Ah! yes, he spied them, as they grew
In every field and grass-grown way;
And vexed was he—to him indeed
A flower was nothing but a weed.

Said he: "The seed was good, I know,
That has been scattered far and wide,
Yet now the grain begins to grow
The hurtful weeds spring side by side;
Some enemy at dusk or morn
Surely has sown them 'mid the corn!"

While thus the farmer musing stood,
His little daughter, happy child!
Ran to and fro in merry mood,
Seeming with pleasure fairly wild;
To her such wonderful delight
Was every flower that met her sight.

In eager haste, with hands so small
She gathers, but above the rest,
Although she loves them one and all,
She likes the scarlet ones the best.
The poppies please the children so,
Perhaps 'tis just for them to grow.

Then laden with her treasures sweet
She ran up to her father's side,
As still he stood among the wheat;
And thus the little maiden cried:
"Dear father, see! what lovely flowers
God has sent in these fields of ours!"

Building of the Tower of Babel.

[From the German of the "Evangelical Apologist."]

The arrogance of the immediate descendants of Noah characterizes all nations of all times. It is designed, without God, to rear a tower whose pinnacle shall reach unto heaven; without the Bible, without Christianity, to reform our social life, to create a superior civilization. But as of yore, so even now, the presumptuous architects come to grief. Well says Schiller, having reference to the atheistic philanthropists of his day:

"For years they've poured into the sieve
And hatched on the rocks;
But the rocks are not warmed,
The sieve is not filled."

From Confucius down till yesterday—what then have the philosophizing apostles of morality accomplished for the well-being of mankind? Much they have talked, much they have written; after the order of charlatans, they have treated their fellows to their opinions by the pound; one taught this, another the opposite; one recommended practices which were anathematized by another; and, finally, they have accomplished nothing more than, according to the song of Cosmopolitan renown, Dr. Eisenbarth, accomplished—giving sight to the seeing. Inasmuch as they had no knowledge of the indwelling, inbred sinfulness of human nature—not taking a correct diagnosis of the existing evil—they could, of course, not devise the proper remedies.

How differently acts the "Physician of Gileath!" He does not attempt to sweeten the bitter waters of a river; but corrects the evil at the fountain-head. Neither does he fill old bottles with new wine; but goes to the source of the matter, gives, after godly sorrow, a new heart, and, behold! all things have become new. Says Christ: "The kingdom of heaven, i. e., the doctrine of salvation, through faith, is like unto leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened." Truly; as leaven, vivifies, raises, transforms and, so to speak, regenerates the meal, so operates Christianity upon the human family. What our infidel doctors of ethics would inculcate by their pedantic and bombastic mandates is intuitively accomplished by the true Christian, constrained by the love of Christ. As Schiller has it:

"What the depths of profundity cannot unfold,
Instinctively practices the child-like soul."

France was ever the hot-bed of the atheistic "benefactors" of mankind. It is a fact worthy of notice, that when a Frenchman turns in disgust from the tyranny of Catholicism, he does not embrace the Christianity of the Bible, but surrenders himself to naked materialism. He hastens from one to the other extreme, from superstition to infidelity. It is reported that even Pere Hyacinthe connives to the absurdities of communism; and, we venture the opinion, that his religious creed is principally made up of materialism. With these men, "mighty in words," the Bible is but a book of myths; Christianity a matter of science. That this spirit of negation can accomplish nothing but ruin, became manifest in Paris eighty years ago. After all religion was discarded, Robespierre and his colleagues soon became what all men, without Christianity, will become—hideous cannibals, fierce and demoniacal. During the last four months we have witnessed in this same modern Babylon similar scenes. Cheerfully they built on the tower of anti-Biblical civilization; social life was to be governed by atheistical principles; but, the confusion of tongues transpired, and ruin was inevitable.

It is well known that, in the year 1848, an attempt was made in Germany to rear a similar tower. It is an acknowledged fact that all the leading German revolutionists of that time were avowed infidels. They did revolt, not only against the political government, but also against the church, against the religion of the Bible. But what these infidel, though, perhaps, patriotic philosophers could not effect, because God was not in their programme, accomplished a pious king, namely, the rearing up of a united, mighty German empire. Every victory gained by the German forces was by King William I, now Emperor of Germany, attributed to divine interposition.

It may not be uninteresting to our readers to learn how some of the most celebrated builders of the "Babylonian tower" have fared, after their plans were frustrated. John Ronge, discarding the Roman Catholic Church, instead of embracing Protestantism, formed a few separate congregations, calling them German Catholics; whereas he, himself, soon after avowed himself a Rationalist, was, in 1849, elected representative to the German diet in Frankfort-on-the-Main, created great sensation as a radical politician, seduced, at the same time, another man's wife, hurriedly absconded, and perished miserably in London. David Strauss, though still living, fares not much better. Scarce had his "Leben Jesu," (Life of Christ)—a book in which the author attempts to prove that the Bible is a compilation of myths—scarce had this book appeared, and in the midst of the jubilee in the kingdom of atheistic erudition, he was unexpectedly forced to resign his position as professor of theology at the University of Jena; at the same time his wife, an actress, succeeded in a suit for divorce; he himself soon after became subject to misanthropy, and now barely vegetates in Weimar, scantily supporting himself by his literary labors. Though his friends have repeatedly interceded for him, not one of the various German universities has consented to engage his services. A.

LETTER FROM CHINA.

The following letter of Bro. Lambuth was written to the Sunday School at Bayou Sara:

SHANGHAI, CHINA, July 22, 1871.

Thomas Garnett, Esq., Superintendent Sunday School, Methodist Church, Bayou Sara:

MY DEAR BROTHER: I have never had the pleasure of knowing you or any of the dear young friends connected with the Sabbath school at Bayou Sara. It was through Bro. Montgomery, of the Mississippi Conference, that I heard of you and of what you had done for the cause of missions. I trust you will continue to manifest a deep interest in the work of the Lord among the heathen. It is through this, your sympathy for the work in which we are engaged, that our hearts are cheered and encouraged. We are laboring among a people who are very superstitious, and in all their thoughts and actions are opposed to anything which has any approach to purity of heart. To live a life of purity does not enter their minds, and to love their neighbors as themselves they think an impossibility. Many of them think the doctrine of our Saviour too pure for men to embrace and observe. They laugh at the idea of a place called heaven, which can contain all the people who go to it. All, without an exception, believe they must first go to hell, and there be punished by the chief of devils (Nelu is his name) or some of his subordinate devils, who receive their power from him. But we have found some upon whom the spirit of God has been working, and they not only believe in the power and goodness of God, but they rejoice in the blessed plan of salvation whereby a sinful world is redeemed and saved from eternal death. These, of course, profess faith in Christ, and are made happy in him and have a good hope of eternal rest among the people of God. But the heathen worship idols, the work of their own hands. They worship the very devils they fear and dread, and, indeed, it is because they fear and dread them that they fall down and offer homage to them. There is no god among all the heathen that they worship simply because they love them, but they dread the consequences of not worshiping them in this life. In order to save themselves any great punishment in hell they will be profuse in their praises to certain demons while on earth, that their favor may be secured by this acknowledgment of their power, and, consequently, a lighter punishment.

This is exactly what is done in China by the people to the officers of the government. What these people do to gain the favor of the gods and demons of the world of darkness, and what they do in this world to living men who hold the position of officials, is an exact counterpart. Just as they have been taught to bribe the officials here, so they are led to believe the same can be done in reference to a world to come. We are trying to teach them a better way, and we trust that, through the blessing of God, some good has already been accomplished. The way is being prepared for the entrance of the gospel of our Savior among these people, and we have been permitted to see some who are willing to stand up among their own people and testify of the goodness and love of God to them. I send you photographs of the orphan boys and girls' schoolhouses. I will also send you some of our Sunday school papers. I shall be glad to get any story for the paper from any one of the schools, to be translated. I shall be glad to hear from any of you.

I remain your brother in Christ,

J. W. LAMBUTH.

AN EDUCATED MINISTRY.

MR. EDITOR: "I am not mad, most noble Festus; but speak forth the words of truth and soberness." "Much learning will never have this effect on—well—'J. T.'" As multum in parvo is my motto, "Julius T. C." can read this, "not hastily," "without desiring to bring himself into notice."

I am not the opponent of education, especially in the ministry. Such an anomaly I never heard of. Its necessity is felt and acknowledged in proportion to the position filled. The Christian ministry is the highest position on earth. I maintain, however, that it is not now, never was, never will be sine qua non in a successful preacher; if so, the inspired word would not have said: "Not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called; but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen; yea, and things which are not, to bring to naught things that are: That no flesh should glory in his presence."

With regard to the unlettered Englishman spoken of by Dr. Winans, "J. T. C." assumes that he was an "idiot," "and that God did not call him to preach." How does he know? All unlettered men are neither "idiots nor fools;" but many of them have "mind and energy, study hard and educate themselves." I agree, when you say, there have been very illiterate men called to preach, and they have done immense good. That is all Dr. Winans said or meant in regard to the Englishman. Sir, you have no right to judge who the Spirit "calls to the ministry, and then dictate their action; for you do say of unlettered men, although soundly converted and called by the Spirit of God: "Not to be in a hurry to thrust themselves out;" "if they could have been educated" "how much easier and sooner," etc. Ergo, you could make a better selection, dictate a better course. I think the young man mistaken. A long time ago, one said: "I am not eloquent;" but he went and was accredited; and thousands since have gone out, because the Master said: "I will be with you." Perhaps you "would like to know what the man means." Just what I say. "Not what you say." I "intimate" you claim the spirit of prophecy when you say "the time is coming." I am not informed in that way on the point. I agree, also, when you say that if you were heard on my circuit, "water would still flow as it does." But look at your argument, for "out of thine own mouth will I judge thee." First—You say the Englishman was not called. Second—You believe in a sound, sensible conversion, then in a sensible impression that "woe is me," etc., and then let him tarry at school until he is mentally qualified to distinguish B from a bull's foot. Therefore, God may call an "idiot or a fool." But you are only a young man. "Study to show thyself approved unto God. A workman that thou needeth not to be ashamed."

I am J. J. C.,

AN ITINERANT PREACHER.

"MINISTERIAL SUPPORT."

MR. EDITOR: The above is the heading of an article in the ADVOCATE of the thirty-first ultimo. The article purports to have been written by an "itinerant" of something "over twelve years" experience. The theme is one upon which more has been said and written, perhaps, than almost any other that has been discussed in our pulpits and by the Methodist press. The ministry and the laity in council, by letters, and in almost every way, have sought a remedy for the evil of which your correspondent complains. I have had an experience of more than twice "twelve years" in the itinerant ministry. I have had almost every appointment known to the regular work, except that of bishop. I have preached to Indians, negroes and white people. I have been missionary, stationed preacher, circuit preacher and presiding elder. I am "growing old" now. My wife is "growing old," and we are both becoming infirm and ill-able to endure the changes and hardships of itinerant life. I have traveled over almost the entire territory of my Conference. I have had to teach school sometimes. Sometimes I have plowed in the field; then I have worked as a common laborer, and at a trade learned when I was a boy. Necessity, I felt, demanded these things of me. God gave me more than three times as many children as the brother who writes you after "over twelve years" experience. He has spared them all; most of them are grown and they are scattered abroad. Although I have labored to build up schools and colleges, not one of my children has ever been permitted to graduate at any. Indeed, they have never, but in one instance, failed to pay tuition at Methodist schools. Their education has cost me hundreds of dollars, and yet it has never been complete.

Two or three times in my ministerial life I thought I was settled—my family at least; but then my expectation was disappointed, and to move seemed invitable. Still I am "on the wing." I can sing with my brethren:

"Not one of land do I possess," etc.

In all the years of my itinerant life I have not received an adequate support from the church for three years of the time, I am confident. Often, indeed, has the question recurred with me: "Wife, what shall we do?" Wife has as often replied: "You must not locate."

But now, I ask, what is to be done? In vain you point us to men who have been as long, and some of them longer, in the ministry, and are now unembarrassed and comfortable. Some may say: "You that are 'falling behind' every year are wanting in economy; your families are extravagant; to say the least, improvident." There may be some truth in this, but as a general rule it does not hold good. And you will find that the large majority of truly itinerant preachers are in the same case with your correspondent of the date given, and the writer of this. Is there no remedy? If not, our system is defective, and should be improved; or, there is a want of piety among us that must be supplied in some way to excite liberality. I feel a great deal more on this subject than I will venture to express.

Now, after a life time—from my very boyhood given to the ministry—I feel compelled to retire, disappointed of the hopes cherished that in the "sear and yellow leaf of life" I would have home and comfortable shelter for dear wife and myself. But I have no complaint against the Great Master. On the contrary, I bless his holy name for unnumbered mercies. I have many things to regret, but not of sacrifice or suffering for Christ's sake. Had I a thousand lives to give, "Lord, they should all be thine." But I have well nigh reached the "length of my tether!" May God give to my brethren grace to endure more, if need be, than I have suffered, and give me grace to live holy, die happy, and get to heaven for Christ's sake.

"ITINERANT," Senior.

Reflections Growing Out of What I Saw.

MR. EDITOR: To one who looks at the true state of man, and connects the condition in which he is found with the meagerness of the supply demanded by his needs, there comes a profound sadness. This sadness, however, admits of two classifications: One, growing out of man's unwillingness to make a wise use of the means calculated to elevate and eternally save him; the other, springing from the fact that large communities are found, reaching out after the means competent to release them from the bondage of sin—and reach in vain.

In some recent explorations this latter class were met with, and the question arose: "Why is it that the church, the sacred organ, through which Christ and eternal life is offered to a perishing world, does not hear and heed the Macedonian cry as it comes up from the valley and the hilltop? Here was opened at once a wide field for the mind to range over, and many cogent reasons were presented, covering the whole ground. But as suggestion, rather than analysis, is the object now proposed, the facts being given, it is desired that men of more experience solve the problem. Let this thought be taken up at the beginning of the investigation: Why does the church concentrate in great centers and bring to bear so much of her power upon some one point within a given area? Is it because the tendency of human society is congregational, seeking crowded cities; or, is there some providential design in this herding of the world and the followers of Christ? If it arise from the example of the world, it were wise to pause before going too far, lest the power of the gospel be expended at the center, and every creature get not his part. If it be providential, let us patiently work on until a fuller revelation of God's purpose be shown.

Having a sure testimony, however, and being somewhat antiquated, we come back to the point and ask: How can the church, in the persons of her ministry, neglect the prime, authoritative command of her King, and give time, talent and energy to minor things, savoring largely of the things of the world; such as seeking prepared fields, the cultivation of the human family, position and a modest share of worldly applause, to the neglecting of the poor, the maimed, the halt and blind? Again: Why is it that a large area of this State is almost as much in need of preachers as the isles of the ocean, and why are people left to grope their way to eternity in darkness? Can the elders answer. Can the young men, covered with the dew of life, and free from the sufferings which age brings, those whose hearts are moved to pray, claim the word of life; those who lag in the multitudinous trains which crowd the great towns and spend the flower of their days in spasmodic efforts, answer this question before the Judge of all? Can the church at large, in view of her vows, and the vast outlay of love expended in her behalf, suffer thousands to perish at her door, and look forward to a judgment complacently?

Such were some of the thoughts presented to the mind during a ride through the grand forest. Did they breed from the deep silence around, or were they the offspring of the soft breeze, chiming the sweetest melody through the branches of the hoary monarchs by the road side? Reader, not so! There had been heard a voice of lamentation from many a hamlet; there had been seen destitution in the extreme for the word of life, and the blasting effects of neglect were visible on every hand; and to all this, add imploring entreaties for help; and the thoughts and questions above were the native births of these.

Shall immortal beings send forth an appeal for the "bread of life," and that appeal fall upon the hearts of God's children and make no impression. Shall it be that the organic body of the church will pass by in silence this shout of life, and suffer her garments to become soiled with the life's blood of those bought with a great price?

It is hoped that those who may assemble in council, at the end of this year, will take this matter to heart, and devise good things for this and other waste places; and such as may have knowledge of good men, will at once open a correspondence to secure messengers of life for this too long neglected people.

Men of deep piety, true zeal, apt to teach and willing to trust God, are the men needed.

The simple gospel, and not refined speculation, is what God will bless to the saving of men. It is the only POWER he recognizes, and they who have felt this power acting upon and in their own hearts are the men for the times and the people.

With room for forty appointments, a people willing and anxious to hear and ready to contribute, will not the brethren seriously, prayerfully and steadily keep this matter before them until the meeting of Conference.

INDAMORA.

LAKE CHARLES, August 15, 1871.

A ROMISH PRIEST was called as a witness in court a few days ago in England, and refused to answer when asked what the prisoner had stated to him at the confessional. The court informed him that the law recognized no such right of his to conceal a crime if it had been divulged to him, and, unless he answered, he would be committed for contempt. The question was withdrawn by the counsel, and so the conflict prevented. When the priest was asked if he would refuse to expose a murderer who confessed to him, he declined to say what he would do. This certainly shows the relations between the confessional and crime. A criminal goes to the priest, confesses, gets absolution by paying for it, and the priest shields him by silence from the claims of justice. And this is called religion!

REAL happiness is cheap enough, yet how dearly are we in the habit of paying for its counterfeit.

NO PERSON ever got stung by hornets who kept away from where they were. It is just so with bad habits.
